Were sepulchred deans and entombed cathedral organists to revisit the scenes of their former labours, they would rub their eyes on beholding the changed condition of things as compared with their easy-going administrations. St. Paul's would furnish a remarkable example, where, fifty years ago, "Tuppence, please," was the verger-uttered demand through the crack of the door that greeted any visitor wishing to enter the cathedral when Divine service was not being held. In regard to more musical matters—and nowhere has there been a greater revolution in this respect than at the mother church of the Metropolis—we may turn to Gloucester Cathedral. Soon after Dr. C. H. Lloyd was appointed organist (in succession to Dr. S. S. Wesley) he instituted special musical services in the nave of the Cathedral and organised a volunteer choir of ninety voices for that purpose. On these occasions selections from the well known oratorios were sung. These services took the form approaching to an ordinary service and always included a sermon. But under the organistship of Mr. C. Lee Williams, Dr. Lloyd's successor, their more strictly musical features, especially the instrumental portion, became more prominent. The service proper was thereupon greatly reduced, and these music-makings assumed their present character. Thus the good seed sown by Dr. Lloyd and Mr. Lee Williams is bearing excellent fruit under the fostering care of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, the present organist.

"A Free Recital of Sacred Music," as it is designated, is given on a Thursday evening in every month from November to April inclusive. These interesting Recitals are attended by congregations approaching four thousand people, who come in from the neighbouring towns of Stroud, Cheltenham, Tewkesbury, and other places for miles round, many driving into the city in all kinds of vehicles, from the farmer's jolting cart to the smart "turn out" of the county folk. In sending some particulars, at our request, of these music-makings of sacred song, Mr. Brewer writes:—

> "'The Free Recitals of Sacred Music,' as they are advertised, are essentially for the people, and I can assure you they appreciate what is done for them. I endeavour to give the people good, simple music from the oratorios which they can easily follow and understand. Short and simple pieces of this nature never seem to weary the listeners. The chorus consists of members of the societies which I conduct here—the Festival Class, the Choral and the Orpheus societies. As a rule, I am able to get two professional soloists from London or elsewhere; these, in addition to the chorus, kindly give their services. There is a rehearsal for the soloists on the same day as the recital, at 4.45, after the evening service, and for the chorus at 7 the same evening, in the Chapter House. What is now known as 'the hidden quartet' has become more or less an institution at the recitals—viz., four voices singing a chorale, or short anthem, at the extreme end of the cathedral. The effect is undeniably very beautiful and much appreciated by the attentive listeners who fill the nave. Two congregational hymns are included in each programme. The people enjoy singing them, and the effect is excellent, even sometimes dramatic, when a good, solid, popular tune is chosen. The recital lasts exactly one hour. I must not omit to add that the Dean and Chapter give me their heartiest support, the Dean being particularly enthusiastic over the recitals."

We give the programme of the last recital of the season:—

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

Prayer—Prevent us, O Lord. Our Father, which art in heaven.

1. Organ Solo—"Andante con moto" (C minor Symphony) Beethoven.
2. Solo—"Love not the world" ("Prodigal Son") Sullivan.
3. Hymn, No. 250 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern").
4. Organ Solo—Variations on the chorale St. Antoni—Haydn Brahms.
5. Solo and Chorus {"He was despised" / "Behold the Lamb of God"} ("Messiah") Handel.
6. Air—"For my soul thirsteth for God" (Psalm xlii.) Mendelssohn.
7. Quartett—"God is a Spirit" ("Woman of Samaria") Sterndale Bennett.
8. Solo and Chorus {"The sorrows of death" / "The night is departing"} ("Hymn of Praise") Mendelssohn.
9. Hymn, No. 111 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern").

Prayer. The Blessing.

Concluding Voluntary—Prelude and Fugue in C .. .. Bach.

H. D. M. Spence, Dean.
April 5, 1900 (135th Recital). A. Herbert Brewer, Organist.

The Hymns are chosen for congregational singing, and all present are requested to join in the melody in unison.

Such a ministry of sacred song, and noble use to which a stately fane can be put, need no eulogy. We should indeed be glad to hear that other cathedrals besides Gloucester were as actively engaged in a work so worthy, of such high privilege, and so full of encouragement to all who are privileged to share in its achievement.

LENTEN SERVICES.

Year by year these solemnities show a gratifying increase. The premier place in a necessarily brief record must be given to St. Paul's Cathedral, where, on Tuesday in Holy Week (the 10th ult.), Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion was accorded its annual devotional rendering. For twenty-seven years have the grand old Cantor's strains been heard every Lent in St. Paul's, and each repetition only serves to heighten the beauty of that wonderful creation. From a coign of vantage high up in the gallery above the South door—said by Sir John Stainer to be the best place for hearing the music in the Cathedral—it was a very impressive sight to look down upon the great congregation and the white-robed singers and players upon instruments all reverently assembled together to participate in a feast of holy song. As on all previous occasions, no pains seem to have been spared to give the work a rendering worthy of its greatness and purport, and Sir George Martin, upon whose shoulders falls the whole of the preparation, has again to be congratulated upon a complete success. Mr. Charles Macpherson, who was at the organ, played as introductory voluntaries Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Rachmaninoff's Prelude, and the Introduction to Haydn's "Passion." The last-named, appropriately introduced by Sir George Martin many years ago during his sub-organist period, has now become one of the traditions of a service that must be ranked as the service of the year in our Metropolitan Cathedral.

From a number of service papers to hand of Lenten services, we select the following, several others being noticed by "our own correspondents" under their respective localities:—

St. Asaph Cathedral, Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, with orchestra (Dr. Archibald W. Wilson, organist); Bradfield College Chapel, "Service of sacred song," selected from the works of Mendelssohn—Psalms 13 and 43, Organ Sonata, No. 3, and Prelude and Fugue, No. 2 (Messrs. Abdy Williams and A. J. F. Wood, organists); Hampstead Parish Church, Spohr's "Calvary" and Gounod's "Come near to the Cross" (Mr. George Aitken, organist); St. Stephen's, Guernsey, Gounod's "Redemption" (Mr. J. Matthews, organist); St. Jude's, Bethnal Green, Stainer's "Crucifixion" and Maunder's "Penitence, Pardon and Peace" (Mr. H. W. Reeves, organist); St. John's Parish Church, Cardiff, Lee Williams's "Gethsemane," with orchestra (Mr. G. H. Cole, organist); St. Clement's, Ilford, Haydn's "Passion," by the Ilford Philharmonic Society (Mr. Alfred H. Allen, organist); St. James's, Colchester, Rossini's "Stabat Mater" (Mr. Charles Wood, organist); Christ Church, Dover, Mr. H. J. Taylor's "The Last Supper" (Mr. H. J. Taylor, organist); St. Mary Magdalene, Taunton, Ferris Tozer's "The way of the Cross" and Stainer's "Crucifixion" (Mr. Harold E. Jeboult, organist); Emmanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells, Passion Music from "The Messiah"; Hollinshed Street Congregational Church, Chorley, Stainer's "Crucifixion" (Mr. J. L. Milnes, organist); St. Andrew's, Ashley Place, Brahms's "Requiem" (Mr. Edward Wyatt, organist); Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, "Messiah" (Mr. J. R. Griffiths, organist); Gravesend Parish Church, Stainer's "Crucifixion" (Mr. Howard Moss, organist); All Saints' Church, Hatcham Park, Stainer's "Crucifixion" (Mr. W. C. T. Couch, organist); Caius College Mission Church, Battersea, an excellent and well rendered selection of sacred music, under the direction of Mr. Albert H. Eyre, organist, with Miss Iverson at the organ.

AN ASSOCIATION OF ORGANISTS.

"The Wakefield and District Organists' Association" is one of those decentralizing institutions which deserve commendation and encouragement. A recently issued pamphlet furnishes an interesting "retrospect, 1890-1900," of this fraternity. Inaugurated ten years ago, at a meeting attended by eighteen organists of Wakefield and the neighbourhood, the roll now contains eighty-eight names! The unsectarian character of the Association is evidenced by the fact that these four score or more "chief musicians" represent seventy-four various places of worship, which include a Primitive Methodist and a Roman Catholic Church! Surely this is an eminently practical instance of brethren dwelling together in unity. Papers are read, organ recitals and musical evenings given, summer excursions arranged, and, of course, there is that inevitable and distinctive English function, an annual dinner. From time to time papers are read by non-members, and altogether the Wakefield and district organists seem to have some very good times in the bonds of fellowship. The concluding paragraphs of the last report, by Mr. A. E. S. Sugden (20, Arundel Street, Wakefield), the hon. secretary, may be quoted, with hearty congratulations upon the success attending so interesting and praiseworthy an organisation:—

Meeting on a basis of perfect equality—knowing no distinction of amateur or professional members—no distinction of creed or sect, we meet as brethren, banded together to help each other by advice and sympathy; and the influence of the Association is felt throughout the district, and even beyond.

What it shall become cannot be foreseen. The past no man can rob us of; the future rests with ourselves.

An extremely interesting programme of mediæval music was given by the Plain-song and Mediæval Society at the St. Paul's Chapter House, on the 5th ult. The selection, ranging as it did from the eleventh to the fifteenth century, was of great historical interest, as showing, first, the plain-song in its original form as in the eleventh century, "Ut tu propitiatus," then in its harmonised form as exemplified by the fourteenth century, "Benedictus qui venit," and, later still, its development into such beautiful madrigals as "This day, day dawns." The programme also included the celebrated "Sumer is icumen in" and a fine song by John Cole called "To live alone," which was admirably sung by Mr. Vernon Taylor, under whose direction the performance was arranged. Sir John Stainer was in the chair, and Mr. Briggs supplied most interesting historical and other data.

The service list for the month of April of Calvary Church, New York, is an interesting document, and shows that in an eclectic selection of music English composers are duly honoured. The names of Stainer, Martin, Sullivan, Stanford, Thorne, and Lemare appear as vocal composers, while in a list of organ solos, played at Evensong, appear the names of F. E. Bache, Chipp, and Smart. Mr. Clement R. Gale is the organist and choirmaster of the church, and is to be congratulated upon his administration of musical matters at Calvary Church.

BIRMINGHAM CORPORATION ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist to the Corporation of Birmingham, has, at our request, sent the following particulars of the weekly recitals which he gives with so much acceptance in the Town Hall of that hardware producing and music-famous city. Mr. Perkins writes:—

I have been trying for some years to improve the taste of the audience by gradually increasing the proportion of serious organ music. At the same time I am of opinion that as there are a number of poor people (more than one labouring man being among the most devoted attendants), it is better for them to hear some of the great orchestral works on the organ than never to hear them at all. I am glad to say that there is now more applause after a Prelude and Fugue of Bach than there was ten years ago after an operatic overture.

The recitals, which are free, are given on Saturday afternoons, at 2.30. As a rule, the audience numbers from 500 to 700 people, and includes all classes of the community. They are always singularly attentive and appreciative.

At the last recital (in June) I always give a programme selected entirely by the audience. Each person who wishes to ask for a piece writes the title (and his name and address) on a post card and sends it to the Town Hall. The voting last year stood thus, with a large majority for No. 1:—

1. Overture to "Tannhäuser" .. .. .. Wagner.
2. Storm Fantasia .. .. Lemmens.
3. Variations on the Austrian Hymn .. .. .. Chipp.

No. 3 was, as you are aware, composed for this instrument and is a great favourite here.

The following will serve as a specimen—though he disclaims it as a "model" programme—of a recent recital given by Mr. Perkins in the Town Hall, Birmingham:—

1. Concert Overture in C minor .. .. Hollins.
2. Andante in E (from the Pianoforte Concerto in G minor) Mendelssohn.
3. { (a) Siciliano / (b) Fugue in G minor } .. .. Bach.
4. Introduction and Allegro in F .. .. Handel. (From the "Cuckoo and Nightingale Concerto.")
5. Andante and Variations in G .. .. .. Beethoven.
6. Toccata in E flat .. .. Capocci.
7. Entr'acte (The death of Pierrot) .. .. .. Mario Costa.
8. Grand Fantasia on the Wedding March and the Fairies' Dance, in Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music .. Liszt.

ORGAN RECITALS.

The following organ recitals, given during the past month, may be recorded:—

St. Neot's Parish Church (organist, Mr. A. Thompson), re-opening of organ, rebuilt by Messrs. Bishop and Son, by Dr. A. H. Mann, who played a Concerto in G minor by Matthew Camidge; St. Clement Danes, Strand, by Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, who played Best's Air with variations in A; Horbury Congregational Church, Notting Hill, by Mr. C. Thornton Turner; Holy Trinity Church, Malvern, by Mr. Fred. G. Hickson; St. Bees Priory Church, by Mr. F. J. Livesay (programme entirely of Passion Music); St. Mary's, Southampton, by Mr. R. Sharpe, who played S. S. Wesley's Andante in A; St. George's Presbyterian Church, Stockton, by Mr. James Foggitt; All Saints' Church, Toronto, by Mr. W. E. Fairclough; St. George-the-Martyr, Queen Square, by Mr. Alfred J. Miller, with Miss Nancy Miller as vocalist; Kendal Parish Church, by Mr. W. Granger, who played Calkin's Festal March in C; Congregational Church, Fareham, by Miss Lee, who also played some violin solos; Parish Church, Strabane, by Mr. C. J. Brennan; Holy Trinity Church, Sutton Coldfield, by Mr. W. A. Macduff (opening of the Hope-Jones new electric organ), who played Smart's Air in A with variations and final fugato; St. Margaret's, Westminster, by Mr. E. H. Lemare, who played a new Concert Rondo in B flat, by Hollins; Parish Church, Castleacre, Norfolk, by Mr. Francis G. Highe; Parish Church, Saffron Walden, by Mr. Herbert Mahow, who played the two recently published posthumous organ pieces by Mendelssohn; North Berwick Parish Church, Mr. Andrew Calley (organ) and Mr. H. J. Crumpton (violin), both sightless performers; and at Kirkby Stephen Parish Church, by Mr. George Rathbone (organ), who played Rheinberger's Sonata in F minor and Elgar's Imperial March; Miss Wakefield (vocalist), who sang three sacred songs by Cornelius.

The organ in Christ Church, Cannes, presented by the late Mr. T. R. Woolfield, the founder of the church, and erected in 1867, has recently been renovated at a cost of £430, upon which there remains a debt of £210. Two recitals have recently been given on the restored instrument—one by Mr. Percy Harmon, organist of St. Paul's, Cannes, and another by Mr. Cecil H. Wybergh, organist of the Royal Memorial Church, Cannes. On the former occasion some anthems were well sung by the choir of Christ Church, under the direction of Mr. S. Herbert March, organist of the church.

Mr. E. H. Thorne announces four "Bach organ recitals" to take place at St. Anne's Church, Soho, on every Saturday afternoon during the month, at 3.30. The programmes contain several of the little known and seldom played Choral Preludes of the great Cantor, and therefore organ students would do well to attend these excellent Bach performances.

A series of recitals is announced at St. Michael's Church, Cornhill, on every Thursday during May (except the 24th), June, and July, at 1.15 p.m. Various organists, including Dr. W. John Reynolds, organist of the church, will give the recitals.

A POLYTECHNIC ORGAN.

The following is the specification of a three-manual organ built by Messrs. Beale and Thynne, and presented by the late Sir Henry Tate, Bart., to the Polytechnic Institute, Battersea:—

Great (12 stops).

Double Open Diapason	16 feet	Flauto Traverso	4 feet
Open Diapason, No. 1	8 „	Twelfth	2⅔ „
Ditto, No. 2	8 „	Fifteenth	2 „
Hohlflöte	8 „	Mixture	4 ranks
Dulciana	8 „	Trumpet	8 feet
Octave	4 „	Clarion	4 „

Swell (13 stops).

Lieblich Bourdon	16 feet	Flautina	2 feet
Open Diapason	8 „	Mixture	3 ranks
Rohrflöte	8 „	Contra Fagotto	16 feet
Viole d'orchestre	8 „	Horn	8 „
Violons Célestes	8 „	Hautbois	8 „
Echo Salicional	8 „	Clarion	4 „
Principal	4 „	Tremulant.

Solo (11 stops).

(All, except Tuba, in a Swell Box. Tuba on 15-in. wind.)

Salicional	8 feet	Harmonic Piccolo	2 feet
Lieblich Gedact	8 „	Orchestral Oboe	8 „
Violoncello	8 „	Clarinet	8 „
Violes Célestes	8 „	Vox Humana	8 „
Concert Flute	8 „	Tuba	8 „
Harmonic Flute	4 „	Tremulant.

Pedal (12 stops).

Harmonic Bass	32 feet	Octave	8 feet
Open Diapason (Wood)	16 „	Flauto Dolce	8 „
Ditto (Metal)	16 „	Violoncello (in Swell Box)	8 „
Grand Bourdon	16 „	Contra Fagotto (do.)	16 „

Mr. Victor Williams, Christ Church, Upper Norwood.
Mr. W. Norman Kewish, Wesleyan Church, Woolwich.
Mr. J. Turton Smith, Conway Parish Church.
Mr. T. W. Ritson, Parish Church, Mumbles, Glamorgan.
Mr. Herbert Gresham, Holy Innocents' Church, Hammersmith.

REVIEWS.

MUSICAL LITERATURE, &c.

Bach. By C. F. Abdy Williams. With illustrations and portraits. [J. M. Dent and Co.]

This biography, which forms one of "The Master Musicians" series, is an improvement upon the two preceding volumes. Although Mr. Abdy Williams has been obliged to obtain his biographical facts from previous writers on the great Cantor, of whom Spitta is the chief, yet he has invested his work with a fresh interest by reason of a visit to the Bach country last year. In this connection he says: "The name of Bach is reverenced by Thuringian organists, and I had interesting conversations with his successors at Arnstadt and Mühlhausen, Herr Kellermann and Herr Möller. But the chief music-seller at Arnstadt told me that 'Bach's music is out of date; no one has now any interest in such old-fashioned compositions.'" This must have been very galling to an ardent Bach disciple from England. The author has wisely kept the account of Bach's life distinct from that of his compositions, and he has produced a readable if not exhaustive account of the leviathan composer and his works. It is a pity that the references to Bach's music in England are so meagre, as well as a little wanting in accuracy. There are discrepancies on pp. 132 and 142, between the year of the issue of Wesley and Horn's edition of the "48." As a matter of fact, Part I. was issued in September, 1810, and the work was completed in July, 1813. Mr. Abdy Williams states that A. F. C. Kollmann (not Kollmans as he has it) printed, but never published his edition of the "48." Has he ever seen a copy? If he has not, he should have given his authority for the statement. The information given on p. 143 concerning the English publication of the organ works needs correction. Catalogues of the vocal and instrumental works, a bibliography, and a glossary add to the usefulness of this latest "life" of Bach, which is furnished with nine interesting illustrations.

Five-part Harmony. By Francis Edward Gladstone. (No. 60 of Novello's Primers and Educational Series, edited by Sir John Stainer and Sir C. Hubert H. Parry.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The majority of treatises on harmony do not treat of five-part writing to any great extent. But as this higher grade, so to speak, of harmony is compulsory for the degree of Bachelor of Music at the principal Universities, candidates are often in need of some help in their five-part harmony preparation. This Dr. Gladstone supplies in a very clear and satisfactory manner in "this little book," as he modestly calls it. He says, and that truly: "The plan of this work is arranged in such a manner that anyone who is already well instructed in harmony may advance without the aid of a teacher." Dr. Gladstone tells the student what to do, how to do it, and what not to do, in language that is to the point and free from ambiguity. In each chapter he gives a problem for the student to work and furnishes a solution in the Appendix. This Primer is undoubtedly the handiwork of an expert who is fully qualified to write upon the subject of which it treats.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Six Easy Settings of the Kyrie Eleison. By Frederick Iliffe.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D. By Frank L. Moir.

Te Deum, Benedictus, Jubilate Deo, and Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F. By S. Coleridge-Taylor.

(Novello's Parish Choir Book. Nos. 414 to 419.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Dr. Iliffe's setting of the Responses to the Commandments contains more variety and possibility than are usually found in such arrangements. The first three are simple in design and character, and should give little trouble to any choir. The melody of the fourth, in D minor, is provided with an alternative harmonization to be used after the fifth, seventh, and ninth commandments. The fifth setting is distinguished by the effectiveness of the organ accompaniment, the passage for the flute at the close being in particular a happy thought. The last of the series would necessitate some practice to secure unanimity, as the music to be sung after the second, fourth, sixth, and eighth commandments is in seven parts. The greatly increased richness in the volume of tone will, however, well repay any extra time devoted to its rehearsal.

The music to the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis composed by Mr. Frank L. Moir combines simplicity and effectiveness in a notable degree. The portions in solid harmony are relieved by some clever entrances in imitation and passages in unison for sections of the choir, and the voices are admirably sustained by the organ accompaniment.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music is so distinctive that unusual interest is attached to his settings of the Church canticles. It may be premised that each bears the stamp of strong individuality. In precisely what this individuality consists it would be difficult to say. Technically, there is a subtle intermixture of the major and minor modes, frequent use of chromatic harmonies, and brief excursions into unrelated keys, while the accompaniment is frequently made to comment, as it were, on the text. But this description does not convey an idea of the freshness and singular attractiveness of the music, which holds the attention while it accentuates with peculiar force the meaning of the words. The vocal parts will be found easy to sing, for the harmonic changes are well approached, and the composer has manifestly avoided contrapuntal complexities. Notable points in the Te Deum are the words "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth" being delivered forte; the bold enharmonic change at the sentence "Thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven"; and the impressive effect of the unaccompanied seven-part writing at the passage "We therefore pray Thee." The Benedictus contains a section of fourteen bars for the sopranos in unison, which might, when desired, be sung as a solo. The music is less intense in expression than that of the Te Deum, but otherwise it has much in common with the setting of the great Easter hymn. The Jubilate starts in four parts unaccompanied, save for a pedal C, in genuine jubilant strain which, at the entry of the organ, is intensified by the repetition of a figure in the accompaniment. The Gloria is very stirring. There is an expression of chastened rejoicing in the music to the Magnificat, which is in most happy consonance with the text. The passage "And His mercy is on them that fear Him" is set for the sopranos in two parts, and the portion beginning "He rememb'ring" is intended to be sung without assistance from the organ, except for an occasional chord to maintain the pitch. The strains accompanying the Nunc dimittis are beautiful in their unaffectedness and tranquillity.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Vier Klavierstücke. Op. 17.
Vier Lyrische Stücke. Op. 28.
Vier Stimmungsbilder. Op. 37.
For Pianoforte solo. By Alexander von Fielitz.

[Breitkopf and Härtel.]

The above pieces form part of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel's admirable series "The Pianist's Library." The "Klavierstücke" are severally named "Ritornelle," "Consolation," "Romanze," and "Novelette," titles which are appropriate to the music they respectively head. The "Ritornelle" is particularly pleasing, "Consolation" contains much that is satisfying to the ear, the "Romanze" is short but expressive, and the "Novelette" suggests the modern story full of stirring incident.

The four "Lyrical pieces" bear no names, but the music contains pleasing fancies. The second piece in particular is a charming composition of poetic and tranquil character.

The "Tone-pictures" are similar in character. The first, entitled "Idylle," is an expressive little piece in G minor. This is followed by an "Entr'acte" of graceful nature, a movement of some dignity entitled "Hymnus," and a vivacious "Capriccioso," which demands an agile left hand.

SONGS.

Starlight. With Violin obbligato. By May Pettifer.

The Troubadour's Serenade. Words by Thomas Moore. Music by May Pettifer.

[Hammond and Co.]

Inasmuch as Miss Pettifer has succeeded in obtaining the diploma of Associateship from the Royal College of Organists, she may be accounted a well-trained musician, and indications of this are plentiful in these songs. Originality and distinction they do not possess, but they are well laid out for the voice, and the music is pleasing by reason of its good workmanship. "Starlight" is furnished with Italian as well as English words, and is best suited to a contralto voice. To those thus gifted it may be recommended as affording a change of sentiment from the expressions of unrequited love which contraltos are usually asked by composers to interpret, the theme of "Starlight" being love of one's native country.

"The Troubadour's Serenade" is a good setting of Moore's impassioned words, the singer being afforded opportunities for impressing their significance and the harmonic scheme being rich and well varied.

PART-SONGS.

The Merry Bells of Yule. Words by Tennyson. Music by E. W. Naylor.

The Song of the Zetland Fisherman. Words by Sir Walter Scott. Music by Sir George Elvey.

A Fortunate Island. Words by Norman Gale. Music by Basil Johnson.

When first I came to court. Words by Austin Dobson. Music by C. H. Lloyd.

The Silent Land. Words by Longfellow. Music by Harold R. White.

(Novello's Part-Song Book. Nos. 813 and 814, 816 to 818.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Naylor has chosen for his text Cantos 28 and 30 of "In Memoriam." The part-writing is in four, five, and eight parts, some of which cleverly suggest the pealing of the "Merry Bells of Yule." Other devices employed to secure variety are also very ingenious, and the part-song will be found to well repay any extra practice it may require to do it full justice.

It is doubtful if Zetland fishermen ever sang in the style of Sir George Elvey's music to Scott's lines, but the composition is a very pleasing four-part song, which will present no difficulties to fairly trained choirs.

Although Mr. Basil Johnson has set Mr. Norman Gale's lines in eight vocal parts, the music is easy, all awkward intervals and treacherous entrances being avoided; moreover, the part-writing is flowing and melodious in character. An ad libitum pianoforte accompaniment increases the effectiveness and richness of the harmonic scheme.

The spirit of Mr. Austin Dobson's lines "When first I came to court" has been admirably caught by Dr. C. H. Lloyd, and the music suggests the period of the subject with a fidelity that accentuates its old world sentiment. The composition is dedicated to "Lionel Benson and the members of the Magpie Madrigal Society," and the vocal parts have manifestly been written in remembrance of the abilities of the singers who have adopted the name of the inquisitive bird. Precision of attack and crispness of articulation are absolutely essential factors in the interpretation of this madrigal, which, it should be added, has two independently written soprano parts as well as the usual alto, tenor, and bass parts. Its difficulties, however, are by no means extraordinary, and are such as will interest a capable body of choristers.

Mr. Harold R. White has set Longfellow's familiar lines "The Silent Land" with a repose and dignity whereby the composer has happily caught the spirit of the lyric. Although the music is written mainly in four parts, the alto, tenor, and bass are occasionally divided, with the result that the harmonies are greatly enriched. This part-song will not be found difficult, but it requires expressive and careful singing—this, of course, is in its favour.

PROFESSOR NIECKS ON "THE TEACHING OF MUSICAL HISTORY."

Professor Niecks chose, for the paper which he read at the Musical Association, on the 10th ult., the above ambiguous title to enable him to speak on "the teaching of music" in more than one sense. His objects were, on the one hand, to present to the Society a plea for a proper and more general study of musical history, and, on the other hand, to propose for discussion some views of perennial interest.

The state of matters, he said, which all serious musicians must deplore, and must wish to be changed, consists in that the history of music is too little taught, and, when taught, oftener improperly taught than properly. Nothing could be more lamentable than the neglect of musical history in music schools, abroad as well as in this country. In most cases the directors neither appoint a properly qualified teacher nor exact the attendance of the pupils. Few students care for anything but playing, singing, or composing. Theory is irksome to them, and shirked as much as possible, and history they regard as a superfluity and fatuity. Those who are ambitious of becoming virtuosi do not know that being a singer or player is not synonymous with being a musician; they do not see that a musician's training comprises many more things than technique; they have no suspicion that the most prodigious vocal or instrumental acrobat may after all be but a poor creature as an artist. The directors of music schools should not allow students to choose what they like, but should force them to do what is good for them. The directors ought to impose upon all systematic courses of theory and history, obligatory not merely in print, but also in deed. The lecturer admitted the difficulty of realising the idea, but held that there is no other way of putting a stop to the unlimited increase of strummers, fiddlers, and vocalisers, that remain immature and undeveloped to the end of their days. Maturity can only be obtained where the study of playing and singing is combined with other studies. Unless a music student acquires a thorough knowledge of the texture and structure of the art, which harmony and counterpoint, on the one hand, and form, on the other hand, teach, he will never outgrow the helpless stage of artistic infancy.

Professor Niecks, after pointing out the almost generally unsatisfactory nature of historical examination papers (those of the Universities not excepted), which hardly contain anything but questions about dates, names, and titles, turned to the question of what history can do for the musician. The historian Ambros writes that we can understand the developed art only after understanding its earlier stages and gradual growth; and that history teaches us a serious truth—namely, that in times which the gay world of to-day no longer knows the noblest lived and laboured, and left rich treasures for humanity; that in the domain of art, as elsewhere, the sum of our experiences, but not the intelligence and talent has become greater. Although the bearing of history on practice, the lecturer went on, is less obvious than its bearing on general culture, being partly indirect, it is nevertheless very real. By the analysis of the techniques and styles of different periods, schools, and individuals, history gives the student insight into the changing texture and structure of his art. By the description of the character of the artists and their social and other surroundings, it reveals to him, at least to some extent, the spirit of the art-products. And by setting forth the views of musicians of all ages, the usages as to the performances of their works, and the nature of the instruments employed, it still further enables him to realise the ways and means of times gone by. Who does not see that history, in widening the horizon of the musician, must influence his whole art-practice? Who does not see that history, in teaching the musician the things indicated, must develop his judgment, his taste, and his knowledge of how to do? After this explanation, the practical bearing of musical history can no longer be hidden even from the most prejudiced. But it manifests itself in a still more direct manner. What practical results, for instance, may be derived from the history of notation, taking the word in its widest meaning, including the use of accidents, measure, tempo, and marks of expression! From it musicians may learn a great deal of what is indispensable for the correct execution of older works than those of our own time. But, after all, the greatest of the benefits derivable from the study of the history of music is that it takes the musician out of conventionality, fashion, and individualism into universality; out of technical narrowness and emotional dimness into intellectual freedom and clearness—that, in short, it opens up before him an infinitude of infinite vistas.

The cause of the disbelief in musical history should not, however, be wholly ascribed to the evil disposition of the disbelievers. The common defects of history teaching are probably to an equally large extent, perhaps even to a larger extent, responsible for the lack of faith. First of all it cannot be too strongly insisted upon that chronology is not history; it is no more than the handmaid of history. Facts, unless we know their meaning and connection, are as good as valueless; it is of little use to burden our memory if we do not at the same time enlighten our intelligence. Studying history in this way does not, however, make the study more difficult. Quite the contrary is the case. Having acquired a knowledge of the great movements and chief stages of development of the art, it is easy to fill in and remember the details; for these are then no longer items in a chaos, but parts of an organised whole.

The history of the arts, as distinguished from general history, has to deal with something peculiar to them, and makes them peculiarly difficult to the general student. This something is technique, its nature and its growth and changes of style. The narrative of the lives of the great composers does not constitute a history of music; it is, in fact, only a subordinate accompaniment of the real history, of the account of the developments and vicissitudes of melody, harmony, counterpoint, form, and last, but certainly not least, the spirit that prompts these, and expresses itself through them.

History, then, is chiefly concerned with movements—social, political, moral, religious, and artistic. Now these movements appear and disappear, we cannot tell when or how. They do not begin and end with the abrupt clash of a military band playing at the head of a marching regiment. No, they creep in softly, and die away slowly. We do not notice them till they have gained strength, and find ourselves again in the dark as regards their later stages and final extinction. And history is not a series of movements, a series in which every new movement starts when its predecessor has completed its course, neither sooner nor later. No, there are always a number of movements going on simultaneously, differing in vigour, length of course, and time of starting. In short, history, instead of being a series of movements, is a network of movements. Now, in this intricacy lies the difficulty of teaching and learning history. Professor Niecks illustrated overlapping of styles by the following examples: The continuance by Nanino of the pure vocal ecclesiastical style of Palestrina, whilst Giovanni Gabrieli cultivated a more worldly concerted style, and Monteverde revolutionised the art in all its branches; and by the continuance of the old opera after the introduction of the modern music-drama. In illustration of synchronous styles he remarked that the age of Lully was also that of Cavalli, Cesti, and Legrenzi; the age of Bach and Handel that of Rameau, and of the Neapolitan school of the Scarlattis, Pergolesi, Vinci, and Hasse; that along with Beethoven flourished Rossini; along with Mendelssohn and Schumann, Donizetti and Auber; along with Wagner, Brahms. The lecturer pointed out that the last example showed that the differences are by no means always a matter of nationality, giving as an example of an equally startling contrast, Berlioz and Auber. Very long-lived and very short-lived composers are often stumbling-blocks in the way of neat grouping—of the former class are Haydn and Spohr. The complexity, however, is fully realised only when we comprise in one look all the principal composers existing at one moment of time.

There is nothing more difficult and more interesting than the tracing of the origins of styles. In doing so we must accept the proposition that there are no beginnings in the history of art—only developments. When we meet with a new style, form, or procedure, a little research will soon discover the germ from which they were developed. Now, if there are no beginnings, we ought not to speak of invention in this connection. Harmony, counterpoint, notation, instrumental composition, monody, the musical drama, the sonata form, &c., were not inventions made by ingenious individuals, but developments brought about by the labours of nations and generations. It is impossible to agree with Mr. Henry Davey that Dunstable was the inventor of counterpoint and Hugh Aston the inventor of instrumental composition. Quite apart from evidence, it is contrary to reason and experience to assume an abrupt change from barbarous discanting to artistic composition. And if the change was not abrupt, but gradual, what man could be presumptuous enough to pronounce that at this, and at no other point, barbarism ceased and art began?

As illustrations of the fact that the origins are not to be found where they are often assumed to be, the lecturer mentioned that the thing called by Mendelssohn "Song without words" could be traced back as far as Couperin; that Haydn was not the only father of that wonderful child whose name is Symphony; that Wagner's idea of the music-drama is, as regards the principle, the same as that of the Florentines at the end of the sixteenth century; that the means employed by Wagner (abandonment of the architectural forms, leading motives, increased importance of the orchestra, &c.) were likewise developments, not inventions; that it would be nonsense to say that the founders of monody and the music-drama in the latter part of the sixteenth and early part of the seventeenth centuries found nothing in the art of their day to assist them in creating the new art, seeing that the recitative had a precursor in the ecclesiastical chant, the aria in folk-song, and those art-songs in parts that imitated or approached more or less the form and spirit of folk-song (the Villanelle and Frottole), and that periodicity, unknown to old contrapuntal music, and characteristic of the structure of the new melodico-harmonic music, had prototypes in folk-song and dances.

Next Professor Niecks dealt with the grouping of the facts of history. The most valuable and natural groupings are those based on movements—that is, on internal and essential characteristics. But, on account of the number and complexity of the movements, such grouping is only to a limited extent possible in histories of music. After enumerating various possible divisions, the lecturer remarked that the historical student who wishes to master his subject must study history from all points of view, as otherwise he cannot get a clear picture of it in its totality at any stage, and in the developments of its several departments and national sections.

The matters dealt with in the concluding part of the paper were: the importance of the analysis and description of the styles of periods, nationalities, schools, and individualities, from the technical, spiritual, and æsthetical points of view, of which especially the first is often neglected; the abuse of the term school and its proper meaning; greatness and originality—the greatest masters being by no means always the most original (Palestrina and Handel); genius not necessarily the outcome of morbidity, of an unbalanced constitution—there being sane as well as insane geniuses; the milieu and the individual—the latter as well as the former being a factor in the evolution of an art. With regard to the last point, Professor Niecks remarked that it is false philosophy to teach that, given a certain climate, a certain race, a certain age, and certain social, political, and artistic conditions, the development of the art must be of one kind and can be of no other kind. This philosophy leaves out of account the caprice of nature—the individual factor. An individual may bring about a development that is not in accordance with the general tendency.

An animated discussion followed the reading of the paper, in which Mr. Davey, Mr. Jacques, and Mr. Shedlock took part. Sir Frederick Bridge warmly supported the lecturer's plea for the study of musical history in music schools and the obligatory study of theoretical subjects; and the chairman, Mr. W. H. Cummings, likewise expressed his sympathy with the aims and contents of the paper.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

"Papa" Haydn was as refreshingly welcome as ever at the third concert of the season, on the 5th ult., at Queen's Hall. His genial, genius-conceived strains are simply delightful in contrast with the tone-stressfulness and too often laboured effects which characterise so many uninspired modern creations. 'Twas a Symphony in D by Haydn that gave so much pleasure to those who can appreciate spontaneous melody and natural simplicity. As a history of this unsophisticated work will be found in another column (p. 320), we need only say that it was played with all possible refinement and verve under Mr. F. H. Cowen's careful direction, and that the theme and its dainty variations, which form the slow movement, as well as the trio of the third section, captivated the sympathetic listener by their exquisite charm.

The concert was specially memorable in that Mr. Edward Lloyd made his farewell appearance at the Philharmonic, for which Society he first sang in 1873, when he appeared at two successive concerts. The great tenor sang Beethoven's "Adelaide," accompanied most sympathetically on the pianoforte by Mr. F. H. Cowen, and, in response to a vociferous encore, Schubert's "Serenade." In the second part of the programme he gave a fine rendering of his old cheval de battaile, the Prize Song from the "Meistersingers." How these representative songs were interpreted by Mr. Lloyd it is hardly necessary to say, except that he fully maintained his high reputation as our foremost English tenor. The remainder of the programme does not call for detailed notice. M. Ladislas Gorski played the solo part of Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor. Although the work was composed thirty-one years ago, and has been played by all the great violinists, a belated notice in the programme-book stated that it is "likely to rank among classics"! The brilliant "Tema con variazioni," from Tschaïkowsky's Orchestral Suite, No. 3 (Op. 55), were played with great spirit, and a special word of praise is due to Mr. W. Frye Parker, the "leader" of the orchestra, for his skilful rendering of the solo violin part. As these variations of Tschaïkowsky's are in the same key, G, as the Haydn variations of the symphony, the two works formed an interesting contrast between the ancient and modern schools of treatment and orchestration. Wagner's "Entrance of the gods into Walhalla" ("Das Rheingold") completed the scheme. Mr. Cowen well maintained the high standard of conducting skill which characterised his achievements at the two preceding concerts of the season.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The forty-fourth annual series of the Saturday afternoon concerts, under the direction of Mr. August Manns, terminated on the 7th ult. No work performed at the preceding concert calls for comment, but the exceptionally clever violin playing of the gifted Miss Maud MacCarthy in Bach's Concerto in A minor merits record.

Distinction was given to the concluding concert by the first performance in England of a Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in D minor (Op 23) by Mr. E. A. MacDowell, an American composer hitherto practically unknown in this country. Born in New York, December 18, 1861, Mr. MacDowell is now Professor of Music at Columbia University in his native city. He acquired the higher technicalities of his art in Germany, and his compositions include a symphony entitled "Roland," three symphonic poems, two suites for orchestra, and two pianoforte concertos, the second of which may be said to have introduced his music to this country on the 7th ult. This work is chiefly remarkable for the peculiarities of its construction. What is practically the slow movement comes first, and this opens with what may be regarded as preludial matter based upon the second subject. The second movement is extremely vivacious. It is in Rondo form, headed Presto giocoso, and its character is best described as feverish haste. The Finale opens with a slow section in which the themes of the first movement are passed in review until they are dismissed by the entrance of the chief melody of the Finale proper, which has much in common with the characteristics of what is commonly known as a Valse brillante. It would not be fair to judge the writer's present capabilities by this work, inasmuch as it is comparatively an early production, and the music contains signs of limited knowledge of resource. Nevertheless it is an interesting example of music from "the other side," with which it is desirable that we should become better acquainted. The solo part was rendered with remarkable brilliancy by Madame Carreño, from whom the composer received early instruction in pianoforte playing. Miss Macintyre made her re-appearance in England after her somewhat lengthy sojourn in Italy, and the orchestral works included Rimski-Korsakoff's Capriccio Espagnol, not previously heard at these concerts, and Schubert's colossal Symphony in C.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

Mr. Arthur Chappell brought his forty-second season of Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall to a conclusion on the 9th ult. The only performance calling for notice in these columns since our last issue was that which took place on the 7th ult., when two works were added to the repertory. The first was a String Sextet in A (Op. 5), by Herr Ernst Rudorff. If the music is deficient in originality, it possesses estimable qualities, and the peculiar combination of instruments—three violins, a viola, and two violoncellos—cause the tone quality to be curiously light and bright. It was well rendered by Messrs. Kruse, Haydn Inwards, Slocombe, Gibson, Walenn, and Paul Ludwig, but we could not help wondering why this old work should have been thus honoured while so many superior compositions by native composers are neglected. The other ancient novelty was a Sonata in D for violin and viola, by the eighteenth century composer, Jean Marie Leclair. It proved a good specimen of this genial composer's style, which so faithfully reflects the productions of others. Messrs. Kruse and Gibson appeared to be in perfect sympathy with the music, and the pianoforte accompaniment, as arranged by Ferdinand David from the composer's figured bass, was deftly played by Mr. Henry Bird. It may be added that the Misses Mathilde and Adela Verne gave a delightfully unanimous and refined rendering of Schumann's Andante and Variations in B flat (Op. 46) for two pianofortes, and that Miss Lillian Blauvelt sang charmingly.

GOOD FRIDAY CONCERTS.

In accordance with established custom, the Royal Choral Society gave "The Messiah," at the Royal Albert Hall, and once more Sir F. Bridge discarded Mozart's "additional accompaniments." Opinions may vary respecting this return to the old style, but certainly there are specially interesting elements in a performance of the sacred classic under such conditions. The choruses were sung with crispness as well as vigour, and the impressiveness of the more massive numbers was augmented by the splendid volume of tone with which they were delivered. With such a competent quartet of soloists as Miss Ella Russell, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Watkin Mills the conductor had no cause for anxiety.

Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and selections from oratorios were given at St. James's Hall with as much success as on any preceding occasion. To the gratefully melodious solos Miss Alice Esty, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Andrew Black did justice. The South London Choral Association, directed by Mr. L. C. Venables, gave the choruses with spirit, and Mr. Fountain Meen played the accompaniments on the organ with his usual ability.

A more appropriate selection of orchestral music for performance on Good Friday could scarcely be devised than that presented in the afternoon by Mr. Robert Newman. The Prelude and "Good Friday" music from "Parsifal," the death music from "Götterdämmerung," and Tschaïkowsky's Sixth Symphony in B minor were superbly interpreted under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The fine singing of Madame Blanche Marchesi was a distinct feature of the afternoon's music.

The evening concert at Queen's Hall possessed several attractive features. Among the oratorio excerpts specially well rendered were "With verdure clad" (Miss Lillian Blauvelt), the Passion Music from "The Messiah" (Mr. Gregory Hast), and "Angels, ever bright and fair" (Madame Emily Squire). The taste displayed by Miss Giulia Ravogli in Stradella's "Pieta, Signore," and by Mr. W. Forington in Gounod's "Nazareth" also secured recognition, and the Meister Glee Singers sang with customary success. The instrumental soloists included Mr. W. H. Squire (violoncello) and Mr. W. S. Hoyte (organ), and Mr. Charles Fry ably brought out the descriptive charm of Longfellow's poem "The Legend Beautiful," with Stanley Hawley's accompanying music.

The vast hall of the People's Palace was crowded to overflowing to hear the annual performance of "The Messiah" given by the People's Palace Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Allen Gill. The solos were effectively rendered by Mesdames Grace Wike and Marie Hooton, Messrs. Henry Beaumont and A. H. Gee. The singing of the choir was marked throughout with attack, refinement, and reverence.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society is to be commended for so largely drawing upon British composers for the programme of its concert on March 28, at Queen's Hall, and especially for performing Professor Villiers Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, an unusually fine work containing the elements of popularity, but which has suffered undue neglect. The selection also included Sterndale Bennett's beautiful Overture "The Naïads" and Bizet's lively "L'Arlésienne" Suite, both of which were excellently interpreted. Violin solos were contributed by Miss Alice Liebmann, and the admirable singing of Miss Florence Shee and Mr. Montague Borwell was fully appreciated. Mr. Ernest A. C. Ford conducted.

No instrumental novelty was brought forward at the concert given on the 3rd ult., at the Queen's Hall, by the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society, but the programme contained a little known Symphony in D, by Haydn, which merits brief notice. The score bears date 1795, and therefore it may be presumed that the work was here written for the third series of Salomon's concerts, which took place in that year in London. The music is in the old master's most matured style, and the Finale is remarkable for its foreshadowing of the first movement of Beethoven's "Pastoral." The symphony was very tastefully rendered under the able direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne, and, later in the evening, the orchestra again distinguished itself by the sympathetic support given to Miss Emily Shinner, who played with great refinement and brilliancy the solo part of Dr. Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor. As usual, a special feature of the concert was the finished and enjoyable singing of the male-voice choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Munro Davison. A new part-song, a setting by C. J. Whittington of Herrick's dainty little poem "To Daisies," proved pleasing, if it lacked in distinction, and the other vocal part-music consisted of Smart's "Homeward Watch," Stainer's glee "Bind my brows," and Edwards's madrigal "In going to my lonely bed." Miss Florence Shee was the solo vocalist.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The pupils' concert given on March 29, at Queen's Hall, possessed much musical interest. It opened with a "Comedy" Overture by Herbert W. Ivey, a work containing melodious themes and showing imagination and considerable knowledge of orchestration. Marguerite Elzy's courageous attack of the difficulties of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's "Scottish" Pianoforte Concerto, written for M. Paderewski and produced by him, under the composer's direction, at the Philharmonic concert on March 24, 1897, was a particular feature of the afternoon, and showed that this gifted young pianist is making satisfactory progress in her art. R. V. Tabb's violoncello playing in Boëllmann's little known Variations Symphoniques (Op. 23) and Cuthbert Whitemore's rendering of the solo part of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor also merit praise. Myrtle Lumsden's expressive and refined interpretation of the solo part of the Adagio from Dr. Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor testified to a musical temperament. An exceptionally favourable impression was made by Annie Bartle, the possessor of a soprano voice of fine quality and considerable power, and whose singing of "Elizabeth's Greeting" from "Tannhäuser" was distinguished by dramatic perception not often met with in young students. Other vocalists whose efforts testified to good tuition were Kate Marriott, Gertrude Harvey, Lilian Burgess, Julia Franks, and W. R. Maxwell. The ladies' choir sang with commendable precision Schubert's "God in Nature" and his Serenade (Op. 135). Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

A remarkable proof of the excellence of the teaching at this school was afforded by the concert given by the pupils and professors, on the 4th ult., at Queen's Hall, in aid of the Mansion House War Fund. The orchestra gave spirited renderings of the March of the Priests from Mendelssohn's "Athalie," and the "Ruy Blas" and "Diamants de la Couronne" Overtures, and rendered excellent support to Miss Mabel Monteith, who played with notable brilliancy and verve the pianoforte portion of Liszt's "Hungarian" Fantasia. Miss Jessie Hudleston and Miss Edith Clegg have already gained the ear of the public, and their singing on this occasion was an attractive feature of the evening. Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Griffith Percy also sang with pronounced success, and other vocalists whose efforts deserve mention by reason of their achievements were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Claribel Hyde, and Mr. H. Turnpenny. Mr. Johannes Wolff played a "Romance" for the violin by Mr. W. H. Cummings, and the choir sang their Principal's civic Ode, "Domine, dirige nos," and his new patriotic chorus, "For Queen and Country," the latter having been delivered with a fervour that elicited much enthusiasm. Miss Ada Giles also stirred the audience by her recital of the "Red Cross Nurse." Mr. W. H. Cummings conducted.

THE GROCERS' COMPANY'S SCHOOLS, HACKNEY DOWNS.

The Easter musical performances given at this well-known boys' school are always looked forward to with much interest. The programmes are generally remarkable for the inclusion of works rarely feasible for school resources. The concert given this year took place on the 7th ult. and included a performance of Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" and Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," the band and chorus numbering 220 performers. Of course the tenors and basses were from outside the school, but the treble and alto parts were sustained by the schoolboys. The performance was generally creditable to all concerned. Mr. Henry Beaumont was the tenor soloist, and Mr. Wilford Cunliffe the bass. Mr. Ernest Newton, the music-master of the school, conducted.

"KING OLAF" AT BARNSLEY.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Barnsley, a Yorkshire manufacturing town of some forty thousand inhabitants, and not at all celebrated for its natural or acquired beauty, is hardly a place where an outsider would expect to find much apostleship of modern musical art on a large and complete scale. Yet the sanguine enterprise of the Barnsley St. Cecilia Society in providing its patrons with a costly performance of Elgar's "King Olaf," on March 29, proved that this apparently trade-engrossed community was fully prepared to give ample support to an undertaking the results of which will favourably compare with the best achieved in the largest towns, not excluding the Metropolis. Here was a new modern work demanding exceptional choral, orchestral, and solo resources, and withal skilful conducting. To declare that the performance was perfect in every detail would be an exaggeration, but it is just and pleasant to record that the work had been prepared with praiseworthy zeal and care. There were no hitches, and at times the effect was adequately powerful, dramatic, and impressive. The choir consisted of about 160 voices, fairly well balanced, and the tone was full, if not quite so sweet as that of some Yorkshire choirs we have heard. The attack was excellent and the execution generally admirable. This obviously was the result of experienced training. The orchestra consisted of fifty performers, fifteen of whom were amateurs, capitally led by Mr. G. W. Buckley, of Leeds. It was somewhat weak in stringed bass, a fact that deprived some of the orchestral effects of due sonority. But the playing, nevertheless, was surprisingly good. For the solo parts the Society was fortunate in being able to secure Miss Medora Henson, whose ample vocal resources and complete familiarity with the music enabled her to sing with great effect; and it was doubly fortunate in being able to engage Mr. Edward Lloyd, who made, on this occasion, his farewell appearance in Barnsley. Mr. Lloyd was in splendid voice, and it goes without saying that he made the utmost of the difficult tenor part in "King Olaf." Mr. William Thornton sang the bass recitatives with appropriate dignity and force. Finally, the Society enjoyed the advantage of the skilled and experienced conducting of Dr. Coward, of Sheffield. It will be remembered that the performance of "King Olaf" was one of the noteworthy features of the last Sheffield Festival. As Dr. Coward was the choirmaster at Sheffield he was able to bring unique experience to bear on his Barnsley resources. Of "King Olaf" itself as a work of art it is not necessary to write further in The Musical Times. It is enough to record that, on this occasion, its lofty and finely conceived effects, its strength, strenuousness and dramatic force, its powerful—perhaps, in one sense, too powerful orchestration, as well as its expressive delicacy, made a deep impression upon an audience most of whom probably were unaccustomed to the neurotic ferment of modern musical idioms.

The second part of the concert included Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, between the third and fourth sections of which a song by Pinsuti was sandwiched—an artistic mistake, whatever its defence. The first and second movements were well played, and Anitra's dance in the third movement even with rare delicacy. The last movement, however, took the fancy of the audience and was irresistibly encored. Mr. Edward Lloyd sang the "Meistersinger" Prize Song in his best style, and, as an encore, "I'll sing thee songs of Araby," another song which he has made his own.

At previous concerts the Barnsley Society has performed Berlioz's "Faust," Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," and "The Spectre's Bride," and many of the stock oratorios. In singling out this Society's admirable enterprise for special notice we are fully aware that many other societies in the North of England are able to claim as good a record. Our columns are not inexhaustible and do not permit us to give detailed accounts of all provincial performances, but we are glad, whenever possible, to give special prominence to worthy achievements.

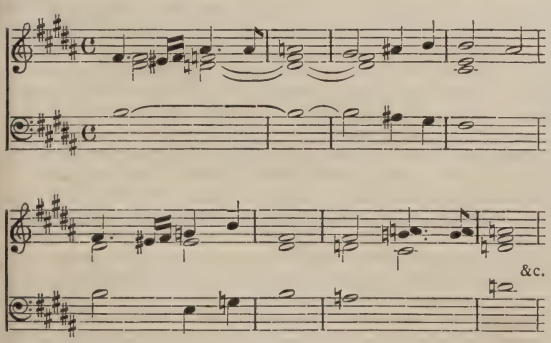
MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

TWO IMPORTANT WORKS BY NATIVE COMPOSERS.

Seldom does it fall to the lot of any city or town to witness the production on a festival scale of two important works by native composers on the same evening. Yet this is what recently happened in Dundee, and thus the event calls for more than passing notice. The first of the novelties was a "Missa Solemnis" (Op. 4) for four solo voices, chorus, organ, and full orchestra, composed by Mr. David Stephen, conductor of the Choral Union. The composer has followed in the safe pathway of the old masters in treating his sacred theme throughout with devotional feeling, but he has by no means discarded in either solos or choruses those rhythmical and melodious features which give to the work that variety which is so essential to its interest and vitality.

The various subjects are well worked out, and the work is one of distinct promise. Special mention may be made of the Credo as being its most ambitious and developed section. The originality of the orchestration is a marked feature of the Mass, and the composer, who conducted, received a well merited ovation at the close of a creditable performance.

The second work performed on this memorable occasion in the musical annals of Dundee was a dramatic cantata entitled "Connla," by Mr. John More Smieton, who is already well known as a composer—this, his latest work, being Opus 25. Mr. Smieton is one of those worthy amateurs to be found in provincial cities and towns who are devoted adherents of the art, and who are never weary in well doing in the cause of music. The book of "Connla" is from the pen of Mr. James Smieton. An old Celtic fairy tale forms the subject-matter of the libretto, and the introduction of mystic voices, Druids, huntsmen, &c., furnish the composer with a variety of excellent material for the exercise of his poetic feeling and musical imaginings. The following weird melody, the most important Leitmotif in the work, may be said to contain the germ of "Connla":—



Mr. Smieton has fully availed himself of the many opportunities which the work affords for dramatic treatment, with the result that he has written some very effective music. It is almost invidious to point to any particular features where such a high level of excellence has been attained; but a part-song, "Gently as falleth the dew," is an attractive number that is sure to claim attention as a separate composition. The tunefulness of a tenor romance, "Fair is thy form," should certainly cause it to meet with popular favour.

Like Mr. Stephen, the composer of the Mass, Mr. Smieton (who also conducted his own work) secured an excellent performance. The members of the Choral Union sang splendidly, and their efforts were well supported by the Scottish Orchestra, under the able leadership of Mr. Sons. The soloists, all of whom rose to the occasion, were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Bessie Borthwick, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Andrew Black. At the close of "Connla" Mr. Smieton was cheered again and again by his fellow citizens with an enthusiasm that was as well deserved as it must have been exceedingly gratifying to him. In conclusion, this dual event proved to be an occasion of special interest and importance in regard to music North of the Tweed.

STRATFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL COMPETITIONS.

The Stratford "Musical Festival," one of the oldest and most successful of its kind held in this country, was held on March 26, 28, 30, and 31. It is an improved Eisteddfod, and ministers exclusively to the surrounding district, the inhabitants in which number a million or so. Although the event is held at Stratford, it appeals to all Essex and contiguous portions of London. The title "Festival" is somewhat a misnomer, because the word, as commonly employed in this country, is understood to describe a series of concert performances of great musical works on a large scale. But at Stratford the "Festival" is a series of carefully graded music competitions, and the only concert given is that in which successful competitors take part. This year some fear was felt that the war, with all its distractions from the arts of peace, would lead to a diminution of interest in the competitions. But, happily, there were 516 entries, the greatest number recorded during the eighteen years of the establishment of the scheme. The entries included 281 candidates in pianoforte, violin, and organ playing, 120 vocal soloists, and 15 choirs variously constituted. The other sections were for rudiments and composition.

A leading feature of the arrangements of the scheme is the engagement of adjudicators well known in connection with the branch of musical study upon which they are called upon to exercise their judgment. This advantage the undertaking is able to secure because of the proximity of Stratford to the Metropolis. This year the adjudicators were Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Randegger, Sir Walter Parratt, Mr. Herbert Bagnall, Mr. L. C. Venables, Mr. George Riseley, Mr. W. Frye Parker, Mr. George Aitken, Mr. Tobias Matthay, and Mr. George Oakey.

The chief pianoforte prize, a gold medal, was won by Miss Dorothea G. Carter, whose rendering of Chopin's Nocturne in F was highly praised by Mr. Matthay. In the choral society competition the first position was awarded by Mr. Riseley to the Epping Choral Society for its performance of Leslie's "Lullaby of Life" and "Love and Summer" (John E. West), under the conductorship of Mr. D. W. H. Penrose. It is impossible to give the other results in detail. It must suffice to state that the competitions brought forward many evidences of sound teaching and natural ability. There can be no doubt that the scheme thoroughly fulfils its announced object, viz.:—

"To offer inducements to the diligent study or practice of music; to bring young and talented musicians to the front; to enable competitors to trace their weaknesses or observe their strong points by comparing each other's performances; to interest the public in good music and local resources; and to bind together all who love music, whether as teachers, conductors, singers, or players, for the common purpose of advancing the musical art."

At the concert which closed the proceedings Mrs. Mary Davies distributed the prizes, and made an excellent speech on the benefits to be derived from the competition, and she strongly advocated the study of old national songs. She remarked that the benefits of a competition like this are quite equal to those who have competed, whether they win prizes or not. The study of music in itself is beneficial for itself, and the acquirement of the knowledge which has been necessary for these competitions is in itself both a help and mental enjoyment which can never be taken away.

The competitions are managed by a strong local musical council, which includes most of the best known music teachers in the district. Mr. J. S. Curwen, who originated the scheme, is the chairman, and Mr. J. Graham is the secretary and manager. The universal testimony is that the business was, as heretofore, admirably administrated.

CHORAL COMPETITIONS AT LEEDS.

The average Yorkshireman's love of sport, and of lifting his voice in a rousing chorus, is notorious, and in the musical competitions that are so popular in the West Riding he finds an outlet for both his artistic and his sporting proclivities. These competitions may not, it is true, represent the highest ideal possible, for in too many cases they imply an expenditure of much time in polishing up the details of music that is not of the most edifying kind, often to the neglect of general musicianship and the exclusion of more important works. It may be doubted, too, whether the aim of outdoing one's neighbours is the highest conceivable motive in practising an art, and, as a matter of fact, experience shows that a certain amount of ill feeling is too often engendered by these competitions.

In some cases, no doubt, safeguards are introduced which avoid, or at least minimise the evils to which we have pointed. The Westmorland Festivals, for instance, and others that have followed the lines laid down by Miss Wakefield, are so regulated that their influence seems wholly for good. These are, however, for the most part in country districts; in the large manufacturing towns the conditions and the people are different, and it is far more difficult to ensure a wholesome feeling and artistic aims.

A distinct advance in the right direction was noticeable in the competition held at Leeds on March 31, under the rather cumbrous title of "The Yorkshire Choral Challenge Shields Competition." There was an advance in the test pieces chosen; though they still left room for improvement. The tendency one is inclined to deprecate is towards choosing music that is not distinguished from an artistic standpoint, but is apparently constructed chiefly with a view to displaying to the greatest advantage the virtuosity of the singers, and this tendency was not absent from some of the pieces chosen; though, on the other hand, compositions by Schumann, C. H. Lloyd, and Goss marked a higher level, which it is a pleasure to recognise. It was also satisfactory to find that all the test pieces were set by the committee, for the common practice of leaving the choice wholly, or in part, to the competitors has often resulted in the anomaly of a choir gaining a prize for its clever performance of music the selection of which shows the unworthiness of the competitors. Most of all did the committee show their discretion in securing as judge Dr. McNaught, whose unsurpassed experience and perfect independence give his decisions a very high value.

It need hardly be said that there was some wonderfully good singing. Tone, gradations, precision, and in many cases a genuine appreciation of what expression really means, characterised the performances, and Dr. McNaught had to confess the difficulty he experienced in differentiating the precise merits of choirs so nearly equal in ability. Indeed, it is a curious fact that in each of the two competitions—one for mixed, the other for male voices—the narrow boundary of a single mark separated the first from the second choir. The easiest method of giving some idea of the high and even standard attained is to give the judge's awards, which were as follows:—

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Leeds Prize Musical Union (conductor, Mr. A. H. Ashworth), 111 marks out of a possible 120; York Male-voice Choir (Mr. Child), 110; Middlesbrough Apollo (Mr. Morgan), 109; Morley Vocal Union (Mr. S. Smith), 102; Armley Choral Society (Mr. Pickard), 101; Dewsbury Club and Institute (Mr. Batley), 100; Harrogate Prize Glee Society (Mr. Morley), 100; Darlington Male-voice Choir (Mr. Bethell), 81.

MIXED CHOIRS.

Leeds Blenheim (Mr. Ashworth), 107; Armley Choral Society (Mr. Pickard), 106; Wortley Harmonic (Mr. Rinder), 103; Ossett Prize Vocal Union (Mr. Taylor), 101; Golcar Baptist (Mr. Stead), 99; Saltaire Prize Choir (Mr. Ashworth), 99; Todmorden St. Cecilia (Mr. Walmsley), 95.

The result is that both the challenge shields, highly ornamental productions in silver, go for the next year to choirs conducted by Mr. A. H. Ashworth, of Leeds, to whose ability as a trainer this affords the strongest possible testimony.

MUSIC COMPETITIONS AT DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN.

The eighth annual music competitions, held as a branch of the work of the Isle of Man Fine Arts Industrial Guild, took place at Douglas, on March 21 and 22. There were about 120 entries, twenty-eight of which were choirs variously constituted. The prizes offered were generally of small value in cash; the honour of winning and the educational effect of the competition being sufficient stimulus. The first prize in the village choir section was secured by Port Erin, under Mr. Arthur Cregeen; and in the principal choral society section the Rushden Choir, under the same conductor, came out first. Several choirs under the direction of Miss M. L. Wood, a lady whose exertions on behalf of music in the island have been most beneficial, won good places. On the whole, the proceedings showed that there is considerable musical ability and activity in this isolated community. On the evening of the 22nd a concert was given in the Palace, which was attended by about 4,000 persons. Many of the prize-winners performed, but one of the chief attractions was the appearance as a singer of the Hon. Alice M. Henniker, the daughter of Lord Henniker, the Governor, who was also present. The Manx people were delighted to find that Miss Henniker had a beautiful voice, and that she sang so attractively. Mr. Harry Wood, one of the most esteemed professors on the island, brought his small orchestra, which contributed several popular pieces to the programme. The secretary of the competitions was Mrs. Laughton, a lady who brought tact and much ability to the organisation of a difficult enterprise. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, April 9.

We are in the last week of the opera. The Philharmonic and Boston Symphony concerts have come to an end. But one more opera concert remains to be given. Paderewski, Hambourg, and their European confrères are working their way across country from the West and will soon follow the opera singers who have already begun to flit London-wards. The end of a musical season full of activity is in sight, and the incidents that crowd forward in the retrospect of the last month are so many that I despair of marshalling them in the space allowed for this record. I shall confine myself to those of real pith and moment. When the doors of the Metropolitan Opera House shall close next Saturday night Mr. Grau will have given one hundred and one representations of thirty operas. Of these representations thirty-six were in German, thirty-six in Italian, and twenty-nine in French; eighteen performances of the last class were divided evenly between "Carmen" and "Faust," from which fact my British readers will readily conclude that the regnant influence was that of Madame Calvé. The last fortnight of the season brought forward the only work which proved itself capable of inducing a rivalry with "Carmen" and "Faust"; it was the "Magic Flute" in Italian, with all the leading women singers in the cast except Mesdames Calvé and Schumann-Heink, and with the most sumptuous stage furniture that had ever been seen in the opera here, the Munich models being followed. It was found profitable to set it down for five of the last twelve representations, and had it been possible to produce it earlier in the season the latter would have been down on the historical account books to the credit of Mozart instead of Bizet.

Notable things are preparing in the choral field at Cincinnati for the festival concerning which I hope to send you an account from the seat of war itself next month; but notable things have also been done here. The mysterious influence which prompted a revival of Bach's colossal B minor Mass a few weeks ago in Berlin was also felt here, and within a space of ten days the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and the Oratorio Society of New York performed the work in a manner that warmed the hearts of the entire Bach congregation in America. The performance in Bethlehem was the more remarkable of the two in one respect. The community is a small one in the coal region of our neighbouring State, and is chiefly remarkable for its steel industry, though a portion of the town (South Bethlehem) is the seat of Lehigh University. The original settlers were Moravians, and, true to the instincts and training of centuries, they planted a love for music and learning along with their first institutions in the wilderness. Haydn's chamber music was played there as early as 1795, and his "Creation" sung in 1811; and when the oratorio was given for the first time in Philadelphia the trombone players had to be enlisted in Bethlehem. The Bach Choir numbers only eighty voices and was organised two years ago. Since then it has devoted all its time to a study of the Mass and sung it in its entirety, the choristers so firmly fixed in their saddles that the conductor, J. Fred. Wolle, a native of Bethlehem, but of Munich education, was able to conduct the work from the organ bench, in the manner of the old Leipzig cantor himself. The performance of the Oratorio Society of New York was rendered more impressive by the larger mass of singers (between 300 and 400) and the excellence of the orchestral part; but five numbers were omitted, Mr. Frank Damrosch, the conductor, wisely concluding not to test the patience of the audience so severely as he had at first intended. In Bethlehem the first two grand divisions were given in the afternoon and the remainder in the evening.

But this was not Mr. Damrosch's only achievement. With his Musical Art Society, consisting of fifty professional singers, and the People's Choral Union, consisting of eight hundred amateurs, he gave a concert on March 15 which was in every way remarkable. The compositions in which the two organisations co-operated were Palestrina's "Improperia" and "Gloria Patri," and Bach's "Trauerode." The Palestrina music was sung antiphonally between the small choir on the platform and the large choir in the gallery of the Carnegie Hall; in the Bach music the large choir sang the chorales. The effect was sublime. Since then the Musical Art Society has given a concert in Boston and won the admiration of the cognoscenti in that home of choral culture. On March 25 the German Liederkranz successfully gave a performance of César Franck's "Béatitudes," the only one that the work has received in the United States. The conductor of the Liederkranz is Dr. Paul Klengel, who came here two years ago from Leipzig, where it also fell to his lot to introduce Franck's work.

The Philharmonic Society ended its fifty-eighth season of uninterrupted activity on April 7 with a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, in the Finale of which it had the co-operation of the combined Apollo and Rubinstein Clubs. The Society gave the work for the first time in May, 1846, and has repeated it in public ten times since (not counting the open rehearsals). Twice it has felt obliged to omit the Ode to Joy after announcement—once after the assassination of President Lincoln, in 1865, and again on the death of Anton Seidl, conductor of the Society, in April, 1898. Herr Hofrath Ernst von Schuch, first conductor at the Royal Opera in Dresden, has paid us a flying visit and conducted four concerts and a performance of "Lohengrin," at the Metropolitan Opera. There were indications that the entire purpose of his visit, under the management of Mr. Grau, was not summed up in such a brief and inconsequential activity, but no other results are to be recorded as yet. Dohnányi also came over at the eleventh hour, though that was not unexpected, as he had been engaged chiefly to accompany the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its March visits to New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Brooklyn. He has remained, however, and is giving a series of pianoforte recitals, as well as chamber concerts, with the Kneisel Quartet. He has made a fine impression.

LONDON CONCERTS, &c.

Mr. George A. Clinton's second Chamber concert took place on the 2nd ult., at Queen's (Small) Hall. The programme opened with Mozart's little known Quartet in E flat for oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, with orchestral accompaniment, a somewhat weak specimen of this composer's genius, but possessing some effective passages for the solo instruments, which were rendered in a finished manner, the orchestral portion being played from the pianoforte arrangement made by Robert Stark. Much interest was attached to the first production of a Suite in G minor for clarinet and pianoforte by Mr. William Y. Hurlstone, whose career at the Royal College of Music and previous compositions have been exceptionally promising. If the suite does not add to the reputation the composer had already acquired, it is a pleasing addition to the limited number of effective works for this combination of instruments. It comprises four movements: a somewhat rhapsodically inclined "Ballade," a meditative "Croon" song, a bright and pleasing Intermezzo, and a Scherzo, instinct with light-hearted gaiety, with a rhythmic suggestiveness of Irish humour and vivacity. This movement caused the suite to make a very favourable impression, and the executants, who were Mr. Clinton and the composer, were several times recalled to the platform. Mr. Plunket Greene sang an excellent selection of songs, and the evening concluded with Beethoven's Septet, peculiarly appropriate on this day, as it was the hundredth anniversary of its first performance at a concert given by its composer in Vienna.

An interesting example of melo-drama by Franz Schubert was brought forward by Mr. Charles Fry at one of his entertaining recitals which took place on March 29 at Steinway Hall. This was a pianoforte accompaniment to a fragment entitled "Abschied von der Erde" ("Farewell to the Earth"), from Pratobevera's poem "Der Falke" ("The Falcon"). The words (English version by F. Weber) express confidence in the happiness of the Christian's future state, and the music is simple and unpretending. A second novelty of similar character was Ingoldsby's "Confession," which has been supplied with illustrative music by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. This is one of a series of six, five of which are published and well merit the attention of reciters. Mr. Fry's elocutionary skill, combined with his musical feeling, enabled him to avail himself to the full of the increased effectiveness imparted to the text by the accompaniment, which was skilfully played by Dr. Yorke Trotter. Bemberg's music for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte to Murger's poem "La Ballade du Désespéré" was well rendered by Mr. E. O'Brien, Mr. F. G. Howard, and Miss Maggie Connal. Miss Mary Willis was the vocalist and Mr. Fry gave a most impressive delivery of the words. In the purely dramatic part of the recital Mr. Fry had, as usual, the valuable aid of Miss Olive Kennett.

Of the two vocal recitals given by Madame Blanche Marchesi at St. James's Hall, on March 27 and the 3rd ult. respectively, most interest was attached to the latter, owing to the programme including excerpts from César Franck's oratorio "Ruth," a work now well nigh forgotten, but which, on its production on January 4, 1846, at a concert given by its composer at the Paris Conservatoire, may be said to have established his reputation. The pieces selected were the trios "Adieu" and "Mes filles," and the duet "Moi, je vous suis," Madame Marchesi being assisted by her pupils, Miss Gertrude Calvert and Miss Marguerite Sutherland, the former possessing a fine voice of much power. Another interesting feature was Jensen's song cycle "Dolorosa," one of the most dramatic examples of this widely esteemed song-writer. A new song, entitled "En dormant," by J. Blumenthal, deservedly met with much favour.

The pupils of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind assisted at a concert at the Crystal Palace, on the 4th ult., in aid of the American hospital ship "Maine." Two pieces were specially composed for the occasion. Mr. Carl von Hardebeck, an old student, submitted a neatly constructed motet, "Speed on, good ship," sung by the College choir with point and general finish. The other novelty was a Polonaise for pianoforte and orchestra by Master Leonard Pegg, a present student at the College. In playing the effective solo part the composer evinced taste and facility. Gade's "Spring" Fantasia was excellently rendered. Madame Albani and Mr. Watkin Mills sang, the latter achieving marked success in Eaton Faning's patriotic air "Obedient to the call." Mr. August Manns conducted.

At the Congregational Church, Edith Grove, West Chelsea, Gounod's "Redemption" was performed, at a special musical service, on the 11th ult. The choir, numbering about eighty voices, was well balanced and sang excellently, especially in the chorus "Unfold" and the "Hymn of the Apostles," and the small orchestra, led by Mr. George Wilby, did good service, aided by Mr. Wilfred Layton at the organ. The solo parts were well sung by Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Mabel Evershed, Miss Clara Dilley, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Alfred J. Layton, and the performance was ably conducted by Mrs. Layton. It may be mentioned that the work had been previously given under the same direction, but with a partly different cast of soloists, at the Westbourne Park Institute, on March 21.

At West Kensington Park Wesleyan Church, on Good Friday, a miscellaneous concert of sacred music was given (as during the past twenty years), preceded by a short service consisting of hymns and suitable collects. The choir, numbering forty voices, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Barratt West, contributed several of the best known choruses from the oratorios, including Handel's "Hallelujah," and some anthems. The soloists were Mrs Barratt West, Madame Eliza Thomas, Mr. Frank Tebbutt, and Mr. Albert West. Miss Edie Reynolds was the solo violinist, and Miss E. G. Allen and Miss Violet Windeatt were the solo pianists. Mr. Barrier presided at the organ and Miss Ellen L. West acted as accompanist.

The Royal Artillery Band gave one of its excellent concerts, under the skilful conductorship of Cavaliere L. Zavertal, at Queen's Hall, on the 6th ult. The Symphony was Haydn's No. 9 in C minor, the bright spirit of which was effectively reproduced—the melodious slow movement and minuet being particularly well rendered. The "Korrigane" Ballet Suite of Widor was played with a refinement that would have recommended the pleasant little movements even had they possessed but scanty merit of their own. Full justice was also done to Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem "Phaéton." Smart's Festive March in D and Bazzini's "Saul" Overture were other interesting features of a selection that was as varied as it was acceptable.

A successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Athalie," preceded by "Hear my Prayer," was given at Islington Presbyterian Church, on March 29, the choruses being sung by a choir numbering nearly seventy voices. The solos were sustained by Misses M. Snell, A. Potter, Grace Frampton, and L. Hall, and Mr. J. Dickson was the reader of the verses. Mr. J. Sommerled Macdonald ably presided at the organ, and the organ accompaniments were supplemented by harp (Miss Colchester), trumpets, and tympani (Mr. Scruton). Mr. Harold E. Mackinlay (organist and choirmaster of the church) conducted.

A new sacred cantata, entitled "Soldiers of the Cross," by Mr. Valentine Hemery, libretto by Mr. Wilfrid Mills, was performed for the first time, on the 3rd ult., at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell. The choir, numbering sixty voices, sang with spirit and precision, and there was an efficient orchestra of thirty players. The solo parts were undertaken by Madame Valentine Hemery, Mr. W. H. Bailey, Miss A. Smith, Mr. Robert Debonnaire, and Mr. G. G. Roberts; the composer, who conducted, was heartily applauded at the conclusion.

Mr. H. A. Keyser gave a concert on the 4th ult., at Steinway Hall. The most important work from his pen was a Quintet in C for two violins, viola, violoncello, and horn, which proved to be well written, possessing melodious themes, tersely developed, and being pleasing and healthy music. Mr. Keyser, however, made a more favourable impression as a song-writer, those entitled "What shall I do for my love" and "My heart is heavy" being very expressive and artistic, qualities which were fully realised by the singer, Miss Esmé Atherden.

A distinguishing feature of Madame Frickenhaus's concert, on the 4th ult., at St. James's Hall, was the performance of Brahms's second set of "Liebeslieder-Walzer" (Op. 65), which were admirably interpreted by Miss Fillunger, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Laurence Rea, with the concert-giver and Mrs. Gregory Hast at the pianoforte. Madame Frickenhaus, in her selection of pianoforte solos, avoided hackneyed works, and presented a number of short and little known pieces, which were all played with notable neatness and musical intelligence.

The Bow and Bromley Choir, under Dr. McNaught, gave a performance of selections from "Samson" (Handel) and of "The Banner of St. George" (Elgar), at the People's Palace, on the 7th ult. The principals were Madame Kate Cove, Mr. Branscombe, and Mr. Charles Knowles; and Miss Gwynne Kimpton led the orchestra. Mr. Morrow was the trumpeter in "Let the bright seraphim," which was encored. The choir performed "The Messiah" at the Bow Hall, on Good Friday.

SUBURBAN CONCERTS.

Crouch Hill.—The Holly Park Sunday School Choir, on March 28, gave an excellent performance of J. L. Roeckel's cantata "The Hours," accompanied by an efficient orchestra. The "Queens" of the hours were taken by the Misses Daisy Crane, Leila Import, Annie Luckett, and Grace Poole, all of whom sang with much taste and in good style, and the choruses were highly appreciated. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, selections by the orchestra forming a prominent feature, and including two of Cowen's English Dances and two of Coleridge-Taylor's Characteristic Dances. Among the choruses rendered by the choir special mention should be made of Henry Smart's anthem "The Lord is my Shepherd." The concert was conducted by Mr. Herbert W. Avery.

Croydon.—The terminal orchestral concert of the Croydon Conservatoire of Music was given on the 6th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. Mr. Taylor has had charge of the string orchestra for some two or three years past, and the excellent results which are obtained are entirely due to his careful and thorough methods of work. The programme included Walzer, Op. 39 (Brahms); Serenade, Op. 48 (Tschaïkowsky), which was particularly well played and created much enthusiasm; short pieces by Liszt and Saint-Saëns; and Grieg's Suite, Op. 40. The vocalists were B. Maud Justican and Eleanor G. Gibbs, both students of the Conservatoire.

Ealing.—Gounod's "Redemption" was performed by the Choral Society, in the Victoria Hall, on the 3rd ult. The solo parts were ably rendered by Miss Florence Hughes, Miss N. Richards, Mr. William Davies, and Mr. Daniel Price; Mrs. Harrington and Miss Jessie Hughes assisting in the quartets. There was a full orchestra (led by Mr. S. Dean Grimson), composed largely of members of the newly formed Ealing Orchestral Society, with professional assistance, and, with the chorus, numbering altogether 180. An excellent rendering of the work was given under the direction of Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester.

East Finchley.—The Muswell Hill and East Finchley Choral and Orchestral Society gave a concert on March 29, at the New Lecture Hall. Its chief feature was Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," which was sung with great spirit and due appreciation of the poem and its musical setting. Mr. Whitworth Mitton was deservedly encored for his rendering of "Onaway! awake, beloved!" The rest of the programme consisted of selections from "The Messiah," various orchestral pieces, including the Overture to "Oberon" (Weber), the Minuet and Allegro from Haydn's Symphony in D, and the Rondo Capriccio in B minor (Mendelssohn) for pianoforte and orchestra, the solo part being excellently played by Miss Challen, the accompanist to the Society. The orchestra, which consisted chiefly of amateurs, was efficient, and the whole performance was admirably conducted by Mr. Allen Gill.

Wallington.—A performance of Handel's "Samson" was given by the Choral Society, on March 29, in the Parish Hall. The solos were in the competent hands of Miss Annie Swinfen, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Edwin Cason, and Mr. Frank Ward. The choruses, on the whole, were exceedingly well rendered, showing careful training at the hands of the conductor, Mr. Edward Groocock—the most noteworthy being "To man, God's universal law" and "Fixed in His everlasting seat." Mr. T. Hill led a small orchestra of strings, and Mr. Arthur Dutton presided at the pianoforte. The performance was one of the most successful ever given by the Society.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A year ago we mentioned the dread with which the musical public here contemplated the sale of the Ulster Hall. It is now, unfortunately, an accomplished fact. This fine hall, which several generations of the greatest artists have pronounced almost perfect in its acoustic qualities, has been sold and its fate hangs in the balance. There is only too much reason to fear that in a short time it will, as a temple of music, be only a memory.

On the 2nd ult. the Belfast Ladies' Orchestra gave a concert in the Ulster Music Hall, and showed how much they had improved under Dr. Koeller's training. Their best piece was a beautiful suite by Glazounow. Miss Furnkranz, a young lady connected by birth with Belfast, but trained in Italy, sang two songs in an intensely dramatic style, but the production of her beautiful voice is clouded by a constant vibrato which is by no means pleasing.

Dr. Walker's fifth and final concert of the season was given in the same hall, on the 5th ult., and the programme was selected from Norwegian, Italian, and French composers of the nineteenth century, including Grieg, Piatti, Sgambati, De Beriot, Gounod, and Saint-Saëns. The solo players were Dr. Walker himself (pianoforte), Miss W. Burnett (violin), and Herr Bast (violoncello). The concert concluded with Saint-Saëns's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, the violin part played by M. Schilsky.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Mr. Halford brought his third series of Orchestral concerts to a close on March 27, when the Town Hall was fairly filled. The programme comprised but two pieces—Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony and Tschaïkowsky's Suite in G (Op. 55). The first formed the culminating point of the survey of the history and development of the symphony as the special feature of the series. The vocal soloists were Miss Fillunger, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Wright Beaumont, and Mr. Wilfred Cunliffe. The chorus was made up of Mr. Halford's choir and the chorus of the Stourbridge People's Concert Society. It is worthy of note that this Society has sung the choruses in Beethoven's work three times within the last twelve months. Though the high pitch was in use, the chorus showed no sign of fatigue, and the performance throughout was really fine. The Tschaïkowsky Suite was given in brilliant style, especially the variations and pompous Finale. Mr. Halford received an ovation at the close.

On Tuesday, the 3rd ult., a complimentary concert was given to Mr. Fred. Ward, one of our leading violinists, who has been disabled by a long illness. All concerned in the concert gave their services, Miss Fanny Davies appearing as pianist; Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist; Miss Carrie Siviter, vocalist; and Mr. Wymark Stratton, accompanist. There was an orchestra of eighty, under the able direction of Mr. Halford, and the programme included Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, the Second Pianoforte Concerto of Saint-Saëns, the Andante Religioso for strings, harp (Mr. C. Collier), and organ, of Scharwenka, and vocal pieces. The concert was well attended and was a great success.

Mr. D. Ffrench Davis held his annual harp festival in the Town Hall, on Saturday, the 7th ult., when a popular programme drew a large audience.

On Good Friday the Midland Musical Society gave its annual performance of Gounod's "Redemption," in the Town Hall. The vocal principals were Miss Beatrice Vernon, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Mr. William Molineaux, Mr. Percy Taunton, and Mr. William Bennett. Mr. H. M. Stevenson conducted. The choir was reduced in numbers, but better balanced than heretofore. There was an overflowing attendance.

Patriotic concerts continue to be given. On the 2nd ult. there was one at the Midland Institute, when a number of national airs were sung, and Faning's "Valete" was given with chorus. Mr. Weaver Stephens conducted. In the Town Hall, on the 21st ult., Stanford's "Revenge" and a miscellaneous selection, including Mackenzie's "Britannia" Overture, formed the programme. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted.

On Easter Sunday Gounod's Messe Solennelle, "St. Cecilia," was sung at St. Stephen's Church, Newtown Row. The Mass was given with orchestral accompaniment.

Several suburban concerts deserve a word of notice. On March 27, at the Moseley Institute, Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed, with orchestra, under the direction of Mr. W. Berridge Hicks. The next evening the King's Heath Choral Society gave Stainer's "The Daughter of Jairus" and Cowen's "Rose Maiden," under the conductorship of Mr. J. E. Blurton. On the 10th ult., in King's Norton Parish Church, Gaul's "Israel in the Wilderness" was performed with chorus, organ, and small orchestra. "O gladsome light," from Sullivan's "Golden Legend," was also sung. Mr. Wymark Stratton conducted.

The chorus for the ensuing Festival has now been selected, and the first rehearsal was held in the Masonic Hall, on the 6th ult. The chorus is made up of 110 sopranos, eighty contraltos, eighty tenors, and ninety basses. The male altos are eliminated, so that the higher sections of the choir are now homogeneous in quality. The sopranos are resonant as well as sweet, and the chorus will, it is hoped, uphold the best traditions of the Birmingham Festival. Dr. Swinnerton Heap, the chorus-master, is taking Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" as the first work for study.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Mr. George Gordon's Choir, on March 31, gave a concert at Redland Park Hall, when Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was creditably rendered. The principal vocalists were Miss Southey (a pupil of Miss Anna Williams), Miss Sylvia Tippett, Mr. T. A. Goss, and Mr. W. Thomas (Bristol Cathedral). In a small, but efficient orchestra Mr. F. Watts held the principal first violin and Mr. Gordon directed the performance.

At the annual performance by the Society of St. Michael's Gleemen, held on the 7th ult., there was a large audience. Some favourite glees were nicely given, under the direction of Mr. Wallace J. H. Greenham, and songs were interspersed by Miss Amy Perry and pianoforte solos played by Miss Rose Thomas. In the interval the Rev. J. H. Clay, president, on behalf of the Society, presented Mr. Greenham with a silver-mounted baton.

Assisted by a contingent of the Bristol Choral Society, the City Road Choral Society, on the 9th ult., gave Mendelssohn's "Elijah" in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, the conductor being Mr. C. J. Sprankling. The soloists were Miss Eva Hartshorne (soprano), Miss Clara Aldersley (contralto), Mr. G. W. Brierley, of Bristol Cathedral (tenor), and Mr. H. Miller, of Llandaff Cathedral (bass). Mr. Ernest Lane was the leader. Mr. Miller, who had not before sung in Bristol, made a favourable impression, and the choruses were admirably rendered. In the double quartet Miss Evelyn Gerrish, Mrs. J. Barker, Mr. J. Tuckfield, and Mr. J. Barker were associated with the principal vocalists.

On the 10th ult., in Bath Theatre, Mr. George Riseley conducted a performance in aid of the benevolent fund of the Professional Musicians. An orchestra, composed of upwards of sixty executants from different towns in the West of England and South Wales, played Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the Overture to Wagner's "Meistersingers," and other compositions. Mr. W. Schöttler, leader of the orchestra at Bath Theatre, held the principal first violin. There was a very large attendance.

At the spring concert of the Clevedon Philharmonic Society, on the 19th ult., Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol. The soloists were Miss Ada Stephens, Miss Clara Aldersley, Mr. G. W. Dowling, and Mr. J. A. Basker. There was a small orchestra, in which Mr. F. S. Gardner, of Bristol, held the principal first violin.

The Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society gave a concert on the 20th ult., in the Victoria Hall. Cherubini's Requiem Mass in C minor, Ferdinand Hiller's "A Song of Victory," and a miscellaneous selection were given, Miss Marian Harris being the soloist in Hiller's work. There were about 130 in the choir, and the orchestra, of which Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader, comprised several players from Bristol. Mr. Edward Cook was the conductor.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The concluding evening concert of the Dublin Orchestral Society was given on the 9th ult. Signor Esposito played Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto magnificently. Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and Saint-Saëns's "Rouet d'Omphale" were finely played by the orchestra, and Haydn's Symphony in B flat evoked a most spontaneous outburst of enjoyment on the part of the audience.

Bach's Passion music ("St. Matthew") was given in St. Patrick's Cathedral, during the evening services in Holy Week. The solos were taken by members of the choir.

A really magnificent series of performances was given by Mr. Vincent O'Brien's school choirs, assisted by a number of tenors and basses, specially engaged, at St. Saviour's Church, Dominic Street, during Holy Week. At Tenebræ, Palestrina's and Vittoria's responses were sung, and several other early compositions. A Mass by Vittoria, "Quarti Toni," was sung on Holy Thursday, with a beautiful motet, "O Sacrum Convivium," by Ludovico Viadana, the famous choirmaster of the Cathedral of Fano in Urbino, circa 1600.

On Easter Sunday Palestrina's Mass, "Ascendo ad Patrem," for five voices, was given; and a motet by Aichinger, "Regina Cœli," and "O Salutaris Hostia," by Pierre de la Rue, were also sung. A "Tantum Ergo," for men's voices, by Palestrina, concluded the musical celebrations. The music was admirably sung throughout the week, and on Sunday reached a degree of perfection very seldom attained. The revival of these splendid sixteenth century strains is one of the most remarkable achievements in music here. It would be difficult to praise too highly the beautiful rendering of the music by Mr. O'Brien's choirs. They achieved an undoubted success in a department of the art which, a few years ago, was not far removed from being a byword of mediocrity and carelessness.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The annual performance of "The Messiah," in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, took place, as usual, on Good Friday afternoon. For eighteen consecutive years Dr. Hill has occupied the conductor's seat at these popular gatherings; but his lamented death made a change necessary this year. Happily his coadjutor, Dr. Bunnett, who had always presided at the organ, is no novice at conducting, and thus could at once step into the vacant place. Under his baton a very good performance was given. The soloists were Miss Bertha Rossow, Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. Murray Rumsey, and Mr. Robert Grice. The Festival choir was responsible for the choruses and the Philharmonic Society's band supplied the accompaniments. Mr. R. Lowne presided at the organ.

A more than usually successful performance of J. F. Barnett's tuneful cantata "The Ancient Mariner" was given in the Schoolroom attached to St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich, on the 3rd ult. The solo vocal quartet comprised Mrs. F. A. Smith, Miss Annie White, Mr. S. Hemmings, and Mr. F. A. Davies, who gave the solo and concerted numbers with considerable fire and expression. The choral body was made up of members of the choir and congregation, and, in spite of numerical weakness in the tenors, the choruses went well, under the careful beat of Mr. R. Lowne, organist of the church. The accompaniments were confined to a pianoforte and harmonium, admirably played by Miss Ethel White and Mr. Walter Lain.

An interesting feature in the Easter services at Norwich Cathedral was the unveiling of a brass tablet erected to the memory of the late Dr. Zechariah Buck, who was connected with the Cathedral as chorister-boy and organist for seventy years. To many who remember Dr. Buck's unswerving devotion to the duties which he so well performed, it has been a matter of regret that so long a time since his death (twenty-one years) has been allowed to elapse before some record of his faithful work has been erected. To Mr. F. G. Kitton, the compiler of the biography of the deceased organist, must be awarded the honour of initiating the movement so pleasantly completed on Easter Tuesday.

The sacred cantata "The Daughter of Moab," written by Lewis S. Jones and Isaac Andrew, was given by the Sprowston (an outlying suburb of Norwich) Choral Society, on the 5th ult. Although a comparatively young Society, it numbers about fifty voices and a small string band, and, under the conductorship of Mr. R. Parkerson, is doing useful work. The soloists were also local residents, comprising Miss Overbury, Miss Muskett, Miss Adcock, Mr. G. Robertson, and Mr. R. Kirk, and their efforts, as well as those of the members generally, deserve honourable mention.

The Lowestoft Musical Union, conducted by Mr. H. D. Flowers, was responsible for a concert given on the 5th ult., on behalf of the Transvaal War Fund, which richly deserved the large patronage accorded to it. Mrs. Linwood Watson and Mr. J. H. Brockbank were the principal vocalists, while Mr. Coote Suggit and Mr. F. Seago contributed violin and clarinet solos. The band and chorus gave a spirited rendering of Sir Frederick Bridge's setting of Kipling's "Ballad of the Clampherdown." Dr. F. E. Gladstone's "A wet sheet and a flowing sea" and Mackenzie's popular chorus "The Empire Flag" were also included in the programme.

The Downham Market Choral Society's second concert this season was given on March 29, conducted by Mr. G. H. Harvey, when Parry's "Song of darkness and light" was the chief feature. Miss Laura Eagland, Mr. H. W. Hart, and Mr. Herbert Hilton as vocalists, with Mr. T. E. Gatehouse (violin), Mr. G. Pywell (violoncello), and Mr. A. H. Cross (pianoforte), contributed solos, which added to the enjoyment of a large audience.

Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given in the Presbyterian Church at Ipswich and at Hunstanton, on the 11th ult., and also at Wymondham on Good Friday evening.

The Felixstowe Choral Society closed its eighth season, on the 18th ult., with a highly creditable performance of Handel's "Samson." The band and chorus numbered about 100 performers, the soloists being Miss Marie Roberts, Miss I. Bowers, Mr. S. Masters, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. J. T. Palmer conducted, and a large audience frequently testified their appreciation.

On the 20th ult. the King's Lynn Musical Society gave a spirited performance of "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," under the conductorship of Mr. A. H. Cross, Mr. Henry Franckiss singing the tenor solo. Messrs. J. Pratt and W. O. Jones played the accompaniment on two pianofortes in place of the orchestra. The miscellaneous second part included violin solos by Miss Edie Reynolds, and the choir sang Stevens's "Cloud-capt towers," Benet's "All creatures now are merry," and a new part-song, "Music, thou queen of heaven," written specially by their conductor.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On the 6th ult., according to annual custom, the Bach-disposed people of Edinburgh wended their way to St. Mary's Cathedral to hear the "Matthew" Passion. Mr. Collinson had, as before, the combined choirs of the Cathedral for his chorus; but on this occasion he dispensed with the orchestra in favour of an organ accompaniment. The gain was mainly to be measured by the fact that the Cathedral organ is better and more completely under the organist's control than the orchestras he has hitherto been able to gather; the loss, especially in the solo accompaniments and obbligati, was immeasurable. The choruses were sung with abundant spirit and due expression. The difficult task allotted to the Narrator was again in the hands of Mr. Gledhill, who has so often shown how fully he enters into the spirit of the music. The choristers now know the work thoroughly and evidently appreciate it, thanks to Mr. Collinson's unwearied exertions, and an ever-growing circle of the public is being educated to know and appreciate it also.

Mr. Kirkhope's Choir gave its annual concert in the Music Hall, on the 2nd ult., when the works chosen for performance were Schumann's "Pilgrimage of the Rose" and Mackenzie's "Bride." The choruses showed no falling off in the superb qualities of the choir, and alike in the rousing wedding music, the more pathetic strains, the flowing music in the first chorus, and the dirgelike closing chorus in the "Bride," Mr. Kirkhope's carefully trained singers commanded the enthusiastic approval of a large audience. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Edna Thornton, and Messrs William Green and Ford Waltham. A capable orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Sons, provided a careful, if not an inspiring accompaniment. Mr. Kirkhope, who conducted, was most warmly applauded.

On the 11th ult. the "St. Cecilia," a new Amateur Orchestral Society, gave its first concert in the Queen Street Hall. The band numbers about forty members and the conductor is Mr. G. W. Crawford.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The most notable concert of the fag-end of our short musical season was that given by the Amateur Orchestral Society on March 29—the last of this Society's series. It was in every way creditable to the conductor, Mr. W. T. Hoeck, and his large band of ladies and gentlemen, who were assisted by Herr Georg Liebling, the pianist.

While choral music has not suffered less than orchestral and pianoforte recitals from the preoccupation of Glasgow, it has shown remarkable vitality in the smaller towns of the West of Scotland. Several new societies have been started this season, in the newer communities more especially, and give promise of most praiseworthy activity. The youngest of these has just been formed at Old Kilpatrick, in a district which has grown enormously through industrial development of recent years. Cambuslang Choral Society has given Bennett's "May Queen" during the past month and Ayr Choral Union the "Creation." "The Messiah" and "Samson" have been produced by the combined music classes of the Young Men's Christian Association in the city.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On Good Friday the Liverpool Musical Society gave, under the direction of Mr. F. H. Crossley and with the assistance of Dr. Peace at the organ, a very successful rendering of Gounod's "Redemption." This was followed, also at St. George's Hall, by selections from "The Messiah," under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society. On March 30 the St. Cecilia Society, of Birkenhead, concluded its season with an open rehearsal of "Elijah," conducted by Mr. J. W. Appleyard. The choral singing was of unusual excellence. Mr. P. H. Ingram conducted at the Philharmonic Hall, on March 27, a performance of the "Creation," the choruses being sung by a numerous and well trained body of singers belonging to the Methodist Choral Union of the city and suburbs. A musical festival of Welsh choirs was held on the 13th ult. Dr. Joseph Parry directed the united force of thirteen choirs, consisting of experienced and intelligent vocalists, when there was a striking display of ability in part-singing. The annual Welsh Psalmody Festival, which took place on the 3rd ult., was a marked success.

At the College of Music Mr. Johannes Weingartner, who is now one of the professional staff of the Institution, gave, on the 3rd ult. with the assistance of his son, Mr. F. Weingartner, his annual concert, at which he introduced two short compositions of his own for the pianoforte. The students' concert on the preceding evening deserves passing mention. Considerable interest locally has been felt in the retirement of Mr. Adolphe Krause from the principalship of the German Institute of Music, which he founded more than forty years ago, and which has done much to promote the systematic and thorough teaching of the pianoforte.

The concerts given by the Sunday Society during the past winter have, it seems, resulted in a deficit, and consequently a call upon the subscribers. Some of the honorary officers were opposed to Mr. W. I. Argent's direction as too ambitious, but at the recent annual meeting his energetic policy was endorsed by an overwhelming majority of the members, and he has been continued in office.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The extremely gratifying display, in the closing week of March, of the result of the year's work at our Royal College of Music has led to a large accession of fresh students for the ensuing session; and the Principal has reason to be gratified by the result of his exertions in and for the Institution over which he presides. The fund for aiding the most deserving pupils to continue their studies for an extra year has benefited considerably from the proceeds of the admirable chamber concerts, which Mr. Brodsky generously continues to devote to the encouragement of really promising talent. Miss Webster, after holding the Hallé scholarship during the last twelve months and recently playing with distinction the great Beethoven Sonatas (Op. 106 and 111), has been deservedly elected to a position among the teaching staff of the College.

The progress of the Hallé concerts has also been most marked. The increase of expense attending the doubling of the wood-wind, and the general enlargement of the band, has been more than met by the augmentation of the subscription list; while the enhanced attractiveness of the orchestra and the frequent introduction of new or unfamiliar works have caused the almost invariable crowding of the unreserved portions of the hall. It is understood that Dr. Richter will, during the coming season, conduct every evening, except on "The Messiah" nights, when the baton will, as heretofore, be wielded by Mr. R. H. Wilson. The choral programme will include Beethoven's Mass in D, as well as a repetition of his Ninth Symphony, Brahms's Requiem, Liszt's "St. Elizabeth," Bach's smaller "Passion" music, and, after a welcome rest of some years, the "Faust" of Berlioz, which should appeal to the lovers of highly coloured strains more freshly than it did when it was so frequently given.

The Saturday evening recitals of Mr. Kendrick Pyne continue to draw audiences of from five to eight hundred really zealous students and play a very important part in our arrangements.

Nowhere in the towns around us is music more encouraged and more keenly enjoyed than about Ashton and Stalybridge. It is gratifying to learn that instrumental art is now receiving increasing attention, and that in such busy manufacturing centres efforts are being zealously made so to cultivate local talent as to render more complete in future the oratorio performances which, during many years, have proved the enthusiasm of the choralists and caused regret that their exertions could not, without ruinous expense, be more efficiently backed. A love of chamber music has also been sufficiently kindled to justify the introduction into the miscellaneous programmes of the more enterprising leaders—such as Mr. G. F. Wrigley and Mr. T. Keighley—of some of the quartets of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Dvorák; while the organ recitals regularly given by Mr. Keighley show not only an excellent skill in performance, but a catholicity of taste and an extensive reading decidedly worthy of imitation.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

One of the most enjoyable, and at the same time one of the most artistically successful concerts of the season, was the performance of Haydn's "Seasons" in its entirety, given by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union in Olympia, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on March 27. Although portions of the "Seasons" have been heard in this locality in recent years, it is doubtful whether the complete work has ever been performed at one concert. It is creditable, therefore, to the authorities of this excellent Society that an opportunity of hearing the work in an unmutilated form should have been given to its patrons. A notable feature of the performance was the remarkably fine rendering of the choruses. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Charles Knowles, than whom a better trio could hardly have been desired. Mr. J. H. Beers was principal first violin and Mr. James M. Preston very ably conducted.

On March 28 the South Shields Choral Society closed a successful season with performances of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and Mendelssohn's "Loreley." Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's work was received with the utmost enthusiasm. The choruses were sung in the most creditable manner, and the beautiful solo, "Onaway! awake, beloved!" entrusted to Mr. William Green, could hardly have been heard to greater advantage. No less creditable was the performance of "Loreley," in which Miss Evangeline Florence was the soloist. The programme included other pieces of a miscellaneous character, among which may be mentioned an Etude for pianoforte by Liszt, which was charmingly played by Miss Theresa Larkin. Mr. M. Fairs conducted with much skill.

The Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. J. E. Jeffries, gave a performance of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on March 29. The soloists were Miss Lily Heenan, Mrs. Vinycomb, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. W. Peacock, all of whom contributed materially to the success of the performance. The choir sang carefully, and the performance as a whole was effective. Mr. J. H. Beers led the orchestra.

On the 2nd ult. Henry Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" was brought to a hearing in the Town Hall, Newcastle, by the Postal Telegraph Choral Society, of which Mr. J. R. Andrews is the conductor. Miss Mollie Gardner, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. W. H. Dawson were responsible for the solos. The work, which was sung to a pianoforte accompaniment, would have gained in effect had the assistance of an orchestra been available.

On Good Friday a portion of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion was given in St. Nicholas Cathedral Church, Newcastle. The solos were sung by members of the choir and Mr. J. E. Jeffries presided at the organ.

On Good Friday also Mr. C. Lee Williams's "Bethany" was given in St. Thomas's Church, Sunderland, under the direction of Mr. George F. Vincent, who presided at the organ. The solos were sung by Miss E. Stephenson, Mr. R. Haswell, and Mr. George Dove.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The season of Miss Cantelo's Chamber concerts was brought to a close on March 22, when the Kruse String Quartet presented a fine programme, including Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor (Op. 131) and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25). Miss Cantelo was at her best in Schumann's Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 105), having as a colleague Herr Kruse; her pianoforte solos were four of Mendelssohn's Lieder, but these were manipulated with great skill and refinement. Herr Kruse's fine technique was admirably exhibited in Bach's "Chaconne," which was boldly rendered.

Nottingham was again privileged to hear Mr. Henry J. Wood discourse on one of the burning questions of the day. The lecture given in the University College on March 28 was entitled the "Human Voice and Musical Pitch." The lecturer traced the history of musical pitch and advocated a scheme of uniformity such as has lately been partially introduced. Mr. Wood contended that the present varieties of pitch arose from a neglect of the natural standard—the ear.

The last concert of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, which took place on March 29, was one to be remembered. Mr. Henry J. Wood had prepared a musical treat for the subscribers. "Samson and Delilah," by Saint-Saëns, was quite new to Nottingham, and though all might not agree about the propriety of adapting opera to the concert platform, few could quit the performance without feelings of pleasure, alike at the interpretation and the selection of the work. The artists were Miss Florence Oliver, and Messrs. Green, Price, Barry, and Dearth, all of whom contributed to the success of the evening.

On March 26, at Derby, Mr. Harold Henry's Orchestral Society brought the season to a conclusion with a concert, in which the orchestra was limited to strings only. Despite this fact an interesting programme was carefully performed. The works produced were culled from such masters as Grieg, Tschaïkowsky, Svendsen, Sitt, Moszkowski, and Bach. The soloists were Miss May Heath (a child vocalist from Birmingham), Mr. Edwin Thorpe (violoncello), Mr. Henry, and Mr. Clay (violin).

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At the second Subscription concert of the Sheffield Musical Union, given on the 3rd ult., a new choral ballad, composed by Dr. Henry Coward and entitled "Tubal Cain," was performed for the first time. The composer has fitted the old poem with a spirited and effective musical setting, the themes being melodious and appropriate, the choral writing vigorous, and the accompaniments picturesque and suggestive. Sung under the composer's vigorous direction and by his own choir, it may be realised that nothing was wanting in the performance, which, indeed, was faultless. At the close the composer was recalled several times. The programme also included Goring Thomas's cantata "The Swan and the Skylark," admirably rendered by chorus, band, and principals; Sullivan's "Say, Watchman"; a selection from "Lohengrin" by the orchestra, and various solos. The principals were Miss Eleanor Coward, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Harry Stubbs, Mr. F. Shimeld, and Mr. W. A. Hamer.

The Sheffield Orchestra made its second appearance on the 5th ult., and so well justified its formation that it is hoped the attempt to establish a permanent professional orchestra in the city will succeed. Directed by Dr. Coward, the members gave a fine performance of Tschaïkowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique" and several other works, including MacCunn's "Land of the Mountain and the Flood," and the Overture, Hungarian March and Dance of Sylphs from Berlioz's "Faust." A lengthy and exhausting programme also contained Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the solo part excellently played by Mr. John Dunn; Elgar's song cycle, "Sea Pictures," sung by Miss Margaret Milward; a selection from Goring Thomas's "Nadeshda," and violin solos by Bach and Paganini. In the execution of this colossal programme the instrumentalists proved alike their ability and endurance.

The Norton Lees Choral Society gave a successful concert on the 6th ult., performing Bridge's "The Flag of England" and Macfarren's "May Day," under the direction of Mr. H. Reynolds. The enterprise and enthusiasm of this excellent Society is worthy of all encouragement, and it is gratifying to find such excellent results as were heard on this occasion. Miss Eva Rich was the soloist.

The Hoyland Common Choral Society gave an excellent performance of the "Hymn of Praise," on the 2nd ult. Directed by Mr. G. M. Coates, the band and chorus played and sang with admirable tone and precision, a large audience cordially recognising these qualities. Mr. G. F. Cawthorne was the organist and Mr. J. H. Parkes led the band.

The Brincliffe Musical Society closed its season with an enjoyable concert, on the 23rd ult. Professor Prout conducted a performance of his Third Symphony, and the programme also included the prelude to "Lohengrin," Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, and other pieces. Mr. J. H. Parkes, the Society's conductor, is to be complimented on his season's work.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On March 20, too late for notice in my last letter, the Stafford Choral Union gave a very fine performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The soloists were Miss Lilian Coomber, Miss Minnie Hackett, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Arthur Barlow; and they were assisted by an excellent orchestra of forty performers, under Mr. Fred. Ward, of Birmingham; while the chorus numbered upwards of 120 members. The whole work was rendered with fine spirit and excellent finish, redounding to the credit of all concerned, and especially of Mr. Herbert Drury, of Derby, who conducted. In the second half of the programme Mr. Fred. Ward gave a superb rendering of the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

The members of the North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society gave their last concert for this season on the 5th ult., in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, with an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's ever-welcome "Elijah." The principals were Miss Florence Lancaster, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The principals, chorus, and band gave an excellent account of themselves. The choral work was particularly fine in "Thanks be to God" and "Be not afraid." Mr. Sherratt presided at the organ and Dr. Heap conducted with that skill and ability which only long experience and familiarity with the work can give.

After Evensong, at St. Mary's Church, Stafford, on Wednesday, the 11th ult., Stainer's "Crucifixion" was sung by the choir, which sustained the creditable performance of last year, when this beautiful work was heard for the first time in Stafford. The solos were effectively sung by Mr. C. Whittle and Mr. W. Ball. The choruses were rendered in a manner which showed how well the choir had been trained by Dr. Taylor, who conducted.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A very successful performance of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" was given by the University College of Wales Musical Society, at Aberystwyth, on March 23, under the conductorship of Mr. David Jenkins, the band being led by Mr. W. F. Hulley, Swansea. The soloists were Miss May John, Miss Olive Marsh, Miss G. Russell, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. David Hughes.

A number of Eisteddfodau were held as usual during Easter in various parts of the Principality and the border counties, the most important being the annual meetings held on Easter Monday at Abergavenny and Mountain Ash. At the former the £100 prize for singing "Thanks be to God" was won by the Builth choir, and at the latter a similar prize for rendering "Descend, ye nine" (Sir Hubert Parry), fell to the Cardiff Choral Society.

Dr. Roland Rogers, Bangor, has been giving two organ recitals, each to crowded audiences, at Wern Congregational Church, Ystalyfera, and Calvaria, Porth, Glamorganshire, on the 12th and 13th ult. respectively. At the latter Miss Clara Williams and Mr. David Hughes contributed vocal solos also.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

LEEDS.

Since my last report the season has practically come to an end, and the musicians, like the youth of Ipswich on a memorable occasion, have "dispersed to cricket." The Leeds Choral Union gave its final concert on March 26, when it contrived to serve two masters by combining in the same programme Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" with Rossini's. It was an interesting object lesson, the moral of which was to be interpreted according to the fancy of the auditor. The large chorus, under Mr. Benton's conductorship, was remarkable chiefly for its excellence of tone, especially in forte passages. Madame Duma was the soprano, and as the contralto, Miss Kirkby Lunn, was prevented from being present, her part was divided between two capable local singers. Mr. Bantock Pierpoint was the bass soloist, and Mr. Brearley, of the Leeds Parish Church choir, was particularly successful in the tenor solos. The Leeds Philharmonic and Subscription concerts have this year been a greater success than ever, and, taking their programmes and performances all round, they deserve to be styled the most uniformly artistic series of concerts we now possess in Yorkshire. Their high artistic level was fully maintained on March 28, when an admirable performance of Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ" was given. The Philharmonic chorus sang with perfect refinement, and the Hallé Orchestra showed exceptional neatness, under the conductorship of Dr. Stanford, who deserves credit for a very finished performance. Madame Duma, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Douglas Powell, and Mr. Andrew Black were the soloists, and Dr. Stanford's very spirited chorus, "Our enemies have fallen," with Mendelssohn's "When Israel out of Egypt came," formed the rest of the programme.

Other musical events may be briefly summarised. On March 22 the last of the "Bohemian" Chamber concerts took place, Smetana's "Aus meinem Leben," with other quartets by Mozart and Beethoven, forming the programme. On March 27 Mr. Edward Lloyd bade farewell to Leeds at one of Messrs. Haddock's concerts, and a Chamber concert was given by Miss Edith Wehner and Miss E. A. Atkinson. In aid of the War Fund the Philharmonic and Symphony Societies joined forces on March 29, when the waving of banners seems to have given an additional charm to the music. The Symphony Society gave its final concert for the season on the 4th ult., when Mozart's "Prague" Symphony was the chief thing in the programme, and tested the orchestra's powers pretty severely, though Mr. Grimshaw deserves praise for his careful conducting. Gounod's "Redemption," given at the Leeds Parish Church, on the 9th ult., was very creditably performed, with purely local forces, and with organ instead of orchestra, skilfully played by Mr. Benton. On the 10th ult. Mr. Edgar Haddock introduced, at one of his Orchestral concerts, Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, which was played with much zeal, but with inadequate results. Mr. Ayre's brilliant performance of Weber's "Concertstück" was one of the best features of the concert.

Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" and Cowen's "Ode to the Passions" formed the programme of the Bradford Festival Choral Society's last concert, on March 23, and both were more than creditably performed under Mr. Cowen's conductorship. The soloists were Miss Mabel Berrey, Mr. H. Stubbs (who took the tenor solos at short notice), and Mr. Dan Price, who was a most efficient Narrator. The Huddersfield Subscription concerts, which have been more conspicuous for variety than artistic excellence, closed with a "Grand Military Concert," on March 27. At Wakefield a thoroughly enjoyable Subscription concert took place on March 29, when Mr. Leonard Borwick was pianist and Mr. Rawdon Briggs violinist. The perfectly artistic and highly finished singing of Miss Elsie Mackenzie was not merely a foil, it was a feature of the concert. The York Musical Society gave, on the 3rd ult., a performance of Haydn's "Creation" that testified strikingly to the advance it has made under the conductorship of Canon Pemberton—better known to musicians as Canon Hudson. As he threatens to leave Yorkshire, and must therefore resign his conductorship of the York Society, this was of the nature of a valedictory event, yet, though there must have been a feeling of regret at the prospective loss of one who has done so much for music in the county, it was satisfactory to feel that he is leaving the Society in a more efficient state than it has been for many years past. The soloists on this occasion were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Andrew Black. Harrogate has been busier than usual in a musical way. On March 23 the Musical Society gave a concert, at which Gade's "Crusaders" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" were contrasted, and were efficiently performed under Mr. C. L. Naylor's conductorship. On March 26 the last of Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings took place, and on March 30 Miss Wehner (soprano) and Miss E. A. Atkinson (pianist), with the help of Mr. Rawdon Briggs as violinist, gave a most admirably arranged programme of chamber music, which failed, however, to attract an audience as large as it deserved.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The production of Racine's Tragedy of "Athalie" with Mendelssohn's music (associated with the play as originally intended) at St. George's Hall, in June next, should prove of great interest, both to those interested in the Drama and in Music. "Mendelssohn's Athalie" is extremely popular with choral societies; but no one has yet had an opportunity of witnessing it in this country in its proper dramatic form, and many of the musical people who may be in London for the Handel Festival will doubtless be glad to avail themselves of such an occasion. Great care is being taken with the production, and many of the costumes will be authentic, valuable assistance having been obtained from the Théâtre Français, and from a well-known Hebrew authority. The music will be performed by a complete orchestra and chorus, under the direction of Dr. Yorke Trotter, and the play will be produced by Mr. Charles Fry.

Royal College of Music.—The following awards were made at the conclusion of the Easter term: Council Exhibitions: Mabel J. Barrons (pianoforte), £12; Lucy C. Barton (singing), £12; Sydney W. Toms (organ), £10; Ifor B. H. James (violoncello), £10; and Sarah E. Davies (singing), £6; Charlotte Holmes Exhibition (£15): Daisy A. Jones (piano); Organ Extemporising Prize (value £3 3s.): Eustace Turner (scholar); The Challen Gold Medal for Pianoforte Playing: Florence Smith (scholar); Henry Leslie (Herefordshire Philharmonic) Prize for Singers (£10): Ivor L. Foster; Elocution Prizes: Emma E. Atherden (scholar), Ralph Courtier-Dutton (scholar), and Mabel A. Bond.

Royal Academy of Music.—The Charles Mortimer Prize has been awarded to Margaret A. Harding (a native of Birmingham). The examiners were Messrs. F. Cellier, Edward German, and G. Jacobi. The Sterndale Bennett Prize has been awarded to Marguerite Elzy (of Malvern). The examiners were Messrs. Albert Fox, Gustav Ernest, and Harvey Löhr. The Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize has been awarded to Marion J. H. White (of London). The examiners were Messrs. Graham P. Moore, Walter Wesché, and E. H. Thorne.

University of Durham.—At the Examinations held in March the following passed the final examination for Mus.B.: Cuthbert Forster, George Leake, Annie Louise Mixer, Thomas William Ritson. The following passed the first examination for Mus.B.: George F. Andrews, William Bradley, Arthur G. Claypole, Albert Edward Cottam, Edmund Osmond Daughtry, Marshal Martin, Richard Henry Mort, John Edward Quayle. The examiners were Dr. Armes (Professor of Music in the University of Durham), Sir J. F. Bridge, and Dr. G. J. Bennett.

The London Sunday School Union organises yearly local competitions amongst Sunday School choirs, and the winners in each local section are afterwards invited to compete again at a central competition. The latter event took place this year at Bishopsgate Street Chapel, on the 3rd ult. The St. Winifrid's Hall choir, from Bermondsey, under Mr. J. Morgan, was awarded the first place by Dr. McNaught, the adjudicator. The singing generally was much above the average.

Signorina Giulia Ravogli has returned to London rom Italy for the season.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Berlin.—The last concert of the season of the Berlin Wagner Verein, under the direction of Herr Richard Strauss, included the first performance of the "Rob Roy" Overture, by Hector Berlioz, an early work of the composer, to which attention has been drawn by its recent publication in the complete edition of his works.——Dr. Richter was the conductor of the Philharmonic concert of March 26, the anniversary of Beethoven's death, when the performances consisted of the "Parsifal" Prelude, followed by the Funeral Dirge, from "Götterdämmerung," and concluding with the Ninth Symphony. Enthusiastic demonstrations, such as are rarely elicited from Berlin audiences, greeted the great conductor at the conclusion of the concert.——On the 10th ult. a one-act opera, "Die Beichte," the music by Ferdinand Hummel, was produced, for the first time, at the Royal Opera, and well received.

Erfurt.—Under the title of "Ein Winter-Märchen," an operatic version of Shakespeare's "A Winter's Tale" was brought out recently at the Stadt-Theater and very favourably received. The composer, Herr Baldwin Zimmermann, who, like most of his contemporaries, is a follower of Wagner, has made some very effective use of the Leitmotif.

Helsingfors.—The Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of M. Robert Kojanus, is about to undertake a concert tour in Germany and Belgium (on its way to the Paris Exhibition) with the exclusive performance of works by national Finnish composers, amongst which those by Jean Sibelius, a rising young musician, will be most numerously represented.

Leipzig.—The first performance of an important new composition, as yet in manuscript, by Enrico Bossi, attracted a very numerous and critical audience at the third Subscription concert of the season, given last month by the Riedel'sche Gesang-Verein, with the co-operation of the Opera and Gewandhaus orchestras. The work is a setting in cantata form, with soprano and baritone solos, of the Latin text, from the Vulgate, of the "Canticum Canticorum," or "Song of Solomon," treated from the point of view of sacred symbolism, and containing some remarkably fine choral and orchestral writing, the style being influenced generally by the sacred compositions of Liszt, more particularly his oratorio "Christus." The impressive solo numbers were well interpreted by Fräulein Dietz, of Frankfort, and Herr Scheidemantel, of Dresden, Dr. Goehler conducting an altogether very fine performance. The composer, who had come specially from Venice, received quite an ovation at the conclusion of the work.

Mayence.—At last month's concert of the Liedertafel the first performance in Germany was included of a setting of the 136th Psalm, by the French composer, Guy Ropartz, who conducted and had the satisfaction of seeing his work most favourably received.——A grand celebration is being organised of the 500th anniversary of the birth of Gutenberg, next month, when the musical performances will include Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" and a cantata specially written for the occasion by Dr. Volbach.

Meiningen.—An interesting concert was given, on the 4th ult., by the Sing-Verein, under the direction of General Musikdirector Steinbach, when the programme included the initial first performance of an oratorio, "Tod und Sieg des Herrn" (Death and Triumph of the Lord), forming part of the remarkable "Christus Mysterium," by Felix Draeseke. The new work, which, though somewhat dramatic in form, is of a truly sacred order, was interpreted with much fervour by all concerned in its production and created a most marked impression. The same concert included the performance of some remarkable symphonic variations on the chorale "Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten," for orchestra and organ, by Georg Schumann, first produced at the meeting of German musicians last year, when, as on the present occasion, they met with very general appreciation.

Moscow.—Under the direction of M. Willem Kes, the Principal of the Moscow Conservatoire, a very fine performance was given recently of "Manfred," with Schumann's music, Dr. L. Wüllner reciting Byron's poem with considerable dramatic effect.

Munich.—A new symphonic poem in three parts, entitled "Barbarossa," by S. von Hausegger, was produced for the first time at one of the "Modern Concerts," given by the Kaim Orchestra, last month, when it attracted general interest and elicited much applause. Several new chamber compositions, including a quintet for wind instruments and a sestet for wind and stringed instruments, by Mirosław Weber, a resident musician of Slavonic extraction, were recently performed and greatly approved of by a critical audience on account of their characteristic melodious and rhythmic qualities and excellent general musicianship.

Paris — Siegfried Wagner was the conductor at one of the recent Châtelet concerts, when a number of his father's works, the "Mephisto Walzer" of his grandfather, Franz Liszt, and his own "Bärenhäuter" Overture were produced. The young artist had every cause to be satisfied with the reception accorded him by a Parisian audience. Another German conductor, Felix Weingartner, directed the performances of the Lamoureux Orchestra on two occasions last month, and aroused much enthusiasm by his readings of Wagnerian excerpts. At the Conservatoire a highly appreciated performance was given recently of Schumann's "Manfred" music, M. Mounet-Sully reciting Byron's poem with great effect.

Stockholm.—A new oratorio by the Swedish composer, P. Stenhammar, entitled "Paulus," was produced for the first time, last month, by the Philharmonic Society, and favourably received, both by the audience and the press. A highly successful performance was also given recently, by the same Society, of Anton Bruckner's oratorio "David."

Vienna.—The first performance of Tschaïkowsky's opera "Iolanthe," the libretto founded upon Henrik Hertz's poem, "King René's Daughter," took place at the Imperial Opera last month. Herr Mahler conducted, and the impression produced by the interesting and poetical work was a very favourable one.——Three musical societies of Vienna are about to proceed to Paris to take part in the Exhibition concerts—viz., the Philharmonic Orchestra, the Maennergesang-Verein, and the Schubert Bund.

Wiesbaden.—Active preparations are on foot for the special performances, during the summer, of Weber's "Oberon," with a completely revised libretto, written at the instigation of the Emperor by Herr Joseph Lauff, and with recitatives, modelled on Weberian themes, by Herr Schlar. The work is being sumptuously mounted, with new scenery and costumes designed by the well-known artist, Herr Salzmann. Much care is also being bestowed upon the mounting of Lortzing's "Czar und Zimmermann" and Auber's "Fra Diavolo," both of them favourite works of the Emperor, which are likewise to be included in the special summer performances at the Court Theatre this year.

OBITUARY.

The death occurred, on March 23, at Budapest, where he had gone on a visit, of Nicolaus Dumba, one of the most munificent, influential, and intelligent patrons of musical art in Austria. Himself an amateur artist of considerable attainments, he was on terms of intimate friendship with Brahms, Liszt, and other distinguished musicians, while being likewise a sincere admirer of Wagner, and, above all, a devoted lover of Schubert. His fine collection of Schubertiana—autographs, portraits, and paintings—was one of his most valued possessions, and it has been bequeathed by him to the city of Vienna. Dumba took a prominent part in the erection of the monuments to Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert in Vienna, and almost every other artistic undertaking of importance in the capital during the past half-century has received his substantial support. He was a member of the Upper House of the Austrian Parliament and was born at Doebling, near Vienna, in 1830.

The death took place at Clewer, on March 28, of Robert Parker Paine, late of Windsor, for many years a well-known bootmaker to Etonians and an enthusiastic amateur musician of marked ability. Born at Sandgate, Kent, November 15, 1823, Mr. Paine early attracted the notice of the late Charles H. Purday, to whose collection of 100 Rounds he (Paine) contributed. At Windsor he received much encouragement from the late Sir George J. Elvey. His chief compositions include an oratorio, "The Prodigal Son," and a setting of Psalm xciii. for bass solo, chorus, and orchestra. The latter work, published by Messrs. Novello, was produced, under the conductorship of Mr. Samuel Smith, by the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, May 23, 1887. Mr. Paine greatly prided himself upon an unpublished oratorio on the subject of "Lazarus."

Heinrich Vogl, at Munich, the well-known opera singer, who succumbed to a stroke of apoplexy.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. William Witt, which took place, on the 5th ult., at his residence, 5, Blomfield Road. Mr. Witt was a former proprietor of Messrs. Ewer and Co., and an excellent violinist. He personally knew Spohr, Wagner, Rubinstein, Ernst, and, in fact, every well-known musician during the last half-century. During the last eighteen years he represented the well-known printing firm of Röder, of Leipzig.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

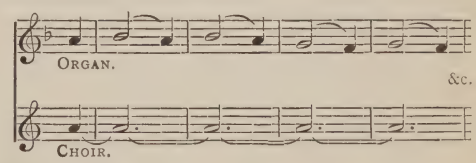
Sir,—Your organist readers will have read with pleasure and profit the excellent articles on "Organ Accompaniments" in the March and April numbers of The Musical Times from the pen of Mr. E. H. Lemare. But I fancy that some of us, average players on average organs, may feel a little difficulty in accepting one or two of Mr. Lemare's suggestions; and it is rather with the idea of eliciting further remarks that I venture to allude to some of them.

1. On the use of 16-ft. tone on the manuals. Mr. Lemare somewhat sweepingly condemns this in one or two places; but how else is one to obtain anything approaching the rolling volumes of sound such as one hears and delights in when the stone walls and roof of some large cathedral reinforce the tones of possibly no more than 8-ft. work?

2. The author also condemns the use of the oboe on the swell "when playing in chords." What is the poor average man to do?

3. On accompanying the Creed, &c. The author condemns "the old diatonic style" as "too monotonous and uninteresting," and suggests very properly that the accompaniment should possess in itself an interest rhythmical as well as harmonic. Here one is glad to be in hearty agreement; but I fear that the organist who tried to emulate Mr. Lemare's wonderful example would have an uncomfortable time with his choirmen, not to speak of his vicar! But after all, sir, is there not some artistic repose about an accompaniment which succeeds, by its carefully considered volume and timbre, its harmonic and rhythmic interest, and its endeavour to "accompany" the words, in sustaining the voices in the monotone which follows the more or less florid Canticle?

May I be allowed to conclude by giving as a "horrible example" of how not to accompany the Creed, a phrase which I actually heard some years ago in a fashionable church not far from London:—



Shade of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett!

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Bath.—A performance of Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater," with orchestral accompaniment, was given at Downside (Benedictine) College, near Bath, on March 29. A miscellaneous programme followed, which included the following anthems: "The Wilderness" (Goss), "Lead, kindly Light" (Stainer), "God came from Teman" (Steggall), "O Lord our Governour" (Gadsby), and the orchestra played two small pieces by Grieg, "The descent of the Angels," from "Hänsel und Gretel" (Humperdinck), and Gounod's "Marche religieuse." Mr. Richard Terry conducted.

Bournemouth.—The concerts given at the Winter Gardens by the Municipal Orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., continue to maintain their interest. On March 26 the novelty provided was Incidental Music to "Cinderella," by W. H. Speer, comprising a suite of six pieces, the music being throughout melodious, notably the horn solo in the Prelude, and the Minuet, a very pleasing section. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony (omitting the choral section) was also played, and the solo instrumentalist at the concert was Mr. J. Zeelander.——On the 7th ult. Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Charles Fry appeared, the former singing Hans Sachs's Monologue, "Wahn! Wahn!" and other songs superbly, and the reciter giving a powerful rendering of the "Dream of Eugene Aram," with Sir A. C. Mackenzie's admirable accompaniment for orchestra. The programme included Tschaïkowsky's "Marche Solennelle," Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture, and movements from Cowen's suite "The language of flowers."

Briton Ferry.—The choir of Bethel Chapel gave its annual concert on the 5th ult., when Handel's "Jephtha" was performed. The choral singing was warmly appreciated, and a marked improvement in the tone, precision, and ésprit of the choristers was noticeable. Mr. Hulley's band did excellent service. The solo vocalists were Madame Mullen, Miss Bessie Evans, Mr. Beaumont, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Miss Jessie Davies Neath presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Samuel Jones conducted with ability.

Chesterfield.—On the 3rd ult. the Harmonic Society gave a miscellaneous concert at the Stephenson Memorial Hall, the interest being centred in an interesting selection of part-songs, excellently sung by the choir. These were "Soldier, rest" (Oliver King), "Fire, fire, my heart" (Morley), "Night Watch" (Brahms), and a new madrigal by Sir John Stainer, "Room for Flora's Queen." The soloists were Madame Dews and Mr. G. W. Riley (vocalists) and Miss Minnie Theobald (violoncellist).

Cirencester.—The Choral Society performed "The Messiah," in the Corn Hall, on the 19th ult. The choir was augmented by members of the Gloucester Festival Class, and the orchestra was led by Mr. E. G. Woodward, Mr. A. B. Barnes being at the organ. The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Florence Rutter, Mr. C. Eynon Morgan, and Mr. Harry Miller, and Mr. A. H. Gibbons conducted.

Cupar, Fife (N.B.).—The Choral Union gave a successful performance of Handel's "Belshazzar" in the Corn Exchange, on March 23. The fine choruses which abound in this work, especially "See, from his post Euphrates flies," "Ye tutelar gods," and "Tell it out among the heathen," were excellently sung, the choir displaying vigour, confidence, and prompt attack, and Mr. W. H. Cole's orchestra accompanied sympathetically. The soloists were Miss Marguerite Simpson, Miss Riddell Henderson, Mr. Peter Kerr, and Dr. Sneddon. Misses Hodgson and Storrar presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Sydney Crookes at the organ, the whole performance being admirably conducted by Mr. G. H. Crookes.

Grimsby.—On the 3rd ult. and on the following Sunday afternoon the Choral Society sang Sterndale Bennett's beautiful cantata "The Woman of Samaria," in the Parish Church. Mr. Leonard C. Carter presided at the organ, which was supplemented by Miss S. E. Bennett at the pianoforte. The solo vocalists were Miss Wright, Miss Reed, Mr. Ernest Benton, and Mr. E. Anderson, who were all fully efficient, and the quartet, "God is a Spirit," was well sung by Master Brackenbury, Mr. E. Benton, Mr. J. F. Carter, and Mr. E. Anderson. The choir gave an admirable rendering of the choruses. Altogether the performance reflected the highest credit on Mr. Forbes Carter, who conducted.

Hamilton (N.B.)—The Hamilton Select Choir gave a capital rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," in the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult. The choir, which numbered upwards of thirty-five members, had the assistance of a small string orchestra in the accompaniments. Mr. T. H. Brearley sang the tenor solo excellently. The second part of the programme consisted of songs and part-songs, including Smart's "Serenade," "Row, gently row" (one of Cowen's "Songs of the River"), and Barnby's "Sing a joyous roundelay." Mr. J. W. J. Mackie was an efficient accompanist and Mr. F. Pugh conducted with care and skill.

Kendal.—On March 29 the Choral Society gave a very fine performance of Elgar's "King Olaf," in St. George's Hall. The magnificent orchestration was given with a full band, under the capable leadership of Mr. J. W. Collinson of the Hallé orchestra. The principals were Miss Ethel Hubi-Newcombe, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Edmund Telfer, who all gave great satisfaction. The choruses were given with marked intelligence, brightness, and accuracy; indeed, both the choir and orchestra fairly revelled in their work, and gave a performance that reflected the greatest credit on the training of their conductor, Mr. J. Smallwood Winder. A short miscellaneous second part consisted of songs by the principals, a fine rendering by the orchestra of Elgar's popular patriotic "Imperial March" and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer."

Kirkcaldy.—On March 28 the Musical Society performed successfully "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," at the Corn Exchange. Miss Alice Esty and Mr. W. H. Brearley were the solo vocalists and Dr. Allum conducted.

Leicester.—A most successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was given (for the first time in Leicester) by the Amateur Vocal Society, in the Temperance Hall, on March 27. The hall was crowded and great enthusiasm was aroused by the stirring and delightful music of the young West African composer. The second part, which was miscellaneous, completed a most enjoyable programme. Mr. H. B. Ellis conducted.

Newbury.—On the 18th ult. the Choral Society performed Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" and Elgar's "Banner of St. George" in the Town Hall. The choruses were sung throughout with spirit and vigour, and the orchestra, led by Herr L. Röver, was fully efficient. The solo parts in the "Spectre's Bride" were excellently sung by Miss Ethel Beetlestone, Mr. Avalon Collard, and Mr. Arthur Stingwell, and Mr. J. S. Liddle conducted with great care and skill.

Oldham.—The students' concert at the Oldham College of Music took place on the 11th ult., when Mr. Edmondstoune Duncan's Quintet (Op. 38) was given here for the first time and met with great success. The performers were Miss Edith M. Cowper, a highly promising student, who played the pianoforte, and Messrs. Chesters, Donellan, Hilton, and Smith, who respectively interpreted the parts for flute, clarinet, horn, and bassoon. Some excellent singing was contributed by Mr. W. M. Nield, and special mention may be made of the violin playing of Mr. J. Churchill and the pianoforte playing of Miss Ogden.

Peebles (N.B.).—The annual concert of the Choral Society took place in the Chambers Institution Hall, on March 21, when Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and a miscellaneous selection was performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Violet Burrows and Mr. J. A. Y. Stronach, the latter giving the tenor song in the cantata with excellent effect. The chorus sang very creditably and the accompaniments were well played by Mr. Dambmann's orchestra. Miss Mary Thornburn assisted at the pianoforte, Mr. W. J. Clapperton at the organ, and Mr. James J. Finlay was an able conductor.

Pontefract.—The third season of the Choral and Orchestral Society was brought to a close on March 22, the chief piece in the programme being Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The soloist was Mr. Charles Saunders, who gave a finished performance of the tenor solo. The chorus parts were rendered with a remarkable degree of expression and execution, showing that the conductor, Mr. R. B. Walker, had bestowed unusual pains at rehearsal.

Sandyford.—A very good performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and Schubert's "Song of Miriam" was given by the Clydebank and District Choral Union on the 10th ult. The soloists were Miss Marguerite Simpson, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Charles Tree, all of whom gave a very finished rendering of their parts. Mr. Horace Fellowes led the orchestra and Miss Carswell and Mrs. Mollison were at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively. Mr. W. J. Clapperton was conductor.

Southport.—The third concert of the Amateur Orchestral Society was given in the Cambridge Hall, on the 5th ult., when the programme included Harvest Dance from Edward German's suite "The Seasons," Hamish MacCunn's orchestral ballad "The Ship o' the Fiend," Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Elgar's "Imperial" March, and a Septet for pianoforte, strings, and trumpet by Saint-Saëns. Miss Ada Crossley was the vocalist. During the season the Society has given three Subscription concerts and the programmes have included, besides the above works, compositions by Beethoven, Schubert, Gounod, Ambroise Thomas, and others. A very creditable standard of excellence has been attained, due to the admirable training of the conductor, Mr. R. H. Aldridge, and the concerts have been so successful that they will be resumed in November.

Tunbridge Wells.—On the 2nd ult. the Vocal Association gave its thirtieth annual concert in the Great Hall, when an excellent rendering of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given. The orchestra (augmented from London and from the Royal Engineers) and chorus numbered over two hundred performers. The soloists were Miss Maggie Purvis, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Cunningham, and Mr. Douglas Powell, assisted in the double quartet by Miss Webster, Miss Villeneuve Smith, Mr. C. Hubble, and Mr. G. Gladman. The choruses throughout were well sung, the attack being excellent and the balance of tone good. A word of praise is also due to the orchestra, led by Mr. W. A. Easton. The concert was ably conducted by Mr. W. W. Starmer.

Wanstead.—A concert of sacred music was given by the Choir of Christ Church, in Drummond Room, on March 29, when Barnby's cantata "Rebekah" and Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm were the chief features of the programme. These works were very creditably performed by the choir and orchestra without any extraneous help, except that given by the soprano vocalists, Miss Scott and Mrs. R. B. Johnson, the other soloists being the Rev. G. B. Doughty and Mr. A. H. Smith. The concert was ably conducted by Mr. H. Vincent Read, organist and choirmaster of the church.

Wigan.—The Wigan and District Choral Society gave its second oratorio performance this season on the 3rd ult., in the Parish Church, when Gounod's "Redemption," a work not previously heard in this town, was performed. The soprano solos were undertaken by Sydney Leigh and Herbert Jones, two of the choristers of the Parish Church. Madame Alice Bertenshaw was the contralto. Mr. Joseph Owen, the baritone soloist of the Parish Church, sang the music allotted to our Lord, and the two Narrators were Mr. H. H. Sowerbutts and Mr. A. S. Kinnell. The music for the celestial choir was sung by the Parish Church choir. The attack and general ensemble of the chorus showed great improvement and they sang with careful attention to nuance. Dr. Arthur Bly, of Hammersmith Parish Church, was the organist, and filled in the orchestral wood-wind and brass parts with great skill The performance was conducted by Mr. Edward C. Bairstow, the Society's conductor, and organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. C.—You would probably derive much help from Mr. Franklin Taylor's "Primer of Pianoforte Playing" (Macmillan). Have you worked at Plaidy's exercises? Facility in reading can only be obtained by constant practice, with much variety in keys and rhythms. Try Kunz's "200 Canons" (for pianoforte). You would find even an elementary knowledge of harmony most useful in this respect. But, notwithstanding your nomadic existence, you should seek the help of an experienced teacher who, by becoming practically acquainted with your difficulties, would be able to help you along your pathway.

W. F.—The mere figures make no difference in the rhythm. The super-punctilious examiner would probably say that the composer ought to have prefixed the time-signature 9-8, and to have made the notes in the left hand part to agree therewith; but Schubert, the unexamined, thought otherwise, rightly or wrongly, or probably he did not the least bit care, so long as his music was played as he wanted it to be played. (Schubert's Impromptu in E flat, Op. 90, No. 2.)

L. F. N.—(1) The title of the book is: "A Descriptive Catalogue of the Musical Instruments recently exhibited at the Royal Military Exhibition, London, 1890. Issued under the orders of Colonel Shaw-Hellier, Commandant Royal Military School of Music, and compiled by Captain C. R. Day, Oxfordshire Light Infantry." It is published by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode. (2) The Wind Instrument Society gave several concerts, but it no longer exists. Mr. G. A. Clinton, the clarinet player, has since carried on similar concerts at Queen's (Small) Hall on his own account.

Forma.—(1) You are quite right. The form of the Finale of Mozart's Symphony in E flat is "somewhat free." But we prefer to use the less technical language of the late Sir George Macfarren, who said of this movement: "There is as much genuine wit [in it] as in the sallies of Falstaff, or the sarcasms of Hamlet. The subject is a piece of infinite pleasantry . . . and that which enters with a smile goes out with a bound," and so on. (2) Otto Jahn's "Life of Mozart" gives full particulars of Mozart's symphonies. An English translation is issued by Messrs. Novello.

"A would-be Drummer."—There is really no just cause or impediment, æsthetical or physical, why a lady should not play the drums. How long it might take her to learn to manipulate the sticks, &c., would all depend upon the musical capacities of the "would-be drummer." There is a comprehensive tutor for the drums by G. Kastner, entitled "Méthode complète et raisonnée de Timbales" (Paris: Brandus), and one by Herr J. A. Kappey, published by Messrs. Boosey; but you would probably find it advantageous to take some lessons from a competent performer.

B. G. T.—By all means stick to your business, especially as your "future prospects are good," which satisfactory condition of affairs would probably be very different if you "went into the profession." Why not qualify for an organ appointment? This would probably open up a field of work which would be very pleasant to you and at the same time find scope for your abilities in connection therewith.

Orpheus.—It is difficult to arrange for an ideal balance of parts in a choir of twenty voices. The outside parts should, as a rule, be slightly stronger than the inner parts. Therefore, assuming that all the singers possess average power, a choir of twenty-two voices would be arranged thus: 6, 5, 5, 6. With only twenty voices, it would be better to equalise the number of singers to each part.

R. R.—Unfortunately for plagiaristic purposes the phrase you send (the last two bars of Bach's Fugue in E major, No. 9 of the second book of the "48") is not identical with the form of the concluding phrase of "Rule, Britannia," in its original form. Your "family likeness" is therefore negatived.

J. B. F.—Pianoforte tuning and repairing are of such a practical nature that you had better enter some good factory and go through a regular course of preparation and equipment for the business.

C. F. S.—The edition of "The Messiah" to which you refer ("Rejoice, greatly," in 12-8 time, &c.) is well known, See W. S. Rockstro's "Life of Handel" (Macmillan). pp. 343-363.

H. E. B.—Apply to the Registrar, London University, Burlington Gardens, W., who will furnish you with all the necessary particulars.

J. D.—The pianoforte music of Niedermeyer may be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

MISS LILLIAN PROCTER

(CONTRALTO)

Address, 36, Whitby Road, Fallowfield, Manchester.

"Miss L. Procter, contralto, whose voice was only heard once in a quartet in 'The Lay of the Bell' (Romberg), gave the first song in Part 2. This lady was well received, and she drew the first encore of the evening with her 'Sunshine and Rain.' Her delightful and well modulated contralto was heard later in Tosti's 'Good-Bye,' for which she again received most hearty applause."—Northern Guardian.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS)

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

"ST. PAUL" AT WORCESTER.—"Mr. Henry Sunman was equally successful in the bass music, for which his full rich voice was peculiarly suited. The air, 'Consume them all,' was given with splendid vigour, and 'Oh God, have mercy,' with perfect feeling. The duet between the tenor and bass, 'Now we are ambassadors,' was one of the best appreciated numbers of the oratorio."—The Worcester Advertiser, January 20, 1900.

"KING OLAF" (ELGAR) AT GLOUCESTER.—"Mr. Sunman's resonant tones, virile declamation, and clear enunciation invested the recitatives allotted to the bass soloist with character, dignity, and convincing power."—Gloucester Journal, January 27, 1900.

"ANDROMEDA" (C. H. LLOYD) AT GUILDFORD.—"The recitative by the Priest, 'Seek we the temple,' was rendered by Mr. Henry Sunman, the bass soloist, in a superb manner. . . . Mr. Sunman thrilled all with his rendering of the lines commencing 'O dark, O piteous fate!' and 'The lot has fallen!'"—Surrey Advertiser, February 10, 1900.

"ST. PAUL" AT DEAL.—"Mr. Henry Sunman is always welcome at any concert in Deal, and there seems no likelihood of his reception being a less cordial one than when he first came to our town. . . . His fine voice was most impressively and effectively used in all his items."—Deal Mercury, February 21, 1900.

"ANCIENT MARINER" AT DUDLEY.—"Mr. Sunman scored an equal success in the recitative and air 'And now this spell was snapt.' Mr. Sunman is the lucky possessor of a perfectly pure baritone voice, and the Vocal Union made an excellent selection in engaging him."—Dudley Herald, February 24, 1900.

"CREATION" AT ABINGDON.—Mr. H. Sunman, an old favourite with Abingdon audiences, sang the Raphael airs with that forcible expression essential to a due presentment of 'Rolling in foaming billows' and 'Now heaven in fullest glory,' in both of which he had a cordial reception, as also in some of the fanciful recitatives, such as 'And God made the firmament,' &c."—Abingdon Herald, March 10, 1900.

"THE MESSIAH" AT OXFORD.—"Mr. Sunman's careful phrasing was especially notable in some of the most difficult numbers, the most effective being the well-known 'Why do the nations' and 'The trumpet shall sound.'"—Oxford Times, March 17, 1900.

TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM.—"Mr. Henry Sunman, who contributed patriotic ballads in his fine, telling baritone, proved himself again the perfect artist he always is. His renderings were all in excellent taste, and his phrasing and vocalisation almost beyond criticism."—Birmingham Daily Post, March 17, 1900.

"ELIJAH" AT RAMSGATE.—"On Mr. Sunman (who took the rôle of the Prophet) fell the heaviest portion of the airs and recitatives, and he was greatly applauded in the bass air 'Is not His word like a fire?' He has a fine voice and knows how to use it, his phrasing was perfect, and the enunciation of the words left nothing to be desired."—East Kent Times, March 21, 1900.

SHREWSBURY CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Sunman was conspicuously successful in the singing of 'Mohac's Field' and 'Myself when young,' the latter securing him an encore which was well deserved."—Wellington Journal, March 24, 1900.

"A patriotic song, 'John Bull,' by Mr. Sunman, evoked enthusiasm. The song was well rendered, and of course the demonstration was the magnetic touch of the evening."—Border Counties Advertiser, March 28, 1900.

"STABAT MATER" AT FOLKESTONE.—"Mr. Sunman was very successful in his rendering of the air 'Pro peccatis.'"—Folkestone Programme, April 2, 1900.

BACH'S "PASSION" (ST. MATTHEW).—SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, AT THE DOME, BRIGHTON.—Mr. Henry Sunman (bass), who made his first appearance at the Society's concerts, created a very favourable impression, for his voice, resonant and rich in tone, was heard to advantage in everything he sang. His recitatives were instinct with power, while he achieved almost a triumph in the solo 'Twas in the cool of eventide,' the pathetic grace of which was finely depicted."—Sussex Daily News, March 30, 1900.

"ST. PAUL" AT PLYMOUTH.—Mr. H. Sunman sang the bass solos in finished style. Among his best efforts were the arias 'Consume them all' and 'O God have mercy,' both of which were given with intense fervour and feeling."—Western Morning News, April 14, 1900.

FIVE-PART HARMONY

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

PREFACE.

THIS little book is intended for those who, having already gained a competent knowledge of four-part harmony, desire to write with confidence in five parts.

Five-part writing is compulsory for the degree of Bachelor of Music at the principal Universities; yet even the best text-books furnish candidates with little help in respect of five-part writing.

The plan of this work is arranged in such a manner that anyone who is already well instructed in harmony may advance without the aid of a teacher.

In each Chapter a problem is proposed, and its solution is given in the Appendix (p. 28 et seq.).

The conscientious student will first deal with the problem, shutting his eyes to the solution until he has worked the thing out for himself.

He will then find it profitable to compare his result with that of the author.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive, but it contains a more complete discussion of the subject than the author has met with elsewhere.

SIXTY-SIX SHORT STUDIES IN THREE-PART COUNTERPOINT

BY FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE, MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

Price Two Shillings.

These Studies are intended to serve as illustrations of the possible varieties of strict Counterpoint, in three parts only. They may also be found useful as Exercises for young Organists who wish to gain facility in Part-playing and in reading from the Alto and Tenor clefs. To this end the studies are printed in a form convenient for placing upon the organ desk.

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

JAMES SMIETON, M.A.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR

THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, & ORCHESTRA

BY

JOHN MORE SMIETON.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d.

Full Score and Band Parts on hire.

(The work takes about eighty minutes to perform, and is adapted for Festival and the larger Choral Societies.)

"Space prevents us from noticing in detail this interesting work. The music, in which Scandinavian influence is perceptible, is fresh and imaginative. There is a great variety of rhythm; and the epithet 'dramatic' in the title is quite appropriate."—Musical Times.

"A new work of real power and grit is John More Smieton's Cantata 'Connla.' . . . The music flows natural and transparent, as do the words; and, taken altogether, the work is admirable in the arrangement of its matter and the clearness of its treatment. Conductors and choirmasters should not fail to procure copies of this new and distinctly notable production."—Musical Opinion.

"Last night, in the Kinnaird Hall, Dundee, the first performances were given of 'Connla,' a dramatic Cantata by John More Smieton, and 'Missa Solennis,' by David Stephen. As both musicians are well known in local musical circles a large audience turned out, and the works, which were conducted by their respective Composers, were received with great enthusiasm. The Scottish Orchestra played the accompaniments, and the soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Bessie Borthwick, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. Smieton . . . has risen to the occasion, and in 'Connla' we have eminently singable choruses, first-rate solo work, and clever and picturesque orchestration."—Glasgow Herald, Feb. 8, 1900.

"The dramatic cantata, 'Connla,' occupied the second half of the programme, and was also listened to with much interest. Mr. Smieton, indeed, all through shows that, as a composer, he possesses the precious gift of melody, a quality which, in a poetic work of this kind, is primarily requisite. Madame Russell thrilled the audience by the passionate feeling she threw into the invocation to Connla. She was enthusiastically applauded for this effort; and her singing of the love music was also one of the features of the performance. Mr. Black gave a spirited rendering of the Drinking Song, which was greatly appreciated. Mr. Richards made a favourable impression in the rôle of Connla. The Dundee Choral Union again approved themselves a capital body of vocalists, and the orchestra, led by Mr. Sons, acquitted themselves well."—Scotsman, Feb. 8, 1900.

"The second portion of the concert was occupied by the performance of Mr. Smieton's Cantata 'Connla.' The Composer has made his music thoroughly Celtic in style, as befitted the theme, and has emphasised its nationality by methods of orchestration entirely in keeping with the national spirit. Such numbers as the fine tenor solo, 'Fair is thy form,' and the beautiful duet for soprano and tenor, 'Thine is my heart,' are compositions that would grace any Cantata, and last night were rendered by the soloists in exquisite style. At the conclusion of the concert the Composer received his richly deserved meed of applause."—Dundee Advertiser, Feb. 8, 1900.

THE TIMES.

Mr. Percy Pitt's "Ballade" for violin and orchestral accompaniment came at so late an hour that it made less effect than it deserved, but it is incontestably a work of sterling value, the solo part of which is written with due regard to the powers of such a virtuoso as M. Ysaye.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The really melodious and strikingly impassioned "Ballade" by Mr. Percy Pitt, a composer who is rapidly making his way to the front. Here, happily, no dull moments supervened, and the richly-coloured piece, extremely modern in style, and adorned with numerous piquant orchestral touches, created a highly favourable impression. Its flowing phrases were interpreted with a full measure of sentiment by Mr. Ysaye, who, though summoned again and again, very sensibly declined to concede an encore.

MORNING POST.

A composition teeming with imagination, rich in its instrumental colouring, new in its harmonic texture, and unconventional in its form. The music seems to throb with passion. Though placed almost at the end of a long concert, when the attention of the audience might well be fatigued, it achieved a great success. M. Ysaye, who played the solo part to perfection, was recalled again and again.

OBSERVER.

Mr. Pitt's Ballade will assuredly enhance his reputation. It is an earnest, deeply felt piece, the polyphonic texture of which shows a mastery of modern methods and an instinct for colour that promise great things. Mr. Pitt has long been recognised as a "coming man." We think it time to class him among those who have "arrived."

SUNDAY TIMES.

Mr. Pitt's piece strikes a deeper note of passion, and abounds with more or less striking climaxes, set forth amidst much glowing orchestral colour, whilst here again individuality of feeling is a welcome feature.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Pitt's "Ballade" is in direct contrast . . . in its sustained interest and remarkable structural coherence. Moreover, it vibrates throughout with passionate feeling, and, in the hands of a great player like M. Ysaye, it produces a really thrilling effect.

THE WORLD.

Mr. Percy Pitt's Ballade is a passionate and poetical utterance which makes one think still more highly of him. He is a past-master of harmony, and his skill in orchestration is quite out of the common; and both these qualities appear in this Ballade, together with a vein of poignant melody and a dramatic sense which had not hitherto been in evidence.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Mr. Pitt's Ballade is of an entirely different character. Its themes express deep emotion, agitation, passion, and that peculiar phase of romantic feeling that is so wonderfully depicted in Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," but which as yet lacks a name. They owe their effect, however, in large part to the polyphonic treatment that marks their harmonisation, and the rich though sombre hues of the orchestral colouring.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Percy Pitt's Ballade, on the other hand, strikes a full-blooded note from the first. It is subjective music and not descriptive, and it has the natural logical cohesion of form, although the violin part is also in the nature of a rhapsody. Its climaxes are well worked up to, and there are many exceedingly clever touches in the scoring and in the harmony. The violin part is effective and often quite poetic.

OF

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR J. STAINER,

M.A., Mus.D., Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. and Mus. Doc., Durham.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

THE SEASONS

NEW SUITE FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

Orchestral Parts of the four movements (separately) (in the Press).
Full Score, MS.

Arranged as a Pianoforte Solo, 2s.; Pianoforte Duet, 3s.

AUTUMN from above
Arranged as a Pianoforte Solo, 2s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The music is full of the composer's wonderful vitality and distinguished by his usual command of every orchestral resource.

STANDARD.

The first number is based on melodious themes, the second subject being particularly expressive and graceful. . . . The following movement is a Harvest Dance. In this Mr. German is in his happiest humour. The chief melody is a splendid old ballad-like fling of dance time, to which it is almost impossible to keep the feet from beating time, and when, later in the movement, it is played slowly, it acquires a humorous suggestiveness that is irresistible.

MORNING POST.

A set of brilliant and elaborate tone pictures remarkable chiefly for the excellence of the orchestral treatment. The second number, "Summer," is the one most likely to become popular. . . . Mr. German's mastery of orchestral technique has often been happily exemplified, and the present work again exhibits his talent in the blending of instrumental tone colours to great advantage.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The "Spring," "Autumn," and "Winter" (Christmastide) movements are replete with ingenuity, and possess the freshness that has rendered his Gipsy Suite and Shakespearean Incidental Music notable.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

It is delightful. The melodies are pleasing and the orchestration extraordinarily rich and suggestive. It is difficult to choose where all is good, but perhaps the most attractive numbers at a first hearing are the tender and graceful "Autumn" section and the brisk "Harvest Dance" which does duty for summer.

OBSERVER.

The most attractive number is the second, entitled "Harvest Dance," which is based upon a subject of such rhythmic force and strong melodic character that it is almost impossible to keep a still head while the dance notes fill the air; and when, in the course of development, the melody is played slowly, it acquires a savour of mock sagacity which is irresistibly humorous.

"A book of immense scientific as well as artistic value."—Times.

"No more interesting and at the same time authentic account of an art which, in the forms treated of, is hoary with antiquity, exists within the repertory of English literature."—Daily Telegraph.

"There is no book of the kind existing comparable with this one to which an inquirer about Indian music can turn."—Athenæum.

"The book is a splendid example of intelligent and original research."—Daily News.

"We cannot but speak in the highest praise of Captain Day's work, and hope to see the book eventually issued in a form in which it will be more generally attainable. Mention must also be made of the learned introduction written by Mr. A. J. Hipkins, F.S.A., and a word of commendation must be given to the admirable manner in which the work has been produced by the publishers."—Morning Post.

A COURSE OF HARMONY
BY
FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus.D., Oxon.
(Gresham Professor of Music)
AND
FRANK J. SAWYER, Mus.D., Oxon.
(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

THE TIMES.

Like everything Mr. Coleridge-Taylor writes, it is full of character and originality, with a profusion of beautiful melodic ideas set off to the best advantage by treatment of a most effective kind. The success of the Overture and the Cantata was immediate and its reception spontaneously enthusiastic.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

That it will stand alone on very many occasions I am sure, so fine is the workmanship, so rich in ideas and devices, and so melodious are the themes which the young composer treats with breadth and sincerity.

STANDARD.

Effective uses of rhythm and boldness of harmonic treatment give piquancy to the Overture, which, in its entirety, is a masterly and fascinating composition.

MORNING POST.

The new Overture is a very interesting work, full of fiery energy, scored with consummate art, and containing broadly melodious phrases.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Even were it not connected with any story with which the listeners were more or less acquainted, this Overture would win notice on account of the purity of its sentiment and general refinement. . . . Throughout the composer exhibits the fancy, breadth, and command of modern orchestral resources observable in all the instrumental compositions he has yet submitted. It is safe to prophesy that this Overture will henceforward be played at every important performance of the Cantata.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

It has all the distinctive qualities of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music, his originality both of form and melody, his extraordinary instinct for the right use of his orchestra, and his freedom from academic conventionality. It is remarkable, too—as, indeed, is the whole cantata—for economy of material and for the wise restraint which the young composer has imposed upon himself in the matter of local colour. . . . The performance must rank as one of the triumphs of the Festival.

OBSERVER.

The music is full of youthful energy and desire, exuberance and insistence, and these attributes are intensified by the boldness of the harmonic scheme and the method of orchestration. It was tremendously applauded.

SUNDAY TIMES.

An extremely picturesque and effective Overture.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

VERSE BY JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The musical settings are twelve in number, the part-writing for first and second sopranos and contraltos. The utmost care and finish has been bestowed in wedding appropriate music to the verse, and Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. The cantata begins with an instrumental introduction in the form of a barcarolle, in G minor, 9-8 time, moderato. At the close the tempo changes to 2-4, Allegro agitato, descriptive of an approaching storm. But this is of short duration and leads to the chorus, 'Toiling and toss'd on the restless sea,' which is dramatic and spirited in character, the theme being based upon a bright melody, and the part-writing remarkably effective. No. 2 is a Cradle Song, 'Come, my baby,' in G major, Andante moderato, 3-4 time, allotted to a contralto. The accompaniment to this delightful lullaby is constructed on a pedal note, the melody that accompanies it being at once expressive and thoroughly characteristic. The chorus which immediately follows the cradle song opens with a tempestuous instrumental introduction of chromatic scale passages and chords, the key now changing into C major, 12-8 time, Allegro con fuoco. At the fourteenth bar the chorus enters with 'Oh, ho! for the winds that blow"; the whole of this number being of an impassionate and restless character. Quite in contrast to the foregoing is the pretty ballad for soprano, 'A mermaid dwelt,' which closely follows the chorus. It is in Tempo di Barcarolle in F major, 6-8 time, quaint and most espressivo. A short unaccompanied trio, 'The twilight gray is falling,' brings us to what may be termed the gem of the work, a song for soprano, 'O, manly hearts.' The key is E flat major, 2-4 time, Andantino espressivo. Mr. Gaul is here in his happiest mood, the whole song being graceful and charming to a degree. The number that follows is the chorus 'Darker and darker grows the night,' which is preceded by a characteristic instrumental prelude in triplet passages, 2-2 time, C minor, Allegro con fuoco. The whole of this chorus will deeply impress the attentive listener. No. 8, 'A prayer for those at sea,' for chorus, with an organ accompaniment, is in the key of F, 3-4 time, alla capella, and is another example of purely melodious part-writing which characterises Mr. Gaul's compositions, and which is certainly conceived in his best and most expressive manner. The concluding numbers are a short Intermezzo, entitled 'Break of day,' a duet for soprano and contralto, 'Through golden mists of morn,' in the key of B flat, 12-8 time, Allegretto con moto, an exceedingly animated movement; then comes another cradle song, expressive of the father's safe return from sea, and, finally, the concluding joyous chorus, 'Now let songs of gladness rise.' Taking the cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

THE ELFIN HILL

AN OPERETTA FOR SCHOOL USE

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"'The Elfin Hill' is founded on one of Hans Andersen's charming stories, and the libretto has been written in dainty and graceful language by Miss Baldwick. The operetta opens with a short overture describing moonlight on the Dovrefeld Mountains, and Mr. Gaul has been particularly happy in infusing the Norse spirit into that portion of his music which deals with goblin life in Norway. When the goblins become visitors in fairyland, the character of the music changes; lightness is its predominant feature, perhaps the choicest fragment being a fairy dance. This latter, together with a very characteristic dance of elves and a shadow dance, were beautifully executed." —Birmingham Gazette.

VARIATIONS

ON AN ORIGINAL THEME

FOR

ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 36.)

FULL SCORE (just published), 25s.
String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, 22s.
Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the COMPOSER.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.

The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.

The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.

They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.

The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Paper boards, Four Shillings. Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, Two Shillings.

THE TIMES.

. . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's claims to be heard are based on other merits than these—on his directness of emotional utterance and on his originality of melodic design, although he never suggests that he is seeking for originality. His melodies have the rare quality of distinction, and his handling of short phrases is as characteristic as it is fresh. Altogether a very great success was scored, and the composer was called again and again to the platform, both after the second section and at the end of all.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These "Scenes from Hiawatha" are a creation of high importance, bound to exercise large influence upon English music. . . . The composer, who conducted, and his music had the heartiest possible reception. There could be no doubt as to this, for it is seldom that a musical audience becomes so wildly enthusiastic as was that of last night.

STANDARD.

Only those who were present last night at the Albert Hall, when he conducted "Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha," can realise how great and rare is the talent that has come amongst us. . . . Nothing more exquisitely pathetic can be imagined than the strains which accompany the death scene, and the husband's lament is instinct with manly grief, resigned dignity, and fortitude. It is music that goes to the heart, and lingers in the memory, and presses home the poet's saying, "our sweetest songs are those which tell of saddest pain."

DAILY MAIL.

All that can be taught in the way of technique he has learnt well. And this knowledge, combined with the gifts, priceless because impossible of acquirement, of spontaneity, genuine feeling, rhythmical command, and the power to express original thoughts in his own way, make him a force. We do not think we exaggerate at all in using the phrase "epoch-making" in the English musical Renaissance in connection with "Hiawatha."

MORNING LEADER.

Genius is a strong word—it should be the last in the critic's vocabulary. It is like a banknote—worthless unless it represents wealth. . . . The word cannot be recalled; the banknote cannot be stopped without damaging the critic's credit. I paid it away in my brief chronicle of Thursday night's performance, for of one thing I was sure at least—Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a genius. . . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has individuality — individuality and freshness and spontaneity of feeling, and individuality of technique, of harmony, of melody, of orchestration.

MORNING POST.

The success thus achieved by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will assuredly not be grudged by anyone, for the young West African composer is endowed with real talent and distinct individuality. . . . The last section, "Hiawatha's Departure," is on a par of interest with the rest of the work. It contains a bright solo for soprano, telling how Spring had come as fresh as the season it celebrates, also an expressive song for baritone, "Beautiful is the Sun.' The instrumentation of the entire work is excellent and replete with picturesque devices.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Hiawatha's Departure" is in every way worthy of association with the joyous "Wedding-Feast" and the deeply pathetic "Minnehaha," and this effective rounding-off of the trilogy undoubtedly gives the young composer a very firm position among the creative musicians of his day.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

There is no pretence, no shamming, no mere imitation of a supposed national style; but it has the fragrance, on the contrary, of a peculiar nationality, one, we will say, of confirmed rhythmical habit, of artless melodies, of poignant if simple emotionalism, while to all of these qualities Mr. Taylor has added a finely trained technical gift, a noble inspiration in harmony.

THE GLOBE.

His flow of melody is unfailing, and the brilliancy of his orchestration and the fertility of his imagination are quite astonishing. Not less surprising is his originality; from first to last every page of the score is stamped with the composer's individuality. This is, perhaps, one of the most satisfactory features of his talent, but quite as striking is his power of producing big effects by comparatively simple means. The lament for Minnehaha in Part 2 is an admirable example of pathos obtained by the most straightforward devices, and equally fine is the movement "quasi una Marcia Funebre" later in the same section, in which the sustained power of the choral and orchestral writing is extraordinary. . . . The young composer fully deserved the ovation which he received.

GUARDIAN.

Through every page of "Hiawatha" Mr. Coleridge-Taylor proclaims his kinship with the great composers of the past by the simple directness of his melodies and by his strict economy of thematic material; moreover, the frequent recurrence of short rhythmic figures and phrases has an almost Homeric effect, and combines with other causes to make the music an ideally complete illustration of Longfellow's epic.

C. BECHSTEIN,

Pianoforte Manufacturer

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

The World's Greatest Pianists prefer the BECHSTEIN Piano to any other.

LISZT writes: "For twenty-eight years I have now used your Pianos, and they have maintained their superiority. Your instruments are perfect."

RUBINSTEIN writes: "At my Concerts I use BECHSTEIN'S Pianos almost exclusively. C. BECHSTEIN has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making."

VON BÜLOW writes: "C. BECHSTEIN'S Instruments are distinguished by their superior quality in every branch of Pianoforte manufacture."

WAGNER writes: "C. BECHSTEIN'S Pianos are resounding benefits to the musical world."

GRIEG writes: My enthusiasm for your productions in the art of Pianoforte-making has ever been far too great for it possibly to be increased."

MOSZKOWSKI writes: "BECHSTEIN has succeeded in producing THE pianoforte of the nineteenth century. Such is its perfection that players and hearers must all agree that by BECHSTEIN the last word in pianoforte manufacture has been said."

MOTTL writes: "We musicians have to express our heartfelt gratitude to the firm of BECHSTEIN for having given us, in their instruments, the possibility of producing quite orchestral effects on the piano."

STAVENHAGEN writes: "I do not know of any other Pianoforte besides yours which, in tone and touch, affords the player facilities so exquisite and ideal."

SARASATE writes: "BECHSTEIN is the Stradivarius of the Piano."

SOPHIE MENTER writes: "BECHSTEIN, the King of all pianoforte manufacturers."

JOSEF HOFMANN writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano possesses greater poetry of tone than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel."

LESCHETIZKY writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist. Nobility and power of tone, warmth and refinement in singing quality, perfection in mechanism with the utmost capacity for expression and shading are the great qualities of a BECHSTEIN piano. The pianist finds in it an intimate friend for his home, and a faithful and reliable ally in his battle for public renown."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN writes: "There is a mysterious charm in the tone of BECHSTEIN'S Pianos; as much power and fulness as unheard-of beauty and delicacy, coupled with a touch so capable of modulation for the player, that an artist could not desire a more ideal instrument. To me it is the height of joy to play on these instruments, then alone can I become one with the Piano and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a BECHSTEIN Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius string quartette."

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY. (Founded 1741.)—

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative Part-Writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz.:—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1900, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1900.

CHORISTERSHIPS.

AMERICAN CHURCH of the HOLY TRINITY, PARIS.

There are sixteen Boy Choristers, all of whom are Boarded and Educated free of expense to parents.

THE CHURCH, a handsome edifice, designed by the late George Edmond Street, R.A., and one of the most prominent on the Continent, for English speaking people, is situated in the Avenue de l'Alma (Quarter of the Champs Elysées). As there is only one service, usually, on week days, more time is available for educational work than in many of the Cathedral establishments. This is a matter deserving of particular notice.

THE CHOIR SCHOOL is situated in one of the healthiest parts of Paris—in the Rue de la Tour—Passy District—the position of the house being open and airy.

The discipline and order of the School is based on English model and custom.

INSTRUCTION is given in English and French. The former includes the ordinary subjects. In addition to this, instruction is given in Musical Theory. French is specially taught, and is, as much as possible, the language of the house.

The Boys are allowed a month's holiday in the summer.

There is no age limit, but candidates must have—(i.) Good voice (essential) and (ii.) experience in Church music.

For further particulars, or interview, write Mr. Augustus Toop, 18, Berners Street, London, W.

N.B.—Gentlemanly boys, between nine and eleven years of age, living in London, can be prepared for future vacancies free of cost to parents.

NEW COLLEGE, Oxford.—CHORISTERSHIPS.—The TRIAL of VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir School will be held on Tuesday, July 24. Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between nine and twelve years of age. For particulars, apply to the Precentor. Names must be sent in not later than Thursday, July 19.

A Portrait of Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley, at the age of thirty-nine, reproduced, by kind permission, from an oil painting in the possession of his son, the Rev. F. G. Wesley, M.A., who reserves all rights of further reproduction; and a Part-Song, entitled 'The Trysting Tree,' by Dr. George J. Bennett.

[SINCE the first instalment of this biographical sketch appeared, some curious information has come to light concerning Dr. Wesley's organ appointment at St. John's Church, Waterloo Road. First, a letter written by one Thomas Lett (the donor of the organ in 1825) to the clerk of the 'Select Vestry' of the church. In this letter he states, in accordance with the request of the Select Vestry that he should nominate an organist (in succession to Benjamin Jacob, deceased)—'I have selected from the list of candidates Mr. S. Wesley, Jun., believing him in every respect qualified for the situation.' The date of the letter is November 16, 1829. Secondly, there is extant a small oblong leather-bound attendance-book, lettered 'Organist,' wherein that official signed his name Sunday by Sunday as having played at the services. S. S. Wesley's name, which begins the book, appears on November 29, 1829—i.e., thirteen days after Mr. Lett had nominated him for the post. As it appeared for the last time on March 27, 1831, and J. L. Brownsmith was elected organist on the following May 17, the former date gives the termination of Wesley's organistship at St. John's. Thus he held the appointment from November 29, 1829, to March 27, 1831. The signatures show that out of a possible Sunday attendance at 138 services, Wesley was represented by deputies at twenty. He was therefore absent about one-seventh of the time he held the office. This may have given rise to 'the fuss of my holding three posts together,' as he stated in his letter to Mr. W. H. Blanch which we quoted in our last issue (p. 298). His deputies at St. John's were his father, Samuel Wesley, twelve services, and William Bayley, eight services.]

HIS FIRST FESTIVAL.

By virtue of his appointment as organist of Hereford Cathedral, Wesley became officially connected with the Festival of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester. He was the pianist at the Worcester meeting of 1833. In the following year he conducted the Festival at Hereford. This was made additionally memorable in that for the first time the performances took place in the Nave of the Cathedral instead of in the Choir. A selection from 'The Messiah' was given, an experiment which has never been repeated. Spohr, Wesley's favourite composer, was represented by 'The Last Judgment,' the 'Jessonda' Overture, and 'a well-made selection from the opera "Azor and Zemira."' Wesley contributed 'a well-written Sanctus'; a song, 'Abraham's Offering,' sung by Henry Phillips, which was 'performed in a manner that seemed as if none of the parties engaged quite understood the composer's meaning'; and a manuscript Overture 'which evinced great talent.' The last-named work was probably the same as that played at the 'trial night' of the Philharmonic Society on January 31, 1833, but not publicly performed. What has become of it? For the Gloucester Festival of 1835 he composed a new quartet, 'Millions of spiritual creatures,' which does not seem to have been published.

'BLESSED BE THE GOD AND FATHER.'

In addition to 'The Wilderness,' already referred to, Wesley's Hereford compositions included two prize glees, 'At that dread hour' (1832) and 'I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre' (Gentlemen's Glee Club, Manchester, 1833). And then there is that wonderfully beautiful anthem, 'Blessèd be the God and Father,' which, though of smaller calibre than 'The Wilderness,' may rank with it in depth of poetic expression. A foot-note by the composer on the printed copies reads thus: 'This anthem was composed, by request, for the Service on Easter-day, at Hereford Cathedral, on which occasion only trebles and a single bass voice were available.' Tradition has it that the solitary bass on that Festal-day was the Dean's butler! While such a deplorable condition of things excites our astonishment, we cannot suppress a feeling of indebtedness to a laxity which brought into existence so rich a contribution to English Church music as Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father.'

In the early part of 1835 the organist of Hereford Cathedral unsuccessfully competed for the vacant organistship of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor, when the post was obtained by George Job Elvey, then a youth of nineteen. On May 4, 1835, Samuel Sebastian Wesley was married to Miss Mary Anne Merewether, sister of the Dean of Hereford, the ceremony taking place at Ewyas Harold Church, a village eleven miles South-west of Hereford.

EXETER CATHEDRAL.

On August 15, 1835, three months after his marriage, Wesley was appointed 'Organist and Informator Puerorum' of Exeter Cathedral. About this time, or perhaps a little earlier, he seems to have composed two sacred songs, 'God moves in a mysterious way' (Cowper's words) and 'Vital spark,' both of which were published by Dean, of New Bond Street, who, by the way, subsequently became station-master at Winchester during Wesley's organist-ship in that city. Other publications were 'Melodia Sacra, selections from the works of Handel, Haydn, &c., arranged for the pianoforte by S. S. Wesley,' now published by Messrs. Ashdown. He also edited Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater.' Original organ music is represented by 'A Collection of Psalm Tunes, arranged expressly for the organ with pedals, and for the use of organists,' in addition to a work entitled :—

A Studio for the Organ, exemplified in a series of exercises in the strict and free styles, intended as voluntaries for the use of Organists, composed and inscribed to Vincent Novello, Esq., by Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

No. 1 of this publication was the Prelude and Fugue in C sharp minor, concerning which a reviewer in the leading musical journal of the day thus unconventionally expressed himself:—

Here is a tough weather-beaten fugue, constructed upon the most rigid orthodox principles. They who desire to tackle it, (and the Lord be with them that do,) will meet in the course of their progress, the following characteristics of legitimacy and real fugue-blood breeding. The subject good and well treated. The augmentations of it, (direct and inverted) excellently introduced and accompanied—the original subject proceeding in the pedale. The subject again subsequently augmented (direct and inverted); the tenor proceeding with the subject, with a counterpoint above; and lastly it is again cleverly introduced, with direct and inverted augmentation.

N.B.—Before attacking it, a course of gymnastics is recommended (Musical World, May 13, 1836).

GETTING ON BY DEGREES.

Wesley held certain views on the subject of musical degrees, but he thought it expedient to become a graduate in music, though, most probably, for purely professional reasons. There is extant a curious and interesting letter, or copy of a letter, evidently written to Dr. Crotch, then Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, by 'old Sam' Wesley. Here it is:—

8, King's Row, Pentonville,
March 30, 1836.

My dear Sir,

My son requests me to forward to you a copy of a few of his compositions and a manuscript which he submits to you as an exercise for the Degree of Bachelor in Music. He has some fear that it is not precisely the kind of exercise which the Statutes require, but if it can be accepted he would feel himself greatly indebted, as the distance at which he resides from London (being organist and sub-chanter of Exeter Cathedral) makes every communication between us rather a lengthy and expensive matter.

You have heard no doubt that his abilities (from a child) were extraordinary, having been organist at Camberwell, Waterloo, and Hereford Cathedral, and now at Exeter, and I rely on your great kindness that if you can serve him in any way, you will.

Trusting that you enjoy good health, believe me, with the highest esteem, my dear Sir, yours very respectfully and faithfully,

S. Wesley.

Here is an instance of a composer casting aside his natural man and sitting down to write 'the kind of exercise which the Statutes require'! That Samuel Sebastian, after his experience of Crotch as an adjudicator on 'The Wilderness,' should have induced his old father to write in this strain to the Oxford Professor is not without a certain touch of irony. Three years, however, elapsed before Wesley graduated by taking the accumulated degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music at the University of Oxford. On May 6, 1839, he writes to the Rev. Dr. Bliss, Registrar of the University, asking if it is possible to take two degrees at the same time. A few days later, a satisfactory reply to his inquiry having in the meantime apparently been received, he writes to the effect that he would like to enter at Magdalen College instead of Magdalen Hall, in order that his exercise could be performed in Magdalen Chapel. This was evidently agreed to, as he matriculated at Magdalen College on June 17, 1839, and was duly capped four days later—on June 21.

The exercise for his degree was the elaborate eight-part anthem 'O Lord, Thou art my God,' which contains a masterly bass solo, 'For our heart shall rejoice in Him.' An account of the performance is contained in the Oxford University City and County Herald of June 22, 1839. Here it is, in all its frankly expressed utterance:—

On the morning of Thursday last, S. S. Wesley, Esq., of Magdalen College, and organist of Exeter Cathedral, performed his exercise for the Degrees of Bachelor and Doctor in music, by commutation, in the beautiful chapel of Magdalen College. The anti-chapel was filled with company, and at half-past twelve, on the arrival of the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, Mr. Wesley commenced his performance. The introduction on the organ was exceedingly good, and did great credit to the author, both as a composer and performance. Of the remainder of the piece, as regards the instrumental department, we may say the same; but of the vocal we could not fairly judge, the singers, in many parts, being both out of time and out of tune.

In a letter written to a London publisher, dated 'Exeter, January 29, 1840,' Wesley says: 'I have been striving hard to get a Festival in our fine roomy cathedral, but our clergy are at present unfavourable to it.' On the 12th of the following month he lost his dearly-loved baby daughter. This domestic shadow was a great and lasting grief to him, and he never ceased to mourn the death of this, his only daughter.

It has been said that Wesley took a degree in music in case it might be useful to him in seeking some Professorship or similar appointment. The opportunity came upon the death (May 6, 1841) of John Thomson, the first Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh. Wesley was a candidate for the vacant post, but he was defeated by Sir Henry Bishop! The successful competitor proved to be less fond of 'auld reekie' than he was of his 'Home, sweet home' in London.

Wesley's relations with the Dean and Chapter of Exeter were, as the records show, more or less strained during his five years' organistship of that Cathedral. 'He was an unconventional soul,' writes one of the present priest vicars, 'but then he was a genius.' The Exeter Cathedral authorities of that time could get on smoothly enough with mediocrity, but genius, in the person of a Samuel Sebastian Wesley, they failed to understand or appreciate. The Chapter books, under date of November 20, 1841, record: 'Mr. Sanders communicated to the Chapter that Dr. Wesley had requested him to state his wish to resign the office of organist.'

LEEDS.

In the opening months of 1842 Wesley exchanged the quietude of Exeter and the charm of its lovely county for the more strenuous surroundings and air-begrimed atmosphere of a Yorkshire manufacturing town. Attracted by a good offer made to him by the Rev. Walter Farquhar (afterwards Dean) Hook, he became organist of Leeds Parish Church, then recently rebuilt, and of which Wesley 'opened' the organ on October 18, 1841, though he did not play at the consecration of the church on September 2, 1841. 'I have secured a man named Hill and his nephew from Westminster Abbey,' wrote the energetic vicar of Leeds. 'I am to pay them £120 a year. How I shall raise the money I know not; but this I know, a good choir must be formed, if I go to prison for it.' Again: 'Dr. Wesley says that our service is most sublime; beyond anything he ever heard in any cathedral.' James Hill was choirmaster and Wesley began his duties as organist in February, 1842. In that year he published his two sets of 'Three Pieces for a Chamber organ.' These, dedicated to Lady Acland, one of his Exeter pupils, included such favourites as the Choral Song and Fugue, the Andante in G, the Larghetto with variations in F sharp minor, &c. As in the case of nearly all Wesley's compositions, these works aroused the ire, not unmingled with jeers, of the critics. 'We regret exceedingly to see a man of Dr. Wesley's great and cultivated genius put forth such works as those now before us,' was the opening sentence of a review, evidently from the pen of the late Mr. J. W. Davison, in the Musical Examiner of January 14, 1843. 'They are dull,' 'tedious,' 'monotonous,' 'uninteresting,' 'vague,' 'ugly,' 'insufferable,' and 'unbearable.' These are some of the terms employed in regard to compositions which have long been accepted as classics of the organ.* The 'March and Rondo for the pianoforte,' published about the same time, shared a similar fate at the hands of the same reviewer. It is no wonder that Wesley became embittered against 'writers on the press.'

* For an interesting and instructive article by his old pupil, the late Dr. G. M. Garrett, on Wesley's organ music, see THE MUSICAL TIMES for July, 1894. Dr. Garrett, it may be remembered, was the Editor of the new edition of Wesley's organ works issued by Messrs. Novello a few years ago.

'WESLEY IN E.'

In 1844 Wesley, for the second time, became a candidate for the Edinburgh Professorship. He was again defeated, on this occasion by Henry Hugo Pierson, who 'never did anything' in regard to discharging the duties of that office. In the same year, and also in 1846, he gave a course of lectures on Ecclesiastical music at the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool. The years 1844-45 saw the publication of his famous Service in E, written at the request of the late Mr. Martin Cawood, an enthusiastic amateur of Leeds, to whom Wesley sold the copyright for fifty guineas. In an exhaustive preface to the work, he drew a comparison between the 'fatiguing monotony' and the 'jog-trot emphasis' of the cold, contrapuntal ancient settings of the grand Ambrosian Hymn, and the less frigid style of poetic expression, of which latter, it is hardly necessary to say, he was so consummate a master. Cathedral dignitaries and cathedral parsimony in regard to music, more especially as applicable to Exeter in those days, are also commented upon in these vigorously expressed forewords. The Service, which may be termed epoch-making, provoked the usual scathingalities of the critics. One of their number thus expressed himself in the columns of a London newspaper:—

> This is not the work of a poetical musician. Mr. Wesley may be, and indeed is a wonderfully executive organist; but he has no creative fancy beyond that of foolishly entering the ring with his betters. His work is coldly correct, and that is all.
> Our reverence for the ancients may have provoked us to severity; but we do not like to hear lake birds cawing at the nightingales of Elizabeth's reign.

Samuel Sebastian Wesley not a poetical musician!

A TAVISTOCK BAIT.

A curious and little known episode in the career of Dr. Wesley has now to be recorded. In the year 1846 the good people of Tavistock were the proud possessors of a new organ which Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons had erected in their parish church. There is, or was, good fishing to be had in the neighbourhood of the pleasant old Devonshire town. With a knowledge of Wesley's weakness for the rod and line, what more natural than that the inhabitants thereof should 'drop a line' to the organist of Leeds Parish Church in the hope of hooking him for Tavistock? In fact, the local newspapers of the time actually stated that Wesley had swallowed the bait; in other words, that he had actually accepted the organistship of Tavistock Church! But they were a little 'too previous' in that statement, though there was some justification for it, as we shall presently see. Wesley, however, opened the new organ at Tavistock on June 25, 1846. Admission to the church was to be obtained only by purchased tickets for the morning and evening performances, and the Bishop of Exeter (Dr. Philpotts) was announced to preach. But when 'the good Bishop' heard of this financial procedure he became 'very angry,' ordered every ticket to be cancelled, and the church to be thrown open. His Lordship, excellent Prelate, did not, however, 'object to a collection after the performances'! Not only did 'the good Bishop' exercise his censorship over the 'filthy lucre' part of this organ inauguration, but 'a piece, objected to by the Bishop, was omitted'! Poor Wesley! Unfortunately, the title of this piece cannot be discovered. Was it his favourite 'overture to "Jessonda," Spohr'? He played this for many years at his various organ recitals, but he never published the transcription.*

WESLEY v. BURTON.

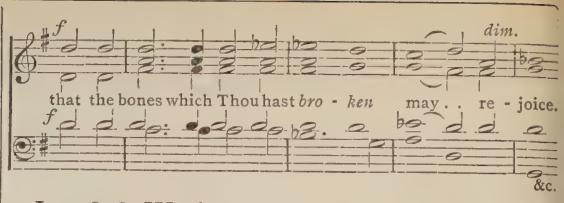
That Wesley seriously thought of severing his connection with Leeds in 1846, and seeking the more congenial piscatorial attractions of Tavistock, is proved by a comparatively unknown trial which took place at the York Assizes on July 14, 1852. The plaintiff in this action was Dr. S. S. Wesley; the defendant, the late Mr. R. S. Burton, then choirmaster of Leeds Parish Church (in succession to James Hill), who subsequently succeeded Wesley as organist in 1849. The report of the trial in the Leeds newspapers may thus be summarised:—

The action was to recover £158 1s. 9d., being the balance of an amount due from defendant to plaintiff for a business (!) sold to him in 1849. In 1846 plaintiff contemplated leaving Leeds, and an agreement was drawn up between him and defendant, whereby the latter consented to purchase the business of the plaintiff for 500 guineas—250 to be paid on the Doctor leaving, and 250 in twelve months afterwards. The plaintiff, however, did not leave Leeds until 1849, when he obtained the situation (!) of organist at Winchester Cathedral. Prior to doing so, he saw the defendant, and asked him if he was willing to abide by the former agreement, to which he replied he was; but in reality he had not done so, as he had only paid the plaintiff £350. The plaintiff was examined, and some documentary evidence having been put in, Mr. Sergeant Wilkins (for the defendant) said that he could not resist the case, and it appeared that defendant had made some mistake as to what were the terms of the agreement. A verdict was taken for plaintiff for £100.

AN ACCIDENT—BROKEN BONES.

On December 23, 1847, while fishing in the river Rye, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, Wesley met with a serious accident. In leaping across a brook he fell and received a compound fracture of the right leg below the knee. He was alone, and lay incapacitated for four hours before he was discovered in his helpless and pain-racked condition. He was laid up for several weeks at the Black Swan, Helmsley, and during the weary period of recovery there he wrote his deeply expressive anthem, 'Cast me not away from Thy presence.' There must have been a touch of physical as well as poetic feeling in the passage—



In 1848 Wesley, according to his printed testimonials, appears to have made a third and final attempt to obtain a Professorship of Music. This time it was Oxford, upon the death of Dr. Crotch; but, as at Edinburgh, the composer of 'The Wilderness' was passed over in favour of the composer of 'Home, sweet home.' Amongst the various testimonials which he received on these three Professorship candidatures were those from Spohr, Crotch, Moscheles, Vincent Novello, Henry Smart, and Gauntlett—the last-named said that he (Wesley) was 'truly extraordinary on the pedals.' Spohr testified as follows:—

By the compositions which Mr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley, of Leeds, has sent me for examination, I made the acquaintance of a Composer who has already succeeded happily in very different kinds of compositions, as proved by the numerous printed works now in my hands. They show, without exception, that he is master of the style and the form of these species, keeping himself closely to the boundaries which the several kinds of composition demand, not only in sacred things, but also in glees and music for the piano. The sacred music is chiefly distinguished by a noble, often even an antique style, and by rich chosen harmonies, as well as by surprisingly beautiful modulations. Along with this they possess the advantage to be easily sung.

Respecting the abilities of Mr. Wesley as a practitioner, I heard him called when I was last in England, the first of all at present there living performers on the organ.

This is what I have to state about the abilities of Mr. Wesley, to judge by the music in hand, and as an artist; and testify the same by my signature and seal.

(Signed) Dr. Louis Spohr.

Cassel, 30th January, 1844.

The Leeds period saw the publication (in 1843) of 'The Psalter, or Psalms of David with Chants.' The plan of the work is best described in Wesley's own words:—

This Work is a collection of the best Chants in daily use at Cathedrals; to which have been added a few of unusual merit by the late Samuel Wesley. The Chants are printed on the same page with the words, which are pointed for Chanting in a manner by which the text is not disfigured as in most books of the kind.

Dr. S. S. Wesley, the compiler of this Work, has been at different periods engaged in the Choral Services of Her Majesty's Chapels, St. Paul's Cathedral, and the Cathedrals of Hereford and Exeter. The Work has been prepared for the Service of the Parish Church, Leeds, and for the use of those who seek to establish the practice of chanting the Psalms in the mode practised in the Church of England.

S. S. WESLEY'S QUADRILLES.

Another Leeds product is of a totally different kind from The Psalter: it is a Set of Quadrilles! The story of their origin may thus be told. One evening Dr. Wesley was dining at the house of his Leeds friend, Mr. Martin Cawood. In the course of the meal a guest remarked that he could not understand the 'learned' music Dr. Wesley composed and that was sung at the Parish Church. 'Why do you not write something lighter — something that we can understand?' asked this gentleman. Wesley's actual reply—not to say what he thought—is not recorded; but, for a wonder, he took up the idea—ironically, perhaps—by writing a set of quadrilles, which he dedicated to the hostess of the evening. The title-page of the publication runs thus:—

* Those who wish to obtain detailed information concerning this Tavistock episode in Wesley's career will find it in The Plymouth and Devonport Weekly Journal, April 2, June 25, July 2, 1846; and the Plymouth Herald, April 11, 1846.

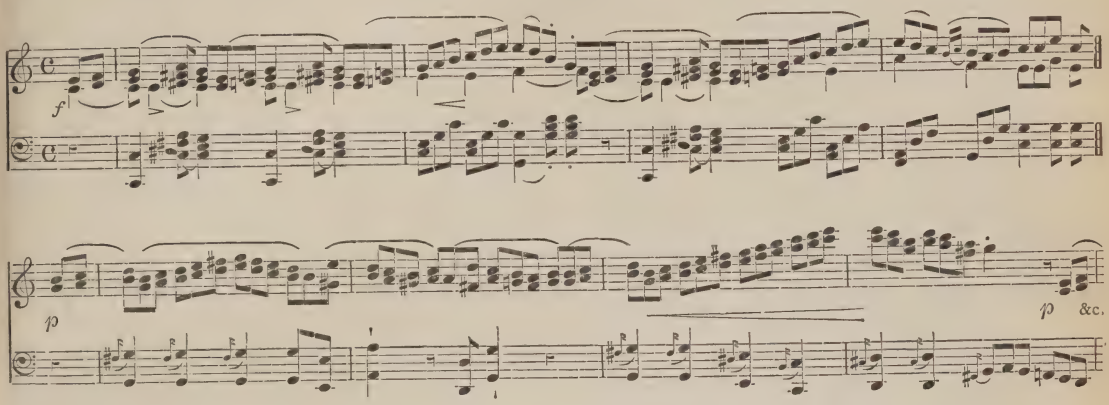
Jeux d'esprit. | Quadrilles | à la Herz | composed and dedicated | to | Mrs. Martin Cawood | By | Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

These Quadrilles, like all Wesley's pianoforte music, are by no means easy to play. Moreover, Wesley was not content to follow the usual custom in quadrille music. In nearly every case the repeats are not only for the most part printed out in full, but there are characteristic variants in the treatment of the phrases. We give the opening bars of this amusing production of the composer of 'Aurelia':—

Le Pantalon.



Wesley was in his prime during the seven and a half years he held the Leeds appointment. He had a fine choir of Yorkshire voices and an organ worthy of his masterly attainments in executive skill, of which his extemporaneous performances were a marked feature. Here is the subject of a fugue which he extemporised after a Sunday evening service at Leeds in 1842:—

He was organist at the Birmingham Musical Festivals of 1843 and 1849. On the first occasion he introduced in one of his solos 'O ruddier than the cherry,' in order, as a critic observed, 'to show off the power of the new ophicleide stop'; which 'had a most wonderful effect—it was truly Polyphemus-like'! At the Festival of 1849—when Mario finished 'Then shall the righteous' with a high A flat!—Wesley gave a masterly performance, the record of which is worth quoting in full from the Musical World of September 8, 1849:—

Dr. Wesley, the most justly celebrated performer of the present day, played a solo on the great organ of the Hall. Dr. Wesley began with a very long fantasia, the plan of which we cannot pretend to define after a single hearing. In the course of the fantasia almost every effect of which the resources of this enormous instrument are capable was developed by the learned musician with masterly skill. But by far the most interesting part of his performance was the extemporaneous fugue with which it terminated. A more ingenious and extraordinary improvisation we never listened to. Dr. Wesley chose an unusually short theme, as though resolved to show how easily he could set contrapuntal difficulties at defiance. After working this with remarkable clearness, he introduced a second subject which he soon brought in conjunction with the first, and subsequently a third; ultimately combining the three, in the stretto of the fugue, with the facility of a profound and accomplished master. Dr. Wesley's performance was greeted with uproarious applause, and, while he was playing, it was interesting to observe the members of the orchestra and chorus crowding round the organ, anxious to obtain a view of his fingers or his feet, with which he manages the ponderous pedals with such wonderful dexterity.

He was present, as a listener, at the meeting of 1846, when Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was produced, under the composer's personal direction, on August 26 of that year.

The Leeds respite from the joys (not superabundant in Wesley's case) and sorrows of cathedral life gave him the opportunity of stating his opinions upon cathedral music. This he did in a remarkable and well-written pamphlet, entitled:—

A few words on Cathedral Music and the Musical System of the Church, with a plan of reform, by Samuel Sebastian Wesley, Mus. Doc. . . . London: F. & J. Rivington. . . . 1849.

This pamphlet, published at half-a-crown, is dated 'Leeds, May 24, 1849,' three months before his call to Winchester. At the end of these 'few words' Wesley printed two compositions by his father, Samuel Wesley:—(1) 'Antiphona—Sex Vocibus Cantanda,' and (2) 'Carmen Funebre.' Before leaving Leeds he was presented by the choirmen of the Parish Church with his portrait painted in oils by W. R. Briggs, a local artist. This interesting portrait of him in middle life—ætat thirty-nine—we are enabled to reproduce as our extra supplement this month through the kindness of Dr. Wesley's son, the Rev. Francis Gwynne Wesley, M.A., vicar of Hamsteels, Durham.

WINCHESTER.

'At a Chapter meeting held at Winchester Cathedral, August 21, 1849, Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley was appointed organist and master of the choristers at a salary of £150 per annum. Before he was sworn in and admitted' (on October 5, 1849), continue the Chapter records, 'the Statutes affecting the duties were read over to him; and in addition to these the Chapter drew up the following orders:—

i. That as Master of the Choristers he was to give them the benefit of his personal instruction in music and singing, and to be responsible to the Dean and Canons for their due progress and improvement in the same.
ii. That besides accompanying the daily morning and evening Services he should preside twice a week at Rehearsals.
iii. That he should carry on these duties in a spirit of respectful and courteous attention to the wishes of the Dean and Canons, and with due regard to the authority of the Precentor, and with kind and conciliatory demeanour towards the subordinate members of the Choir.
iv. That steady and uniform attention should be paid to the performance of the Choral Service, and to that careful training and preparation of the Choristers which is essential to their effectiveness.'

Could we but know the inner workings of Wesley's mind whilst he was listening to the reading of these 'orders'! Like many of his predecessors in the organistship of Winchester Cathedral, he was also organist of Winchester College.

There are some indications that at this time he desired to 'hold communication' with London. Here is one, in the form of an advertisement which appeared on the front page of THE MUSICAL TIMES for February 1, 1850:—

Dr. S. S. Wesley, begs to announce his intention of giving Lessons on the Organ, in London, and will give a course of Twenty Lessons for 10 Guineas. Parties requiring his services are requested to address a letter to him, by post, at Winchester, or at Chappell's, Bond Street, London.—December 24, 1849.

Another is the fact that on August 10, 1850, he was appointed to a professorship of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music, and 'a class was formed for him.' Are there any old students now living who took lessons from him at Tenterden Street? The great Exhibition was naturally visited by the organist of Winchester Cathedral. According to Father Willis it was in the great glass house in Hyde Park that Wesley suddenly invented 'radiating and composition pedals.'*

At the Birmingham Festival of 1852, 'The Wilderness' was performed with orchestral accompaniment and conducted by its composer. The performance was very bad, and the work fared still worse at the hands (or pens) of the critics of The Times and the Athenæum. Mr. Davison referred to it as 'deficient in melody, confused in harmony and part-writing, full of intricate combinations and "modulation run mad"; it by no means gives a true expression to the text which it is intended to illustrate.' Mr. Chorley observed: 'It is a weak, tiresome, and pedantic exercise, not likely to be again heard of'! But lo! in less than a year afterwards the review columns of the Athenæum contained this criticism: 'The anthem to the words "The Wilderness" is one of the best characterized of the series, and seems to us brilliant and vigorous.' There surely could not be a better study in the 'change of mind' of a musical critic. It is no wonder that Wesley was roused to fury at these onslaughts upon his anthem. He wrote very trenchant letters on the subject to the Hampshire Chronicle of September 18, and to Aris's Birmingham Gazette of October 4, 1852, in which he anathematized the 'mongrel phraseology' and the 'intrinsic worthlessness' of the subject-matter of Mr. Davison's criticism, which, he added, 'may be likened to a glass of very bad porter, the larger and better portion of which is the undrinkable froth.' A long correspondence on the subject will be found in the Musical World during the months of September, October, and November, 1852.

The following year (1853) witnessed the publication of his 'Twelve Anthems,' issued by subscription and dedicated to Dean Garnier, of Winchester. Writing to the late Mr. Freemantle, of Sheffield, on this subject, Wesley said:—

> 'My 12 anthems will be good, and are not a mere catchpenny publication. But I cannot Puff and go on as some do. I must let my character have its due weight, whatever it may be.'

[MR. KELLOW PYE writes to say that he obtained the Gresham Prize in 1833 for his anthem 'Turn Thee again, O Lord,' the inference being that he obtained it against Dr. S. S. Wesley's anthem 'The Wilderness.' While it is perfectly true that Mr. Kellow Pye received a Gresham medal at Haberdashers' Hall on July 4, 1833, when his prize anthem was performed, it was for the competition of 1832, No. 2 of the Gresham Prize competitions instituted in 1831, and not for No. 3, competed for in 1833. It is also true that Wesley sent in his famous anthem for that 1832 contest. But, as we stated in the first instalment of this biographical sketch, it was received too late, and thus it was allowed to be held over until the following competition (1833), when John Goss obtained the prize with his anthem 'Have mercy upon me, O God,' and which was performed at the Mansion House, June 7, 1834.

In regard to Mr. Pye's contention, there is unassailable documentary evidence to prove that he has unfortunately confused the year of receiving the medal with that of competition. As we were careful to state, there are two letters—from (1) Alfred Novello, with whom the manuscripts had to be deposited, and (2) R. J. S. Stevens, one of the adjudicators—showing that Wesley's 'The Wilderness' was still sub judice for the competition of 1833, when Goss received the prize. These letters are respectively dated November 12 and 30, 1833—that is to say, four months after the 1832 competition had been quite settled up and Mr. Pye had received his medal. This documentary evidence is incontestable.]

MAY-DAY MORNING ON MAGDALEN TOWER, OXFORD

BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.

What do we up so early this May morn?
Hath Health the Huntress from some neighbouring hill
Blown such a blast of her enchanted horn
That youth forgets his slumber? Gathering still Quick, eager forms the solemn pathway fill,
Past Magdalen's portal, scale her endless stair,
Still spiring upward, like the lark, until Bursts on the sense the fresh, cool morning air,
And cheerful speech of friends already gathered there.

Dean Burgon.

In traversing the streets of Oxford at the matutinal hour of four, one has just the feeling of being a little earlier than the proverbial worm. But feathered songsters—doubtless having breakfasted—are already carolling their lay in the fresh morning air. Other songsters—not of the feathered tribe, be it observed—are in the act of shaking off dull sloth and making ready to 'joyful rise' to the summit of Magdalen Tower, from which exalted spot they will carol their lay on this morning of May-Day.

Antiquity is by no means the least attractive feature of Oxford. 'How do you get your grass to grow so green?' an American lady is said to have enquired of a College gardener. 'Well, mum, we mows 'em, we rolls 'em, and we waters 'em, for a thousand years,' was the old man's reply. The language was a little figurative perhaps, but not without a substratum of truth. This May-Day morning music-making on Magdalen Tower, for which we have journeyed from London to 'assist,' is one of those old-world customs which are all too quickly disappearing in the rush of these unromantic days of our modern life.

In regard to the history of this interesting function, no better authority could be quoted than the latest chronicler of Magdalen College, the Rev. H. A. Wilson, M.A., Fellow, Librarian, and Founder's Chaplain of the College, who has produced a book wherein strict accuracy and pleasant readableness go hand in hand.* Mr. Wilson sets out by destroying two traditions: (1) 'That the hymn which is now annually sung is the surviving relic of a former custom of saying a yearly Requiem Mass for Henry VII. on the top of the Tower; and (2) that a payment made to the College by the Rectory of Slymbridge is intended, or was directed by Henry VII. to be applied to the maintenance of the custom. That mass was ever said on the top of the Tower is a thing exceedingly unlikely, and there is no evidence of such a proceeding.' The Slymbridge payment was for the general purposes of the College.

Having disposed of these traditions, Magdalen's erudite historian goes on to say: 'It seems not unlikely that the usage of singing on the Tower began when the Tower itself was new [1504-5], and that it had its origin in an inauguration ceremony, for which the early hours of May-day might then have seemed a reasonable occasion.' This gives a four hundred years' touch of antiquity to this May-day celebration. The earliest-known account of the ceremony is that of Wood, who says concerning it: 'The choral Ministers of this House do, according to an ancient custom, salute Flora every year on the first of May, at four in the morning, with vocal music of several parts.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, Oxford.)

Which having been sometimes well performed hath given great content to the neighbourhood and auditors underneath.' As Mr. Wilson observes: 'This suggests something of the nature of a secular concert.' In the middle of the eighteenth century the performance was 'a merry Concert of both Vocal and Instrumental Music, consisting of several merry Ketches, and lasting almost 2 hours.' As in Wood's day, this concert began at four o'clock in the morning.

'The adoption of the present hour of five,' continues Mr. Wilson, 'and the substitution of the hymn from the College "grace" for the "merry ketches," are believed to have been due to stress of weather on a particular occasion in the latter part of the eighteenth century, when, the usual concert being found impossible, the Organist and choir ascended the Tower and sang the hymn, choosing it, probably, as a piece of which the words and the music were alike known by heart. The alteration, once made, was no doubt found to save trouble in "rehearsals," and to relieve the choir from an observance which must, in cold or wet weather, have been burdensome. It was only natural that the exception should become the rule. The wearing of surplices by the choir and other foundationers was introduced at a later time still [circa 1844], after the regular use of the hymn had turned a secular observance into a religious one.'

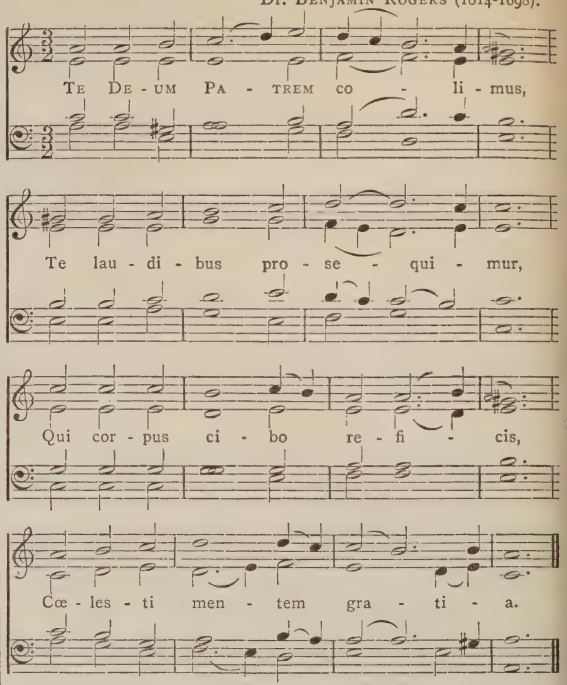
So much for its history. Now let us attempt to describe the ceremony itself. 'Mind you call for me not later than five minutes past four,' said Dr. Varley Roberts, the organist of the College, with an emphasis upon the 'four,' and I will take you up with me and the members of the College before visitors are admitted. Upon arriving at the College at 4.30 there are unmistakable signs of 'up in the morning early.' The ascent of the Tower—145 feet high—is by no means a prestissimo operation. Dr. Roberts may well have observed that 'if you should happen to get behind some bulky person who gets wedged in the trap door at the roof, you will be too late!' The view from the Tower-top on this perfectly lovely and air-clear morning is indescribably beautiful. How many of England's greatest intellects may be recalled when surveying from this elevation the great cluster of venerable Colleges which constitute the University of Oxford! Down in the street below, as well as on Magdalen's famous bridge, a great crowd of pedestrians and cyclists, looking very diminutive from this exalted coign of vantage, is rapidly assembling to listen to the dulcet strains. On the top of the Tower—which will accommodate about 200 persons—a rope separates the Commoners and privileged visitors from the Dons, Demies, and the chapel choir, all of whom are surpliced, the graduates wearing their hoods. Amongst the Dons may be observed the genial President, the Vice-President—which office is now held by Mr. Paul Victor Mendelssohn Benecke, a grandson of Mendelssohn's and one of Oxford's most distinguished scholars—and, of course, the organist of Magdalen, Dr. Varley Roberts, who conducts the choir.

The last stroke of five is the signal to begin the simple ceremony. All heads are uncovered. The note of the hour bell is E, and from this the choir take their starting-note, A, to sing the following hymn. The words are by Dr. Thomas Smith (Fellow, 1665-92) and set to the music to which it is still sung, as part of the College grace, by Dr. Benjamin Rogers, organist of Magdalen College Chapel from 1664 to 1686.

We give the music with the first of the five Latin verses, and an English version of that and the remaining four stanzas:—

HYMNUS EUCHARISTICUS.

Dr. Benjamin Rogers (1614-1698).



1. To Thee, O God the Father—Thee
All worship, praise and glory be!
Thy Hand bestows our daily bread,
And that wherewith our souls are fed.

2. To Thee, O Jesu—Thee the Son,
To Thee alone-begotten One,
Who for our sakes did'st not abhor
The Virgin's womb—our hearts we pour.

3. When Thou upon Thy cross wast laid,
To God a willing offering made,
The hope of life first dawned below,
Our joy, our only Saviour, Thou!

4. To Thee, O Holy Ghost—by whom
The Babe was born of Mary's womb,
Both God and man—to Thee we raise
The hymn of everlasting praise.

5. Oh! Three in One who didst devise
Such pathway back to Paradise,
This mystery of love be sung
In every age, by every tongue!

The verses are sung, in Latin, at about the speed of minim = 90. The perfect blending of the voices is a marked feature in the singing of these simple harmonies, and the quaint old music is wonderfully beautiful as it greets the golden orb of day. The bells—ten in number—then ring out a jubilant peal, an operation which causes the Tower to sway in a manner distinctly vibratory. Thus is brought to a close this brief, unique, and unceremonious ceremony. Whether, as has been assumed, it be a survival of sun worship or not, the sympathetic participator in it cannot fail to be affected by its impressiveness, its antique associations, and reverential observance.

The undergraduates, having been up with the lark, are not unnaturally 'up to their larks' at the conclusion of the ceremony. This diversion of the dawn of day consists of throwing down caps and gowns from the Magdalen College, Oxford.

Tower-top. The freak is harmless enough. But a Fellow of the College—who has 'done' this annual celebration no less than thirty-five times—tells us that formerly rotten eggs found their way to the top of the Tower, all too soon to be hurled down upon the heads of unoffending pedestrians below. A wily College porter, however, proved to be equal to those foul practices of the young gentlemen of his day. He stood at the door of the Tower, and when he espied an unusually bulky pocket, he banged his hand against it, with the result that he broke the spell by breaking the shell.

But it is time to make our way to the College Hall to a 5.30 breakfast, where Dr. Roberts hospitably entertains his friends and the choristers. This fine apartment is lined on three sides by 'linen-fold' panelling dating from 1541. In the centre of one of the figured panels, among groups representing the acts of S. Mary Magdalen, is seen the half-length effigy of Henry VIII. Other interesting portraits are those of Cardinal Wolsey and Lord Selborne, both former Fellows of the College, and of the Rev. Dr. Martin Joseph Routh, who was President for the long period of sixty-three years—1791-1854. Breakfast over, a stroll on the picturesque river-side grounds of the College—which cover nearly 100 acres—is not the least pleasant episode in this May-Day function. Here we behold nature in one of her loveliest aspects—for is she not clothed in the fresh garb of early spring? The sun shines gloriously, the sky is cloudless, the deer are quietly browsing under the fine old elms of the grove—'dainty relic of monastic days'—the birds are trilling their sweetest roundelays, and in the exuberance of their fresh foliage even the trees seem to rejoice and be glad on this perfect spring morning.

After attending service in the College Chapel—the impressions of which are recorded on p. 386—we happen to run across Professor Sir Hubert Parry, who is 'up' to examine a batch of would-be Mus. Bacs., in conjunction with his co-examiners, Dr. Varley Roberts and Dr. Basil Harwood. At this particular moment—in the precincts of, but not in the examination-room—Sir Hubert has more of the demeanour of the undergraduate than that usually associated with the Professor. 'No doctors this time,' he says, 'and no eight-part counterpoint, thank goodness.' Although many would think that getting up so early as 3.30 a.m. was 'no joke,' Sir Hubert is of opinion that it may be conducive to the making of jokes; and is it wise to contradict a Professor? A call upon that book-loving antiquary, Mr. Taphouse—who in his fine collection of old music has some capital material for an article in a future number of The Musical Times—concludes one of those visits to Oxford which always leave behind them the pleasantest memories.

The view of Magdalen College is from a photograph taken by Messrs. Henry W. Taunt and Co., Oxford.

MUSIC AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Not the Institution in Tenterden Street as you, reading in a musical journal, might suppose. No, it is to the 'Royal Academy of Arts' that I refer, and everyone knows that 'Arts' and music are quite different things. Indeed, in popular phraseology, 'Art' has a still narrower signification than is given to it at Burlington House, for though the man in the street may understand that by the addition of a final 'e' a mere musician may become an 'artiste,' he is generally inclined to confine the word to an individual who wields a brush, to doubt its application to the sculptor, and to deny it to the architect.

It was the late Frank Buckland who once took it into his head to visit an Academy exhibition and write an essay on it from the naturalist's point of view. It may amuse the readers of The Musical Times to give them the results of a walk round the present exhibition with a view to discover the pictures that deal with musical subjects. It must be premised, however, that my remarks will have nothing to do with the artistic worth of the pictures. It is possible to imagine a painting which may be a superb work of art though it represent a violinist bowing below the bridge, while, on the other hand, a picture may from the purely artistic standpoint be worthless though it render the form of a penny whistle with faultless accuracy. But for my present purpose it may suffice to regard these pictures more as illustrations than as art.

The first thing then that strikes one on reviewing these musically inspired productions is the extent to which music is regarded as 'the food of love.' So commonly indeed is the tuneful art made by artists to further the lover's quest that I am inclined to continue the quotation, and complain that they 'give me excess of it,' and to fear lest 'surfeiting, the appetite may sicken, and so die.' In a painting by Mr. Stephen Reid, entitled 'The Song' (931), we have a picturesque illustration of the term 'follower,' for the peripatetic vocalist, armed with a guitar, and fortified by an exceedingly good opinion of his vocal powers, is very literally 'following' the damsel who has attracted his attention. She seems indifferent to his charms, or perhaps she has too correct an ear to care for street music, for there is an air of bewilderment about her, if not annoyance, and she glances about as if seeking the policeman of the period, who resembles the modern guardian of public order in being out of sight at the critical moment. In another picture, by Miss M. E. Kindon, the amorous minstrel meets with more appreciation, as the title, 'The Song went to her heart' (1,050), would seem to show. The title, 'Thanks, awfully' (21), sufficiently indicates the modernity of subject in Mr. Alfred W. Strutt's picture, in which the grand pianoforte takes the place of the more picturesque lute or guitar. A young lady has been helping to stimulate after-dinner conversation by her performance of a composition sufficiently light in calibre not to interfere with the proceeds of digestion. She is still toying with the keys, as the enamoured youth at her side expresses his conventional gratitude, moved perhaps more by her eyes than her fingers. A much more platonic affection is suggested by Mr. Carl Schloesser's 'A Duet' (929), but I cannot help fancying that the old professor sitting at the harpsichord has a sincere regard, if of a fatherly kind, for the agreeable young lady who is playing the mandoline—or is about to play it, for she has not yet her plectrum in her hand. Perhaps the 'harpsichord' is really an early pianoforte, for there is a portrait on the wall that seems to be meant for Beethoven, which would bring us well into the reign of the pianoforte. As the keyboard is out of sight, we are in this matter left to conjecture.

In looking through the Academy after musical subjects I have come across a really curious coincidence. Three recently elected Academicians have sent to the exhibition their diploma works, which have to be deposited at Burlington House on their election to full membership, and each of the three has chosen a musician as his subject. Sir W. B. Richmond has taken for his theme the prototype of the modern virtuoso, Orpheus (138), whom he represents returning from the shades, in illustration of Shelley's lines:—

> So Orpheus, seized and torn
> By the sharp fangs of an insatiate grief,
> Mænad-like waved his lyre in the high air
> And wildly shrieked, where she is it is dark.

The poet's suggestion is closely followed by the painter, but the attitude of the distraught performer is somehow irresistibly suggestive of the operatic tenor's top note. The other two pictures which are to be hidden away in the diploma gallery are both of lady lutenists. Mr. Abbey's beautiful study of an auburn-haired lady is simply styled 'A lute-player' (5), while Mr. E. J. Gregory's is entitled 'Après' (201), the title leaving more to the imagination than does the picture itself, which shows more insight into the texture of the dexterously painted brocade than into the character or mood of the lady who has sung her song or 'touched' a sprightly Ayre. Returning for a moment to Mr. Abbey's picture, it is a matter of detail, but worth noting from the standpoint I am now assuming, that the lute is an instrument which is not plucked with a plectrum, but is played, like the guitar, with the fingers.

There is safety, as well as picturesqueness, in turning to archaic types of instruments. The young lady in Mr. Hacker's 'Musicienne du Silence' (309) is not holding her viol in what seems to us a very business-like position, but it would require exceptional archæological acumen to dispute its accuracy. At any rate, she herself appears to be well satisfied with her performance, and her lady friend does not manifest any outward signs of annoyance. Her instrument is perhaps more open to criticism. It has a quaintly archaic form of scroll and some curious ornament on the belly, but its general form follows the lines of the fully developed violin more closely than one would expect from the surroundings. When one is brought to modern times criticism of this material kind has, of course, a surer ground. One may wonder, for instance, what music is being played by the singular quartet party in Miss Agnes E. Walker's 'A difficult passage' (123), where the instruments are a pianoforte, a violin, a violoncello (with an enormous scroll), and a double-bass. The fact that the pianist has no music before her, but is intently watching the struggles of the violoncellist, would suggest 'vamping,' were it not that the others are following, with more or less care, copies of music which, from their small size, and the distance of some of the players, must be very trying to their eyesight. No, I must confess that I rather incline to mistrust this bogus quartet party and the music they are playing. I very much mistrust the charming young lady organist of Miss Jessie Macgregor's 'Silent Requiem: Anno Domini, 1900' (1,059), in spite of the reassuring adjective 'silent.' The organ loft is reality itself, it is obviously studied with painstaking fidelity from a fine renaissance case with carved cherubs of the Grinling Gibbons type—not unlike the fine case at Trinity College, Cambridge. But from the strain of sentimentality in the young lady's upturned eyes I seem to fancy that she has just played, or contemplates playing, a pretty little 'Minster musing,' or 'Sabbath soliloquy,' or 'Vesper voluntary,' with a pedal note thrown in occasionally, whenever circumstances allow time for its exact location on the pedal-board. One thing is certain, with such an expression on her face it is not John Sebastian Bach that she plays.

Most real of all, as an illustration of genuine English music, is Mr. W. Dendy Sadler's 'The Squire's Song' (327). After a day's sport the old country squire has condescended to the bar parlour with a select company of jovial spirits, whom he 'obliges with a song.' Some such collection as Tom D'Urfey's 'Pills to purge Melancholy,' or 'The delightful Grove,' arises in one's mind in looking at this carefully studied illustration of eighteenth century English music in its most characteristic aspect. The hearers show more than a conventionally polite interest in the song. To judge from the smiles of some of them, the song would seem a humorous one, were it not that the squire's rather sentimental expression suggests that he is warbling that 'Katy's a Beauty surpassing,' or that 'Pretty Armeda will be kind.' If, however, we have regard to the singer's white hairs, it may be more in keeping to imagine him dwelling on his youthful days, and singing of 'When Aurelia first I courted.' From its title, 'Two crotchets in a bar' (1,622), by Mr. W. J. Urquhart, would appear to deal with a musical subject, but the connection is merely nominal; the 'crotchets' are individuals presumably of an odd character, the 'bar' is that which is only rendered musical by the untutored strains of its convivial inmates.

The only musician's portrait is the presentation one of Mr. Alfred Gibson, our well-known violinist, which has been painted by Mr. Herbert A. Olivier (1,033) with great refinement, though, in his desire to make much of his sitter's geniality, he has decidedly minimised his force of character. In the water-colour room there is a triptych by Mr. H. Raymond Thompson, 'The poetry of music' (1,133), in which Orpheus, Homer, and St. Cecilia are represented, and among the sculpture is a large relief by Mr. Arthur C. White, entitled 'At a solemn music' (1,941), which hardly realizes the power and severe beauty of Milton's Ode to the same degree as does Sir Hubert Parry's perfect setting of the poem. H. T.

THE TRAINING OF A CHORUS

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS

By Henry Coward

(Chorus-master of the Sheffield Festival Choir).

To the oft asked question, 'Is choral singing declining?' there is only one reply. Choral singing is not declining. I must, however, make an exception. It is, unfortunately, on the downward grade in those places where inefficient, lifeless, unsympathetic, uninspiring conductors of choral societies have, by their culpable neglect, done their best to strangle choral work by means of insipid colourless performances. In such cases it is only the inherent vitality of massed vocal singing that has kept the choral spark aflame. Although one has to confess to such ineptitude amongst so-called 'conductors'—if Koko of 'Mikado' fame could exercise his office on, say, fifty per cent. of them there would be a distinct gain to choral societies in general—we may depend upon it, that as soon as these incompetents are replaced by real 'live' conductors who understand their business, the musically 'submerged tenth' will take heart of grace, and choral music will regain its proper place everywhere. In those parts of Yorkshire with which I am connected choral music is very much alive, as is evidenced by the ever increasing number of works performed, not only by societies, but by church and chapel choirs in many towns and villages. For one work performed ten years ago, there now seems to be about a dozen, while in the matter of anthems and other smaller pieces the increase has been a hundredfold; moreover, while the present race of enthusiastic Yorkshire conductors exists, the progress will continue.

THE FUTURE POSITION OF CHORAL-SINGING.

In things artistic the final court of appeal is the effect on the heart, mind, and conscience, and because of this there can be no doubt that choral singing will play a more important part in the music of the future; and this, notwithstanding the fact that, at a recent musical festival not a hundred miles from London, both cantata and oratorio were tabooed—a fine example of 'Hamlet' minus the mad prince.

It is a common experience to be stirred to such rapture by a brilliant orchestral performance that it seems impossible to be still further excited. But a single vocalist following such an instrumental demonstration has evoked greater enthusiasm and more deeply stirred the emotions than the brilliant orchestra had done. What is the reason of this? Because there is more of the human element in the voice; more of that subtle influence which causes spirit to respond to spirit, and as 'deep calleth unto deep at the noise of the water-spouts,' so the depths of the heart reverberate to the human voice in a peculiarly sympathetic manner. However deeply the solo voice is able to touch the springs of human feeling, the full-voiced choir is still more potent; and it is this which, from a human point of view, makes me regard chorus singing as the highest exponent of the divine in music. And as all things ever tend to the attainment of the perfect, we may say with King Olaf: 'Sure is the triumph of our faith'—i.e., the perfection and apotheosis of choral singing.

It is true that in point of executive display vocal music falls short of instrumental music. But if mere dexterity be everything, the street pianoforte or the recently invented pianolo must rank high above the pianoforte soloist, as the latter piece of mechanism can be made to far transcend what can be done by the greatest pianist that ever lived.

THE QUALIFICATIONS OF A CHOIRMASTER.

To begin at the beginning. Let us consider what should be the qualifications of a chorus-master, or choral conductor.

Taking for granted that he is a thorough musician, the first requirement is an exalted idea of the possibilities of his chorus. In nothing is the proverb 'aim high to strike high' more urgently needed. He must discard the notion that the chorus is merely a background to the principals, a foil to set off the virtuosity of the soloists; and that if the chorus only manage to get through their work without a breakdown or hitch, everything has been done that is necessary.

He should regard the chorus as the principal feature of the whole performance, arguing that, whereas the soloist has only the power of one voice for all the variations in tone colour, light and shade, declamation or entreaty, storm or calm—he, the conductor, has the moulding of the power of the sixty, hundred, or five hundred voices with which to depict the same things, and by which he can paint peace of heaven, or the fierceness of the battle, or the howling tempest in much more vivid colours. Personally, I always regard the chorus as the chief feature in a choral concert, and the soloists second; and I feel that I have neglected my duty, or that the choral music is not very good, if the chorus does not take chief honours. Similarly, at an orchestral concert, I expect the orchestra to eclipse the doings of any soloist, however clever he or she may be. Many years' experience has shown the possibilities of this expectation being abundantly realised.

But to achieve this, enthusiasm on the part of the choir is necessary. It is, therefore, a primary condition that the conductor must himself be an enthusiast, because as surely as water cannot rise above the head water behind it, no more can the chorus rise above the inspiration of the head man who stands before his choristers.

The next point to be considered is the CONSTITUTION OF THE CHORUS.

I am aware that in some districts it is difficult to get singers at all, therefore 'all is fish that comes to the net.' But assuming that singers are available, what is to be the basis of admission into a choir? Is it to be social position, ability, individual examination, or nomination? Although I am convinced that, other things being equal, the better a singer is educated, the more refined are the results obtainable, I would insist upon vocal and reading ability being the basis of admission into a choir; therefore, individual examination of every candidate should be insisted upon. This has a splendid effect, because when it is known that an individual examination is necessary, it excludes scores of incompetents who never get as far as the examination-room, but who would otherwise clamour to be members if the choral society happened to be 'the thing.'

As to the relative importance of

VOICE AND READING POWER,

I attach the utmost importance to reading power. I do not mean that a person without a voice at all should be admitted; but I always prefer singers with good average voices, who can read fairly well, to singers with really good voices who cannot read, or can only read indifferently. The reasons for this preference are these: With good readers of average voice I can extract every ounce of tone they have in them, whereas one can never get half the normal power out of a body of poor readers owing to their lack of confidence, while if they should take it into their heads to 'sing out,' they are often like the proverbial bull in a china shop. Again, the confident singer, by hitting the note fair in the middle, gets twice or thrice the amplitude of vibration, with its four-fold or nine-fold increase of intensity and loudness; and it is this intensity joined to the loudness of the sound which tells, as everyone knows who has listened to a first-rate violinist—one whose firmly struck tones have an effect far out of proportion to their mere loudness. Mathematically it stands roughly thus:—

	Power	Attack	Total
The good voice (unit of power)	4	× 1	= 4
The average voice (unit of power)	3	× 2	= 6

VOICES OF THE SHEFFIELD FESTIVAL CHORUS.

There is an impression abroad amongst the critics and others who heard the Sheffield Festival Chorus last year that it was composed of singers with exceptionally fine voices. This was not the case. It is true we had in each part say half-a-dozen singers with really splendid voices; but the great majority were nothing out of the common, indeed, if one were to judge by the criticisms of unsuccessful candidates upon many of the accepted singers, one would wonder that we had a chorus capable of even singing decently! But the singers, such as we had, did sing, and to their credit be it said they were all genuine 'triers,' a term which Yorkshire people will thoroughly understand.

STANDARD OF READING TESTS.

As to the standard of the tests imposed upon candidates, they should not only be comparatively easy, but designed to show what the candidates know rather than to find out what they don't know. There should be (a) an easy voice test, (b) a time test, and (c) a tune test. But though easy, they should be accurately done, as it is this blind certainty in something which gives the promise of future pliability and responsiveness. Some conductors test candidates by choosing some difficult piece from an oratorio at random, and if the candidate is approximately correct, he or she is accepted. This is not a good method, as it puts a premium upon mere guesswork, and is no test of what a candidate is able to master. Therefore, test simply but thoroughly.

CHOICE OF VOICES.

The saying that 'nothing beats a good old voice except a good young one,' is only true when the old voice is a worn voice, and not primarily the voice of an old singer. If I were selecting a choir for, say, a competition, I should prefer voices of sopranos and contraltos from twenty to forty years of age, tenors and basses from twenty-five to forty-five. This is only a rough average, because some of the best choralists I know, both ladies and gentlemen, have attained their jubilee. Certainly the rich, mature mellow voices of middle age are to be preferred to the thinner voices of young singers. But the ideal choir is one in which both classes, old and young, are represented. I refer to old singers because some people think that old singers must of necessity be used-up singers. This is far from being the case. Still there are in societies old singers with shrill, wiry, drawling voices, who have overstayed their welcome—in fact, have become 'old fossils.' Therefore it would be a good thing if every important society were to pass a rule to have a re-examination of every one of its members every five years.

THE REHEARSALS.

The touchstone of the success of a society or choir is the character of the rehearsals. If they are made bright and cheery, the society will prosper; but if they become dull and heavy a meagre attendance inevitably follows, with its consequent inefficient rendering of works at performances, and this, sooner or later, spells ruin. The conductor should strive to make each member say—

'I have been there and still would go.'

He would then be able to urge upon the members the old election cry of 'Poll early and often,' putting all due emphasis on the often. Reference will be made later on to the specific points at which a conductor should aim, but keeping the chorus constantly engaged should be a cardinal point with him. From the moment the rehearsal begins he should keep his singers 'at it,' either singing or in listening to instructions. And he should let his remarks be heard. It is a mistake to fancy you are instructing, guiding, or directing a chorus, when you are merely muttering a private soliloquy or holding a conversation with your music-stand, which mutterings perchance may be overheard by the front row of the chorus.

'ONE THING AT A TIME.'

Then, again, a conductor should not attempt too much at one rehearsal. Some conductors begin fault-finding at the first go off; they want the chorus to commence singing with expression all at once, besides which they want the words of same phrased, and though it may be a most difficult passage, they want it to be sung correctly, and so on. And then because these things are not accomplished, they grumble, or fidget, or glower, and make everybody feel uncomfortable. The wisest plan is to go straight on sol-faing or vocalising the music; 'blunder through it' somehow, then start again, and soon the choir will have grasped the idea of the piece well enough to practise it privately. The difference between the theoretically fine plan of 'perfecting the thing as you go along' and the less ambitious method of doing 'one thing at a time' is this: from one the singers get irritation, while from the other they get inspiration.

Amongst the hints I venture to offer to conductors I would say: When you have anything to say choose the right time for saying it. Suppose you have kept your singers at work without a moment's rest, as soon as you see signs of flagging interest, then make your remarks, which, if made earlier, when they were all bursting for 'a sing,' would have been regarded by many as a waste of their precious time. Again, so arrange that the pieces rehearsed be a rest from each other—for example, after some shouting choruses, choose a quiet one; after a difficult piece take an easy one. As soon as the work is fairly well known divide the evening into two parts—(a) study and (b) practice.

STUDY AND PRACTICE.

This is an extension of the principle of 'one thing at a time.' Suppose that you wish to perfect a certain chorus, then announce that you propose to study it. This prepares the members for ten or twenty stoppages, and prevents any feeling of irritation. When this period of thirty or forty-five minutes of real hard work is over, the practice part—a straight run through the other parts of the work—comes as a pleasant rest, and a feeling of satisfaction is the result. There are many devices which all go towards making the rehearsals pleasant, judicious praise for any good thing done being not the least effective factor. But space forbids enlarging upon these points. Let it suffice to give a paraphrase of a well-known proverb as a good working maxim: 'Take care of the practisings, and the performances will take care of themselves.'

'LIKE MASTER, LIKE MAN.'

We must now consider in detail the different parts which go to make an artistic choral performance—namely, (a) Voice, (b) Words, and (c) Expression. But before doing so let us consider the average musical attainments of choristers, with a view of taking the best steps towards making them perfect in voice, words, and expression. Generally speaking, the musical knowledge of choristers is very limited, it being often bounded by the knowledge of reading at sight; indeed, the conductor is to be congratulated if his members can read fairly well. This is all that can be reasonably expected from mere amateurs, because it takes years of study to master the inner secrets of artistic expression, proper voice production, and perfect diction. But though deficient in self-intuitiveness, they have as a rule the power of imitation very largely developed, and they will follow a pattern—good, bad, or indifferent—very quickly. This it is that gives to the choral conductor great importance and responsibility, and makes the results achieved either his glory or his shame. It is often a veritable case of 'like master, like man.' This explanation will make clear why the plan of 'patterning' is so frequently suggested.

THE VOICE.

Many people seem to think that the choral voice is such a constant unyielding quantity that it is no use trying to alter it. This is a wrong notion. The tone of a choir can be greatly modified—so much so, in fact, that it is quite possible to make the coarsest choir sing pleasantly. This can only be done by the conductor knowing what kind of tone he wants, and patterning over and over again the tone he requires. In cases of very throaty tenors, rasping basses, shrill steam-whistley sopranos, or howling contraltos, he will have to see the offenders individually, point out the defects, and show how the fault can be remedied. With a little tact this can be agreeably and successfully done, and that without ruffling the tempers or hurting the feelings—really the pride—of the vocal offenders. The tone can also be altered so as to get bright or dark tints, rough or smooth quality; but this will be treated of under the head of expression.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

A new composer, one who has really something to say, is so much in the nature of a rara avis, that the appearance of any such is worthy of special notice. The composer in question is a boy of fourteen, Benjamin James Dale by name, a son of Mr. C. J. Dale, who is well-known in musical circles in the Holloway district of North London. At the twenty-third concert of the North London Orchestral Society (Portman Rooms, on the 10th ult.) an overture, entitled 'Horatius,' the composition of Master Dale, was performed—'the youthful composer's first work,' as the programme-book states. In regard to this remarkable achievement, we cannot do better than quote the opinion of a most trustworthy and experienced musician who heard the overture at the above concert. He says: 'The work is, of course, not entirely devoid of signs of youthful inexperience; but for one so young, the thematic material, its development, and the orchestral score are alike remarkable. He must be encouraged to go on.' This is all the more remarkable as, we understand, the youthful composer has never had a lesson in orchestration in his life! We wish young Dale all success in his future career, and shall watch with interest the development of this gifted boy's creative powers.

'Picked up in the street' is the comment of a correspondent at Crewe in sending us a dilapidated though perfectly legible sheet of an examination paper. This document, of absolute genuineness, is the handiwork of a Board School boy in the sixth standard. The answers are written on both sides, their sum and substance being arithmetic, and the beginning of an essay (its completion torn off) on singing. Leaving the sum (or sums) and taking the substance of the singing section, we find that the young essayist of Crewe expressed himself—somewhat crudely, perhaps—thus (we omit the examiner's corrective blue pencillings):—

SINGING.

'Singing is making, with the voice, the sounds that would be made by a pianoforte or any other musical instrument. The words that are to be sung are written on five lines called the staff, such has Doh, Ray, Me. There are treble notes, alto, tenor, and bass. The treble notes are a little higher than bass. It is very pleasant to sing and it strengthens the loins'!

The Anniversary Festival of the Madrigal Society, at the Holborn Restaurant, on the 17th ult., was a brilliant function. It took the form of a 'Ladies' Banquet,' and thus fitly commemorated the 160th anniversary of this ancient Society. Amongst the 150 ladies and gentlemen who sat down to dinner were Sir Arthur Sullivan (the President), Sir A. C. Mackenzie, the Professors of Music at the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham—Sir Hubert Parry, Dr. Villiers Stanford, and Dr. Armes—Sir Frederick Bridge (conductor of the Society), Sir Richard Webster, who was heartily congratulated upon his elevation to the bench as Master of the Rolls, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Mr. F. H. Cowen, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Mr. Arthur Chappell, Mr. Fuller Maitland, Mr. Barclay Squire, and, of course, the genial secretary, Mr. J. Edward Street. In the after-dinner music-making, choristers from the Chapel Royal, Westminster Abbey, and St. Peter's, Eaton Square, admirably, and, we may add, traditionally distinguished themselves in sustaining the soprano part in the various madrigals performed. And in this connection there may be mentioned that three of the company present used to assist at these pleasant functions as choristers: Mr. Walter Macfarren, a Westminster chorister in 1836; Mr. Fred. Walker, a Chapel Royal boy in 1844; and Sir Arthur Sullivan, the President, a Chapel Royal boy in 1854. The following Madrigals—a feast of song—were sung under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, those marked * being conducted by their respective composers. The dates are those of composition:—

All creatures now.	1599	John Bennet.
My lady fair doth fly me.	1575	Giov. Ferretti.
Sister, awake.	1600	Thos. Bateson.
*Victoria		Philip Armes.
(This madrigal gained the 'Molineux' Prize, with the Society's medal, in 1897.)
Lay a garland.	1845	R. L. de Pearsall.
*Love and beauty.	1863	Arthur Sullivan.
*Weep no more, woeful shepherds.	1899.	Frederick Bridge.
Flora gave me fairest flowers.	1598	John Wilbye.
No din of rolling drum.	1560	Alessandro Striggio.
The Silver Swan.	1612	Orlando Gibbons.
Welcome, sweet pleasure.	1608	Thomas Weelkes.
In going to my lonely bed.	1560	Richard Edwards.
The Waitts.	1660	Jeremy Saville.

We hope ere long to give a history of this venerable organisation, founded in 1741, from its official records.

That the Madrigal Society has stimulated composition is proved by the prizes it periodically offers for new works. Another opportunity of this nature will soon present itself. Two prizes, one of the value of ten pounds with the Society's medal, and the other of five pounds, are to be competed for in October, full particulars of which will be found in our advertisement columns.

The Conference of Organists and Directors of Music in Public Schools, a summary of the proceedings of which we give in another column, is undoubtedly a step in the right direction. The raison d'être of the Conference may be traced to a resolution passed unanimously at the Headmasters' Conference in December last: 'That it is desirable that, in any system of public inspection of schools, the subject of music should be included.' Thus music has received the imprimatur of a very important and influential body of educational experts. It may, therefore, safely be assumed that the music-masters of our public schools will spare no efforts to give music its proper place as an educational influence of the greatest possible value to the rising generation.

We read with great interest in a contemporary that the German Emperor has been to the Opera at Wiesbaden and heard there 'the opera "Oberon," which is founded on Wieland's fairy play.' And we are further told that 'the music has been composed by Herr Carl von Weber.' We may expect to hear next week that the Prince of Wales went to Covent Garden to witness a performance of 'Faust,' the opera which is founded on Goethe's metaphysical and legendary drama, of which the music has been composed by M. Charles Gounod; or that the Archbishop of Canterbury went to the Birmingham Festival and heard 'Elijah,' an oratorio founded on Bible texts, which has been composed by Mr. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy. In an office which is so near to Covent Garden they really ought to know more about opera. Besides, Great Portland Street is not so very far off, and it was there that Weber lived while superintending the rehearsals of 'Oberon' at Covent Garden (where it first saw the light), and it was there too that he composed the overture. Our contemporary has some excuse for saying that the libretto of 'Oberon' 'has been written by Herr Lauff.' It is true that he has considerably altered Hell's translation of Planché's original.

And here I sit, the Muses' 'appy vot'ry,
A cultivatin' every kind of po'try.

Thus wrote Thackeray in a poem, which, we believe, is still unpublished. The muse—or rather, the amusing muse—has found a ''appy vot'ry' in so grave and sedate a personage as the Very Rev. Father Provincial of the English Jesuits. Those who have experienced the eccentricities of ocean-going steamers are more or less familiar with the 'fiddles' which are brought into play when the centre of gravyty is apt to be the table-cloth. Father Gerard, on some such fiddling occasion (viol weather), during a voyage in a vessel called the Don, set to 'cultivatin'' a 'song of the sea,' which he entitled 'The Fiddles of the Don.' The following is a specimen verse, the result of his 'bursting into po'try'—in fact, some of his Donsensical lines:—

When the spoons are running races with the platters,
When the nuts play castanets upon the floor,
When the coffee cups are gone as mad as hatters,
There's a concert that you never heard ashore.
You may prate about the violin and 'cello,
Or the double-bass may fondly dote upon;
There is nothing published for them by Novello
That's a patch upon the fiddles of the 'Don.'

Excellent reports are to hand as to the condition of the chorus for the Handel Festival to be held at the Crystal Palace on the 16th, 19th, 21st, and 23rd inst. The ranks of the singers will be leavened to advantage with contingents from the Provinces, Sheffield, we believe, sending upwards of one hundred choralists. The inclusion of the second and third parts of 'Judas Maccabæus' on the Selection Day (the 21st), 'in celebration of British successes in Africa,' is sure to be a popular feature. At the first (preliminary) Festival in 1857, 'Judas' formed the entire programme on the Selection Day. The Queen and the Prince Consort, with three of their children, attended this performance, and, according to a musical journal, 'The proceedings concluded with the Old Hundredth Psalm, Her Majesty—at whose desire, we believe, it was given—and the whole audience standing while it was sung.'

The Jubilee year of Bradfield College will be commemorated by five performances—on June 19, 21, 23, 25, and 26 respectively—of The Agamemnon of Æschylus in the original Greek. For this revival of the ancient classic, which will be given in the 'open air Greek theatre,' at Bradfield, Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams, director of music at the College, has written some special music.

The Cologne Conservatory of Music celebrated with great éclat its jubilee on the 10th ult. and four following days. We hope to give an account of the jubilations in our next issue from the pen of an old English student who was present on that interesting occasion.

Mr. W. H. Cummings—soon to be Dr. Cummings: congratulations thereupon—read a paper before the Musical Association on the 8th ult., when he took as his subject 'Organ accompaniments in England in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.' The discourse was mainly directed to a refutation of the assertion that those old-time organ accompaniments were of the 'high falutin'' kind, whereas there seems to be no doubt that they were dignified and devotional. Not the least interesting feature of the discourse was the performance of a little-known anthem, set to the words 'This is the record of John,' composed by Orlando Gibbons for Laud (afterwards the celebrated Archbishop), the President of St. John's College, Oxford, for St. John Baptist's day. The anthem is written for alto solo and chorus of five voices, with an accompaniment of a chest of five viols and organ. It was performed by a contingent of singers and players upon instruments from the Guildhall School of Music. Despite the unecclesiastical surroundings and wretched acoustical properties of the room, this work of the eminent Orlando proved to be such as would elicit from old Pepys the encomium 'mighty pretty.'

The late Dr. Troutbeck, Precentor of Westminster, was Vicar of Dacre, Cumberland (his birthplace), from 1859 to 1864. To commemorate his cure of the parish, a memorial, erected by his wife and children, in St. Andrew's Church, Dacre, was unveiled on Easter-day by his son, Mr. John Troutbeck, coroner of Westminster. An ancient ceremony was subsequently gone through in the distribution of the Troutbeck Dole, which, by the will of the testator, must be distributed on the family tombstone in Dacre Churchyard after Morning Service on Easter-day by a Troutbeck, if one can be found willing to do so, or by the vicar and churchwardens for the time being. The carrying out of the founder's wish was duly fulfilled by Mr. John Troutbeck, and twenty-four needy parishioners received the pious benefaction of the Troutbeck family. The family tombstone has a large cross of about three feet in length engraved thereon, and bears the following simple inscription: 'Troutbeck of Blencowe, 1552-1880.' The name occurs in the Dacre registers from 1552 to 1880.

When Hermann Levi was in London an interviewer extracted from one of his friends an interesting and till then unpublished story of his first appearance as conductor. He was a schoolboy of seventeen or so at Mannheim, and was studying music under Vincenz Lachner, the conductor of the local opera. One Sunday Lachner was ill and the assistant-conductor was ill too, and it was suggested that there should be no performance that evening. But Lachner sent for young Levi, who used to attend rehearsals, and asked him to undertake the work. 'Getrau'st Du's Dir?' (Do you dare?) he asked. The young man said yes—and the performance went very smoothly. By an odd coincidence, the opera was Halévy's 'La Juive.'

LEVI'S recollections of his visit to London were very pleasant; but he insisted (as he said in the interview in question) that he could not feel at home with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony in the key of B flat. At the time he was here—1895—we still enjoyed the luxury of the high pitch.

MR. RUSKIN contemplated writing a 'Treatise on the Principles of Music.' Judging from his references to the divine art scattered throughout his published works, the achievement of this intention would have been a most interesting contribution to the literature of music from so distinguished an author.

FORTHCOMING FESTIVALS.

CHESTER.

A FEW forewords concerning the Musical Festivals to be held during the year is a pleasant duty. First, by reason of chronology, is that to be holden in July in the ancient city on the Dee. The history of this Festival may be summarised thus: It was, it was not, it is! In other words, Chester, festivally speaking, slumbered for half-a-century—from 1829 to 1879. In the latter year the Festival was resuscitated at the instigation of the energetic organist of the Cathedral, Dr. Joseph C. Bridge.

In regard to the 1829 Festival, a criticism on the orchestra in the leading musical journal of the day may be quoted:—

> The instrumental band, as we have before hinted, was miserably deficient in all the stringed instruments. We do not mean numerically deficient—no; there were numbers enough (heaven bless 'em), both of violins and tenors, as well as basses and double basses. But we would remind the committee and their agent (we entirely exonerate the conductor) that one sovereign is worth eight half-crowns.

The object of this mint-suggestive observation was to point the moral of the superiority of Metropolitan over provincial players, a doctrine more necessary seventy years ago than now.

Two features of special interest concerning the Chester Festival in July will be (1) the presence of Professor Horatio W. Parker, who, as at Worcester last year, will conduct his 'Hora Novissima,' and (2) a Commemorative Service, on Thursday morning, for those who have fallen in the war. The performances, except that on the Thursday evening of the Festival, will be held in the Cathedral.

HEREFORD.

It falls to the turn of Hereford to celebrate the Festival of the Three Choirs this year. There can be no question about the antiquity of holding the music-meeting in Hereford, where, in 1726, the Rev. Dr. Bisse selected the following singular text as the subject of his discourse: 'I gat me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts' (Ecclesiastes ii., 8).

The chief features in the programme of the approaching Festival, which Dr. Sinclair will conduct, are new works by Sir Hubert Parry, Professor Parker, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. The Gloucester Orpheus Society, conducted by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, has been specially engaged for the Friday evening concert in the Shire Hall.

BIRMINGHAM.

For more than a century the Birmingham and Hereford Festivals have together run their triennial course, and so it is this year. Let us look at the state of affairs at Birmingham a hundred years ago. In 1799 Madame Mara was the principal vocalist, 'her chief assistants' (!) being Miss This and the Messrs. Those. There was no conductor, but Cramer led and Harris was the organist. Those were ante-police days, and thus we learn that 'For the special benefit of the light-fingered gentry, who were so troublesome in 1796, the task of preserving order was entrusted to the "Loyal Birmingham Association of Infantry," who notwithstanding very bad weather, manfully remained at their posts from morning until after midnight, effectually preserved order, and protected the pockets of those of his Majesty's subjects who came to attend the Festival.'

The one novelty at Birmingham will be Mr. Edward Elgar's setting of Cardinal Newman's 'Dream of Gerontius,' composed especially for the Festival. The new English version of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion will be used.

*(The works marked * will be conducted by their respective composers.)*

CHESTER.

July 22, 25, 26, and 27.

SUNDAY (July 22).—Special service in the Cathedral at 6.30 p.m. 'Hymn of Praise,' Mendelssohn.

WEDNESDAY (July 25).—Morning: 'Elijah,' Mendelssohn. Evening: 'Zion,' Gade; 'Symphonie Pathétique,' Tschaïkowsky; Mass in C, Beethoven.

THURSDAY.—Morning: 'Funeral and Triumphal' Symphony, Berlioz (first performance in England); *Requiem, Joseph C. Bridge (composed expressly for this Festival).
Afternoon: 'Song of Miriam,' Schubert (with Herr Mottl's new accompaniments); 'Good Friday' Music from 'Parsifal,' Wagner; 'The Deluge,' Saint-Saëns (first performance in England).
Evening: (in the Music Hall), 'Faust,' Berlioz.

FRIDAY.—Morning: 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Hubert Parry; *'Hora Novissima,' Horatio W. Parker.
Afternoon: Overture, 'In Memoriam,' Sullivan; 'Hear my Prayer,' Mendelssohn; 'The Transfiguration,' Perosi.
Evening: 'Messiah,' Handel.

FRIDAY.—Morning: 'Messiah,' Handel.
Evening: Chamber Concert in the Shire Hall.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.

Madame Albani, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Marie Brema, Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Muriel Foster, Miss Marian Blinkhorn, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. William Green, Mr. Santley, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Watkin Mills.

Conductor—Dr. George Robertson Sinclair.

BIRMINGHAM.

October 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The programme will include: 'Elijah,' Mendelssohn; 'Messiah,' Handel; 'St. Matthew Passion,' Bach; 'Spectre's Bride,' Dvorák; 'Mass,' Byrd; 'Requiem,' Brahms; 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha,' S. Coleridge-Taylor; 'De Profundis,' Parry; and 'Dream of Gerontius,' Edward Elgar (composed expressly for the Festival); Symphonies by Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, and Glazounow, and other Orchestral Works.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.

Madame Albani, Madame Nordica, Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Marie Brema, Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Edward Lloyd (his last Festival appearance), Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. William Green, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. David Bispham, and Mr. Plunket Greene.

Chorus Master—Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap.
Conductor—Dr. Hans Richter.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE CHAPEL, OXFORD.

WILLIAM OF WAYNFLETE in founding Magdalen College, made special provision that even in the event of a diminution of the College revenues the staff of the chaplains and choristers should be kept up—in other words, that the musical services should not only be made a prominent feature of the College, but that it should be worthily maintained. Thus for upwards of four centuries has the music at Magdalen been famous. The choir formed an important part of Waynflete's foundation. It consisted of 'four priests, eight clerks, and sixteen choristers.' Curiously enough, there was no provision for an organist per se; but the office of 'informator choristarum' was to be created 'if none of the Chaplains or Clerks were willing to undertake the office.'

We learn from Mr. John E. West's useful book of reference, 'Cathedral Organists,' that there was no definitely appointed organist previous to the year 1530—fifty years after the chapel was consecrated. Up to that time the duties were discharged by members of the musical staff in turn. The combined offices of organist and 'informator choristarum' have been held by some very distinguished musicians—e.g., Dr. Benjamin Rogers (1664-86); Daniel Purcell, brother of the famous Henry of that ilk (1688-95); Dr. William Hayes (1734-77); his son, Dr. Philip Hayes—nicknamed 'Philup chaise' by reason of his abnormal corpulency (1777-1797); Sir John Stainer (1859-72); and Sir Walter Parratt (1872-82). Since 1882 the post has been filled by Dr. John Varley Roberts, who has worthily sustained the best traditions appertaining to the office of 'informator choristarum' of Waynflete's foundation. Portraits of the majority of the above-mentioned 'chief musicians' adorn the walls of the practice room; every effort has been made to obtain one of Dr. Ben. Rogers, but hitherto without success.

The chapel, completed in 1480, is of the usual college plan, with the organ screen dividing the ante-chapel from the choir, as shown in our illustration. Its acoustical properties are perfect, but there is practically no reverberation. Every chord strikes the ear with wonderful directness combined with beauty of tone—round, full, and of exquisite purity. 'It is quite exceptional,' says Dr. Roberts, 'for the choir to sing flat; they maintain the pitch absolutely as a rule. It is only justice to the choir to say that they have never yet failed to sing Wesley's five-part motet "Exultate Deo," unaccompanied, in perfect tune—a chord having been first given on the organ to sound the key, and only repeated as the choir are actually singing the final chord of the motet.'

An atmosphere of holy calm pervades the candle-lit old sanctuary at the hour of Evensong. Except on the great Festivals and their Eves, there is no 'in' voluntary. The choir enter before the bell has ceased tolling. The responses—a traditional setting in use here from time immemorial—are not only novel but strangely beautiful. The Magdalen Psalter is used with a manuscript collection of chants. A chant is never repeated during the month, except when special Psalms are sung. Dr. Roberts favours old-fashioned double chants. On this occasion (the 30th evening of the month) they are Cooper in G, Mornington in D, E. G. Monk in G, and Lawes in C. The chanting is commendably deliberate—not only in the recitations, but it is even more marked in the cadences. Special attention is paid to a rhetorical, or poetic interpretation of these grand creations known as the Psalms. Every syllable is heard with a distinctness all too seldom attained in quires and places where they sing—and gabble. Dr. Roberts, by the way, directs our attention to the third verse of Psalm 145, which should have been translated—

'Great is the Lord, and marvellously worthy to be praised':

At Magdalen College Chapel the comma after 'marvellous' in the Prayer-book is disregarded in chanting this Psalm in order to approximate the rendering as closely as possible to the original. The Service is Garrett in F. The anthem, Spohr's 'And lo! a mighty host' ('The Last Judgment'), the tenor solo in which is most sympathetically rendered by Mr. Woodward, one of the excellent lay clerks of Magdalen, whose invaluable services are so highly appreciated. The refined singing of the choir is a worthy tribute to the reputation which Dr. Varley Roberts enjoys as a choir-trainer of the highest rank. The choir is always his first consideration and the object of his unceasing care—with the result that the organ is made to take quite a secondary place in his accompaniments to the service. On this occasion the instrument has its opportunity when Dr. Roberts plays the Fugue in G (Op. 37) of Mendelssohn, one of the set of three that he dedicated to Thomas Attwood 'with reverence and gratitude.'

On the following morning—after the May-Day celebration on the Tower—we were privileged to occupy a place in the organ pew. As May 1 is the Commemoration of Henry VII., special prayers—read, not intoned, by the Founder's Chaplain—are incorporated with the ordinary supplications, and special Psalms (145, 146, and 147) are sung. The special Lesson is Ecclesiasticus xliv., beginning 'Let us now praise famous men,' and including (verse 5) 'Such as found out musical tunes, and recited verses in writing,' and the words of Handel's noble funeral anthem (verse 14), 'Their bodies are buried in peace; but their name liveth for evermore.' S. S. Wesley in F is the service. No wonder that Wesley matriculated at Magdalen College in order that his degree exercise might be performed, which it was, in its famous chapel. Mendelssohn's 'Beati mortui' ('For ever blessed are they which die in the Lord') for men's voices, is, appropriately enough, the anthem on this commemorative occasion. It is, of course, sung without accompaniment, and with all possible refinement, a splendid effect being attained in the final chord, when the low C in the bass is sung pianissimo, yet with a beautiful luscious tone not unlike that obtained by that past-master of violoncellists—the incomparable Piatti.

Much more could be written concerning the Magdalen service, but we trust that enough has been said to induce organists and choirmasters to take an opportunity of hearing for themselves the music that is sung within that celebrated sanctuary. It would indeed be strange if anyone could not learn something from such a visit to Magdalen—not only in the way of technical achievement, but in that devotional fervour which so eminently characterises its renowned musical services.

It may not be without interest if we give a summary of the music sung in Magdalen College Chapel from April 29 to May 6 inclusive:—

LIVERPOOL CHURCH CHOIR ASSOCIATION.

This Association has been formed with the following objects: (1) To promote the study and practice of Standard Church Music, (2) To hold combined Church Choir Festivals in St. George's Hall. Most organisations of this kind hold their festivals, which usually take the form of services, in a cathedral or in a large parish church. But the first festival of the Liverpool Association, held in St. George's Hall, on April 24, practically took the form of a sacred concert. Historical notes upon the various anthems, &c., sung appeared in the book of words, as did such concert-kind intimations as 'interval of fifteen minutes,' and the whereabouts of 'a refreshment room.' Twenty-four church choirs contributed 650 choristers, who were accompanied by the organ (at which Dr. A. L. Peace ably presided), a quartet of brass instruments (two cornets and two trombones), and kettle drums. The chief choral numbers were:—

Services: Te Deum, Stanford in B flat; Benedictus, Barnby in E; and Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, Stainer in B flat.

Anthems: 'O give thanks unto the Lord,' Goss; 'Blessed be the God and Father,' S. S. Wesley; 'The Lord is my Shepherd,' Smart; 'Ave Verum,' Gounod; and 'In that day,' Elvey.

Dr. Peace played the Chorale and Fugue from Guilmant's Organ Sonata (No. 5), and Mr. H. A. Branscombe, organist and choirmaster of St. Margaret's Church, Prince's Road, conducted. Mr. Ralph H. Baker, 19, Water Street, Liverpool, is the hon. secretary of the Association.

FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY.

The 246th Festival of the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy was celebrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 9th ult., in which, as usual, a full orchestra and a choir of 300 voices participated. Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture opened the service, which included Myles Foster's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in A, Bach's cantata 'Sleepers, awake' ('Wachet Auf'), the Old 100th Psalm, and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' chorus, the last-named superseding Handel's 'Hallelujah,' which for very many years was sung at this anniversary service. Sir George Martin conducted. The office of conductor at this Festival has not, however, always been held by the organist of the Cathedral. Dr. William Hayes and Dr. Boyce both discharged this duty. The former added instrumental parts to the Old 100th for the Festival (are they still in use?) and the latter composed his anthems 'Lord, Thou hast been our refuge,' and 'Blessed is he that considereth the poor and needy.' In 1844, the orchestra, which had always been a special feature of the Festivals, was suppressed at the instigation of the Bishop of London (Dr. Blomfield.) It was not reinstated till 1873, its re-introduction being one of the 'good things' resulting from Sir John Stainer's organistship. For the Festival of 1862 Sir John Goss composed his fine anthem, 'The Wilderness.'

CHURCH MUSIC IN MONTREAL.

The full-informationed service-paper for the Sunday after Easter, at St. George's Church, Montreal (which has a tower 230 feet high) shows that Church music is well nurtured in this important city of Greater Britain. Garrett in F in the morning and Smart in F in the evening were the services, the anthems being a selection from Stainer's cantata 'St. Mary Magdalen,' Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father,' and Handel's 'Hallelujah.' It is evident too that, in regard to scope, church organs in the Dominion are not far behind those at 'home'; that at St. George's (which includes an Echo organ played from the swell key-board) contains sixty-four sounding stops, including ten on the pedal, with a thirty-two feet open. Although the names of the St. George's clergy, including that of the rector, the Very Rev. Dean of Montreal, appear on this service paper, which also supplies a specification of the organ, the name of the organist is modestly withheld. We wish we could record it.

A PARISH CHURCH ORGAN.

The old organ in Chelmsford Parish Church, built by Cray and Hancock in 1772, occupied a place in the West central gallery, where it presented an imposing appearance with its gilded pipes and its cherubic trumpeters! Additions were made thereto in 1864 by Mr. William Hill, who, ten years later, removed the instrument to the East end of the Church. A new organ, built by Messrs. Norman and Beard, from a specification prepared by Mr. F. R. Frye, organist of the church, was opened at a special dedication service on the morning of St. Mark's Day, April 25. Sir Frederick Bridge presided at the new instrument at the service, and gave a recital in the afternoon. Stainer's 'O clap your hands' received an excellent rendering by the choir of the church, under the direction of Mr. Frye, who gave a short recital after the evening service, when his programme included Mendelssohn's Fifth Organ Sonata, Bach's 'St. Ann's' Fugue, and Chipp's Air (Schumann) and Variations. The following is a specification of the new instrument:—

MUNICIPAL SUNDAY ORGAN RECITALS.

In the year 1829 the site of the great iron manufacturing town and shipping centre of Middlesbrough was a solitary farmhouse surrounded by marshy land. Now its population is probably not far short of 100,000. It is for these hardy sons of toil and their families that the Mayor and Corporation of Middlesbrough have commendably instituted organ recitals in the Town Hall of this busy hive of industry.

Mr. Felix Corbett, the Borough organist (who was appointed in June last), thus writes concerning the scheme: 'This is the first season of the Borough organ recitals at Middlesbrough. We have three recitals a month—one on the first Sunday, in the afternoon at 3.30, and two on Saturday evenings. On Sundays the audiences number from 1,500 to 2,000; on Saturday evenings there is an average attendance of 750 to 800. I send you the programmes to the end of the present month, by which you will see that I have not repeated any items. It is gratifying to notice that most applause is given to Bach fugues, Widor's symphonies, and the Wagner selections. Of modern compositions, by far the most popular have been Lemare's original pieces; I have played nearly all of them.'

We give the programme of the Sunday recital on the 6th ult., when Mr. Corbett was assisted by Miss Emerson as vocalist. The words of the hymn, in which the audience is always requested to join, are printed on the back of the programmes.

HYMN: 'Ye Servants of God.'

1. Overture	'Samson'	..	Handel.
2. Romance in D flat	.. .. ..	..	Lemare.
3. Song	'Hindoo Song'	..	Bemberg.
4. Fantasia in F	.. .. ..	..	Freyer.
5. Largo	.. .. ..	..	Handel.
6. Offertoire (St. Cecilia)	.. .. ..	..	Batiste.
7. Song	'Light in Darkness'	..	Cowen.
8. March	'Tannhäuser'	..	Wagner.

Admission Free.

A Collection will be made to defray the necessary expenses.

ORGAN RECITALS.

ORGAN Recitals have recently been given in the following churches:—

St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, by Mr. T. H. Collinson (who played his own Sonata in D); Wilmslow Parish Church, by Mr. R. E. Parker; Christ Church, Newgate Street, by Mr. A. E. Thorne; College Street Chapel, Northampton, by Mr. R. W. Strickland (who played Smart's Postlude in D); Tredegarville Baptist Church, Cardiff, by Mr. E. H. Lemare (who played, by desire, his own 'Fantasia on the tune "Hanover"'); Llanfwrog Church, Ruthin, by Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, organist of Bangor Cathedral; Parish Church, Bexhill-on-Sea (organist, Mr. R. H. Morgan), by Mr. R. Goss-Custard; St. Paul's Church, Huddersfield—opening of the new organ erected by Messrs. Abbott & Smith, of Leeds—by Mr. Arthur Pearson (who played Bach's 'Passacaglia'); Holy Trinity Church, Coventry, by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral (who played Saint-Saëns's Rhapsodie in A minor, No. 3, and his own Melody in A and Minuet and Trio in D); St. Edmund's Church, Hunstanton, by Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe (who played Freyer's Concert Fantasia in F minor); St. Saviour's Church, Brighton, by Mr. W. A. Macduff (who played Best's Choral Fantasia in E flat); St. Paul's Church, Camden Square, and St. Clement Danes Church, Strand, by Mr. T. J. Crawford; St. Mary's, Oatlands, by Mr. W. Cary Bliss (who played Hollins's Overture in C minor); St. Matthew's Mission Church, Kirkley, Lowestoft, by Dr. Bunnett; St. Stephen's, Walbrook, and at Luton Parish Church, by Mr. Fred. Gostelow (who played Lemmens's Fantasia in A minor); Hawarden Parish Church, by Mr. R. W. Pringle (who played Smart's Choral with variations); St. Paul's Church, Greenock, by Mr. Allan Paterson; All Saints' Church, North Peckham, by Mr. Fred. Blake; St. John's Church, Montreux, given monthly by Mr. John Lomas; Linthorpe Parish Church, by Mr. James Foggitt; St. John's Wesleyan Church, Liverpool, by Mr. John S. Woodward (who played S. S. Wesley's Choral Song and Fugue); Christ Church, South Hackney, by Mr. John E. West (who played the first movement of his own Sonata in D minor and Rheinberger's Sonata, No. 14); and Christ Church, Bath, by Mr. H. J. Davis, who included Mendelssohn's First Sonata and Chipp's Processional March in D at his sixty-fifth recital since 1892.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Frederic Just, All Saints' Church, Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. J. Metcalfe Simpson, St. Peter's Church, Oxford Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Dr. W. John Reynolds, Parish Church, Birmingham.

Mr. Ernest Foster, Wesleyan Church, Honor Oak Park.

Mr. Albert Kitchingham, King Street United Presbyterian Church, Kilmarnock.

Mr. J. Job, St. Margaret's Church, Ipswich.

Mr. F. G. H. Moore, St. Andrew's Church, Ealing.

Mr. James Smith, St. John's Church, Chapeltown, near Sheffield.

Mr. Herbert Claughton, St. James's Parish Church, Ratcliffe.

Mr. Adam Henderson, Whiteinch Parish Church, Glasgow.

Mr. E. S. Blake, Goldington Church, Bedfordshire.

REVIEWS.

PART-SONGS FOR MALE VOICES.

Encouragement to a lover. Words by Sir John Suckling. Music by C. Lee Williams.

All among the Barley. Words by A. T. Music by Elizabeth Stirling.

Need I say how much I love thee? Words by John Frances Waller. Music by Joseph Robinson.

Balmy Night. Words and music by Joseph Robinson.

Eventide. Words by John Frances Waller. Music by Joseph Robinson.

Hymn before Action. Arranged from the song by Rudyard Kipling and Walford Davies.

Creation's Hymn. Words by the Rev. J. Troutbeck. Music composed by L. van Beethoven, Arranged by C. Sachs.

(The Orpheus. Nos. 324 to 330.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

'ENCOURAGEMENT to a lover' is a setting in four parts of Suckling's practical, but somewhat uncourteous lines concerning the uselessness of repining over the negative answer of a lady. The jesting and satirical spirit of the words is admirably reflected in Mr. Lee Williams's music, and, crisply and humorously sung, it could not fail to delight an audience. The staccato delivery of the word 'Nothing' at the close is most comic.

'All among the Barley' is so extremely popular in its original form that this arrangement for male voices will be sure of a welcome wherever it is well sung, and to do so is a matter of little difficulty.

Waller's poetic gem, 'Need I say how much I love thee?' has been set by the late Joseph Robinson with a suave grace that accentuates the tender significance of the lines. It imperatively demands smooth and expressive singing, but otherwise will be found easy of execution.

The title-page of 'Balmy Night' informs us that it was 'written for Frank, John, Joe, and William Robinson, by Joseph Robinson,' a quartet of distinguished brothers who did so much to foster the cause of vocal music in Dublin. The words are somewhat too much repeated, the fact of it being a 'balmy night' is decidedly overstated; but the music makes amends, being melodious and well balanced.

The following number is also by Joseph Robinson, and is somewhat similar in character; but the words, by John Francis Waller, have inspired the composer to write somewhat more easily, and the music happily echoes the tranquil beauty of the text.

The merit of Dr. H. Walford Davies's setting of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's impressive lines entitled 'Hymn before Action' has already been so widely recognised as to render description unnecessary and praise superfluous; but it should be said that this setting is admirably suited for large choirs. We should like to hear it delivered by the tenors and basses of the Royal Choral Society.

Mr. Sachs's arrangement of Beethoven's magnificent 'Creation's Hymn' also seems to crave for abnormal power of vocal tone, but with average sized choirs it would also be very impressive. It should be added that the English version of the text is by the late Rev. J. Troutbeck, and that Mr. Sachs has accomplished his work with judicious skill.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Suite des Roses. By Walter Macfarren. [Edwin Ashdown.]

MR. MACFARREN here presents us with a bunch of three attractive roses: (1) 'The red rose,' (2) 'The yellow rose,' (3) 'The white rose.' The first blooms forth in a form somewhat mazurka-like, and gracefully pursues the andanteness of its ways. The second, perhaps the most odorous of the bunch, is of a gavotte type, wherein the usual crotchet tread occasionally gives place to some scale passages suggestive of the outside petals being scattered by a summer breeze. The third, in G minor and major, is in nine-eight rhythm and flows along smoothly enough till the appearance, in the major section, of some semi-quavers which may be likened to the gentle ripples of a calm sunlit sea. Thus far we have made comparisons not strictly horticultural, but has not someone said: 'What's in a name'? The hypercritical might observe that the title of the suite is rather misleading, because Mr. Macfarren's roses have no thorns—the thorns of difficulty. But who would heed him?

Suite Idyllique. Six characteristic pieces. By R. H. Bellairs.
A Holiday Tour. Six characteristic pieces. By S. Jadassohn. Op. 122.
Berceuse. By G. Wolseley Cox Op. 9, No. 2.
Mazurka. Scherzo. By Lady Thompson. [Edwin Ashdown.]

PIANISTS in search of short pianoforte solos of graceful and expressive character, and only making moderate demands on executive abilities, may be recommended Mr. Bellairs's suite. The pieces are severally named 'Rêverie Champêtre,' 'En Valsant,' 'Le Printemps,' 'Fleurette,' 'Colombian,' and 'Sans les Etoiles'—fanciful titles which indicate the geniality and imaginativeness of the composer's muse.

'A Holiday Tour' is somewhat similar in design but different in style. The music is easier to play, and some of it verges on the commonplace; but it is always well written, and the pieces named 'A travelling song' and 'The return' are very effective.

Mr. G. Wolseley Cox is one of our young composers who promise to give many music-lovers sincere pleasure. Certainly his Berceuse will do so whenever it is sympathetically played. It is very simple, but anyone who can make the pianoforte sing will be able to make Mr. Cox's little piece suggest pleasant thoughts.

Lady Thompson's pieces are brightly written, and pleasing gracefulness distinguishes the Mazurka.

Four Compositions. (Book 2.) By Bertram Luard Selby.
Song of the Brook. By Cuthbert Harris.
Polish Dance in D minor. By Berthold G. Thorne.
Scherzo in A flat. By Edmund Rogers. [Forsyth Brothers.]

MR. SELBY'S compositions are always scholarly, and consequently invariably appeal in a certain manner to cultured players. The second book of the series of 'Four Compositions' contains music of avowed imitatory character. The pieces are severally named 'Winter Frolic' and 'Rustling Leaves,' and in both the music may be said to endeavour to live up to its title. The former piece is an Allegretto of somewhat bucolic character, and the latter is a vivace which demands a light touch and nimble fingers; but the executive demands are not excessive, and efforts to meet them will be repaid.

The 'Song of the Brook,' according to Mr. Harris, ripples on its way in six sharps and five flats, and its melody necessitates frequent flights of the left hand over the right. The ripple is continuous and at first sight looks very black, but the notes lie well under the hand, and the piece, although brilliant, is not really difficult.

Mr. Thorne has directed his 'Polish Dance' to be played 'Pomposo.' It is very easy, and, firmly rendered, would be effective.

Mr. Rogers has manifestly remembered that Scherzo is the Italian for a joke, consequently his music is light and fanciful to skittishness. The piece is only a trifle, but trifles often give a good deal of pleasure.

SONGS.

Love Forsaken. Love Rebellious. Words from 'Poems of Passion,' by Ella Wheeler. Music by H. Chilver Wilson.
To Thee. Words by J. Hurst Hayes. Music by Norman Hayes. [Weekes and Co.]

THESE songs well merit the attention of vocalists. The burden of 'Love Forsaken' is necessarily sad, but the lines tell with directness and simplicity of a sorrow bravely borne, and the music echoes plaintively the wail in the words.

'Love Rebellious' is a song that, delivered in the concert-room by a capable baritone vocalist, possessing dramatic perception, could scarcely fail to stir an audience. The lines depict with graphic power the struggle between passionate love and duty, and Mr. Wilson's setting follows the virile words with a sympathy and gradually accumulative force until an exciting climax is attained with which the song ends.

Mr. Norman Hayes has written for a tenor voice, and his music is melodious, dainty, and pleasing; but only strong-minded tenors may be recommended to sing it, since the vocalist declares that his devotion is dependent upon his frame of mind, and his constancy to the one he addresses seems, moreover, to be limited to the time 'when the sun is setting low,' which we fancy most ladies would deem insufficient.

RECITATION MUSIC.

Recitations set to Music for Pianoforte. Op. 59. By A. C. Mackenzie. [Joseph Williams.]

THE attention of those who recite may be drawn to this selection of popular poems, which have been allied with illustrative music with exceptional skill by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The poems chosen are Lewis Carroll's 'Jabberwocky,' Hood's 'Dream of Eugene Aram,' Ingoldsby's 'Confession,' and Hood's 'Queen Mab' and 'Faithless Nellie Gray.' All these pieces are too well known to need a line of comment, but some description is called for concerning the music. The composer has manifestly sought to bring out the salient points of the lines, and to suggest what may be termed their atmosphere, by simple means and effective touches rather than by harmonic complexity, and his efforts are eminently successful. The most elaborate of the series is 'The Dream of Eugene Aram.' In this the introduction of the hymn-tune 'Hanover,' usually allied with the words 'Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the Earth,' as the guilty man sits 'Among the urchins young that evening in the school,' decidedly heightens the dramatic contrast of the situation, and equally impressive is the subsequent metamorphosis of the tune by harsh harmonies as the wretched man relates his mental sufferings, and the suggested tramp of the 'two stern-faced men' who 'set out from Lynn.'

We are inclined, however, to regard the music to 'Faithless Nellie Gray' as the happiest effort of the composer. The humour of the lines is echoed by the pianoforte in a manner that in several passages is irresistibly comic, and this effect is enhanced by the pathetic little theme that accompanies the reproaches of the abbreviated soldier to his lady-love, who refuses to have anything more to do with 'a man with both legs in the grave!'

THE ROYAL OPERA.

THE season of opera at Covent Garden began on Monday, the 14th ult., with excellent prospects. Most of the old favourites have been re-engaged, and strenuous efforts have been made to find new-comers to strengthen the company in all directions. The Syndicate has in particular given heed to the bitter cry which went up last year for new tenors. Unfortunately for them, Herr Kraus, of Berlin, of whom most was anticipated, had to throw up his engagement. What success has, so far, attended their search will appear from what follows. The stage management has been entrusted to Mr. F. Neilson, who has the advantage of having studied the staging of the Wagnerian operas, under the late Anton Seidl, and M. Almanz, of La Monnaie. Both have begun very well. The orchestra is conducted by Herr Mottl, whose place will, later on, be taken by Herr Emil Paur, of Boston, Signor Mancinelli, and M. Flon. The subscription is very large, and the audiences have up to the present been exceptionally good.

The season began with the National Anthem and a disappointment. Madame Melba had succumbed to the East wind—there always is an East wind during the first week of the opera season—and could not appear as Marguerite. Her place was taken very successfully by Madame Suzanne Adams, who shows that she has been trained in the same school, and is one of those artists who improve steadily. The Faust was M. Cossira, who looks unromantic, but has a good voice and sings ably. Signor Scotti was an excellent Valentine, and M. Plançon a superb Mephistopheles. Mdlle. Bauermeister's Martha is always good, and we had a new Siebel—the only slim one seen for the last decade—in Mdlle. Maubourg, who also sang with considerable charm. Signor Mancinelli conducted, and the opera was sung in French, except by the chorus, who sang in Italian.

On Tuesday, the 15th ult., the opera was 'Tannhäuser,' sung in German, and Herr Mottl conducted. In spite of that the performance was not much above the average—indeed, the eminent conductor has allowed the fatal Bayreuth love for slow tempi to grow on him beyond measure. The title-part was played by Herr Carlen, of Bremen, who was indisposed, and the Wolfram was Herr Bertram, who has a very powerful voice, which he uses in too German a way, and he made Wolfram a very clerical, not to say priggish, person. The address in the second act was like a sermon, and he delivered an archiepiscopal charge to the evening star. Herr Blass was the Landgrave, and he declaimed too much and sang too little. Hence the ensemble at the end of the first act was rough and unmelodious. Miss Susan Strong sang cleverly, but was stiff, almost to prudery, as Venus. The Elizabeth of Fräulein Ternina was, however, a performance so full of genius, so rarely beautiful both in acting and singing, that it sufficed to render the whole evening memorable. She makes Elizabeth a loving woman, not a tragedy queen on the one hand or an iceberg on the other, and she makes us realise, better than any other Elizabeth, how (from the very moment of Tannhäuser's transgression) she feels that a death blow has fallen on her.

On Wednesday, Signor Mancinelli conducted again, and we had 'Aïda,' sung in Italian. Miss Margaret Macintyre returned, showing remarkable improvement in all respects. As Radames, Mr. Imbart de la Tour made a successful début. He has a strong resonant voice and sings and acts with no little passion. But he should beware of forcing—a fault very common with all who are frightened by the size of Covent Garden and do not know its idiosyncrasies; and it is hard to see why he should take a step forward and convulsively shake his shoulder each time he attacks a high note. Another artist of exceptional merit is the American mezzo-soprano from Vienna, Miss Edyth Walker, and she will do far better in parts more suited to her than Amneris. Signor Scotti was altogether excellent as Amonasro; and as Ramfis M. Plançon returned to those sacerdotal functions which no one on the operatic stage fulfils more finely. The orchestra played extremely well and the stage management, especially in the last scene, was far better than of old.

On Thursday, Madame Calvé returned, after a year's absence, and played Carmen. One instinctively says played, for with her one always thinks of the drama before the singing, exquisite as that is. This year her low notes are better than formerly, but her habit of singing out of time has grown on her, till sometimes the rhythm is unrecognisable. But opera is made up of so many all but irreconcilable elements that one at least must always suffer. Yet Madame Calvé's laxities of time are never purely capricious. They always mean something. The intensity of her acting was such as the whole operatic stage cannot equal, and its variety and charm were quite irresistible. M. Allard was creditable as Escamillo and M. Cossira was a good Don José. His unromantic appearance was not so much against him here. Madame Suzanne Adams was very charming as Micaela. M. Flon made the orchestra follow the vagaries of Madame Calvé to admiration.

On Friday, Herr Mottl conducted 'Lohengrin,' and here also his tempi were extremely slow. Fräulein Ternina was again the mainstay of the performance, though her Elsa is not as incontestably great as her Elizabeth. The new Lohengrin, Herr Slezak, has the rare merit of being and looking young; he has a strong, fresh, and powerful voice, as yet hardly spoiled by bad German production, and he sings with artistic power. In spite of indisposition he made a quite remarkably good first impression. Herr Bertram, as Telramund, sang and acted much better than he had done as Wolfram, and at the end of Act II. he was very powerful. Herr Blass sang sonorously as the King, and Madame Louise Homer scolded too consistently as Ortrud. The chorus was not ideal.

On Saturday we had 'Pagliacci' and 'Cavalleria,' in Italian. In 'Pagliacci' Fräulein Scheff was decidedly successful as Nedda. She sings and acts with great piquancy and charm, but is too German to be ideal in so Italian a part, while she would undoubtedly be better suited to a smaller stage and a smaller house. M. Salignac, as Canio, had moments of great power and has altogether improved remarkably, and for Signor Scotti, as Tonio, one can have only praise. In 'Cavalleria Rusticana' Madame Calvé was magnificently dramatic. Her view of the character—that Santuzza is not by nature a mere fury but has been goaded to revenge by insufferable wrong—appeals to us as far finer than the interpretation, such as that of Signora Bellincioni, which makes her a volcanic virago from the very first. But that view, perhaps, accords better with the music. Mr. Joseph O'Mara acted and sang more than well as Turiddu, and his success is gratifying to one's patriotism. M. Bensaude was satisfactory as Alfio, as also was Madame Louise Homer as Lola. Signor Mancinelli's conducting is worthy of the highest praise.

On Monday, the 21st ult., Madame Melba made her first appearance in Puccini's 'La Bohème.' The verdict of the majority has, for the present at least, gone against those who protest that its sentiment is frothy and too facile, and its humour forced, and the work is very popular. Its melodious phrases certainly give an artist like Madame Melba opportunities for singing which is a pure delight. Madame Melba has seldom sung with more perfection of voice, and never with more warmth of expression. Indeed, her style seems to be changing in the direction of greater expressiveness. As there is no loss of beauty perceptible, the change is an artistic growth. Signor Bonci, a young Italian tenor who came without any preliminary heralding, appeared as Rodolfo, and immediately made a deep impression. It is safe to say that a tenor with a fresher and better placed tenor voice, a fuller command of vocal resource, a sweeter mezza-voce, and a more artistic cantabile has not been heard for a long while. Madame Eldée (who is known on the concert-platform as the Hon. Mrs. William Duncombe) was cast for the part of Musetta, and acted charmingly and sang very prettily, but her voice is hardly large enough for Covent Garden. M. Gillibert, M. Bensaude (who sang much better than on his début), and M. Journet completed an excellent all-round cast.

On Tuesday, Madame Calvé appeared as Marguerite in 'Faust,' and M. Saléza made his rentrée in the title-part. Madame Calvé's Marguerite is comparatively unfamiliar here, and is such a departure from convention that it is sure to be severely criticised. Space makes it impossible to discuss it in detail. Suffice to say that she does not make Marguerite a wholly innocent and ignorant schoolgirl; but a young woman who, knowing good and evil, has held fast to the good till temptation came. This is really more in accord with the character as drawn by Goethe, and enhances the meaning of the tragedy a hundredfold. Madame Calvé is not content to make the 'Jewel Song' a mere vocal display. She makes it, though her vocalisation is perfect, a real soliloquy, full of dramatic meaning. In the Church Scene and the Prison Scene her power is intense, and throughout her 'business' is remarkable for freshness and originality. M. Saléza was not in his best voice, but he is among the most distinguished Fausts on the stage. The cast included M. Plançon, Mdlle. Bauermeister, Mdlle. Maubourg, and M. Declery (who was an adequate Valentine).

On the 23rd the opera was 'Rigoletto,' the first return to the old répertoire during the season. The title-part was admirably played and sung by Signor Scotti, and the Gilda was a débutante, Madame Miranda, an Australian. She has a very flexible and well-trained voice, and her florid singing, more especially her shake, is remarkably good. But there is a certain hardness in her voice. As an actress she was not distinguished, but strove hard to be dramatic. Signor Bonci as the Duke again sang excellently, and showed himself really proficient in bel canto. His singing of 'La Donna e mobile' has not been excelled for a long time; and he sang it to himself, not to the chandelier. Altogether he raised still higher hopes than he had done in 'La Bohème.' Madame Louise Homer, M. Journet, and M. Gillibert were also in the cast, and M. Flon conducted. One would have thought the orchestra had an easy task; but they played roughly. The staging was an undisguised return to the oldest conventions. But it is difficult to see what else it should be.

THE LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE second London Musical Festival, organised by Mr. Robert Newman, at Queen's Hall, took place during the week from April 30 to May 5. Whereas last year there were eleven concerts, this year there were only six, and at all of them the Queen's Hall Orchestra and the Lamoureux band played together. The English novelties were in each case played by the Queen's Hall band, under Mr. Wood, and the new French works by the Lamoureux Orchestra, under M. Camille Chévillard, the son-in-law and successor of M. Lamoureux.

Of the English novelties, the first in point of time was Mr. Percy Pitt's Symphonic Poem, 'Le Sang des Crépuscules' (The Blood of the Twilight, literally), inspired by a poem of M. Ch. Guérin, in which a red sunset is compared to the death of a soul. It is a gloomy subject, treated in a spirit which revels in its own melancholy. This is a politely periphrastic way of saying that it is decadent and morbid. The music reflects the spirit of the poem, but has not the same unhealthiness. It is melancholy, but in a more natural and less self-conscious way. Mr. Pitt's orchestration and harmony are, as is usual with him, astonishingly bold and individual, and show unbounded control over every modern resource, and he succeeds in making an atmosphere of his own and impressing the hearer with a sense of a strong personality. The work was immensely liked, in spite of its undoubted complexity—a complexity which is gradually disappearing from Mr. Pitt's later works—as, for instance, his striking Ballade for violin, which M. Ysaye played later in the week. Another of our younger composers who was represented by a new work was Mr. Granville Bantock, whose symphonic poem 'Thalaba the Destroyer' is also not concerned with a cheerful subject. But the gloom of Southey's poem is not introspective or metaphysical. It is external and legendary. The chief idea underlying the somewhat complicated Eastern story is the struggle between good and evil in man. The music has all Mr. Bantock's usual characteristics of gorgeous colouring and dramatic impulse, and his themes in this show more power and originality than is the case in most of his work. On this it may be regarded as the best work he has produced so far, except that it errs by excessive length, and Mr. Bantock is not always scrupulous in observing the line between the dramatic and the melodramatic. Of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Overture to 'Hiawatha,' which was produced at the last Norwich Festival, it is not necessary to speak again at any length.

Of the three French novelties, the most taking was undoubtedly M. Chévillard's Symphonic Poem 'Le Chêne et le Roseau' (The Oak and the Reed), based on La Fontaine's fable with the same title. The music is noticeable for its delicacy and restraint, a quality rare indeed in the symphonic poem of to-day. The Sicilian Rhapsody of Mr. Charles Silver is clever enough, but rather blatantly scored, and not on a much higher plane than much incidental music to spectacular plays. It is pictorial rather than picturesque. M. Léon Moreau's 'Sur la mer lointaine' is not free from the same defects, but its scoring is also very ingenious and there is a very effective use of a charming Breton folk-tune.

There is much diversity of opinion as to the effect of the combined bands, and that this effect was in every way ideal we should be the last to contend. But, on the other hand, to laugh at the experiment as nothing but a symptom of latter-day megalomania is absurd. It was not merely a large band enlarged; it was the fusing into one of two orchestras, each with an idiosyncrasy of its own. The tone of the 128 strings was not merely like a doubling of the tone of each body of strings. The net result was a wonderful union of the breadth and depth, which are the chief strength of our English strings, with the lightness and sweetness which are the great charm of the French.

At each concert there was a symphony: these were the 'Pathetic'; Beethoven's Fifth and Eighth, conducted by Mr. Wood; and Beethoven's 'Eroica' and Seventh, and Schubert's 'Unfinished,' conducted by M. Chévillard. Contrary to expectation, the 'Pathetic' fared worst in the changed conditions, while the Beethoven Symphonies gained in force and grandeur not a little. The only movement of Beethoven which really suffered was the Finale of the Seventh Symphony. The 'Funeral March' of the 'Eroica'—especially the fugal passages—was superb and the Finale irresistible. The Trio of the Scherzo of the Seventh was magically beautiful, and the Fifth was infinitely majestic throughout. Of the Wagner excerpts, the 'Meistersinger' Overture, the Prelude and Death Scene from 'Tristan,' and the 'Funeral March' from the 'Götterdämmerung' were the most impressive. In the last of these M. Chévillard showed himself a conductor of originality and real merit. He does not merely follow the traditions of M. Lamoureux, but is far more dramatic and vigorous. And his experience is so wide that he can secure what effect he wishes with certainty. He quite shared the honours with Mr. Wood, though on the whole, perhaps, the greater amount of the best work was done under the English conductor.

The soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Clara Butt, Miss Lillian Blauvelt, and M. Ysaye. The violinist stood out head and shoulders above everyone else. His performances of Max Bruch's Concerto in D and Vieuxtemps's Concerto (No. 4) were superb, but paled by the side of his masterly reading of Bach's 'Chaconne.' Of the singers, Miss Blauvelt, perhaps, distinguished herself most, singing delightfully each time. Particularly well did she sing on the last afternoon, when she introduced a song by Johann Strauss, 'Voci di Primavera,' orchestrated by Mr. Clarence Lucas, which may be cordially recommended to sopranos who wish for a change from 'Sweet Bird.'

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

OPINIONS may differ as to the desirability of presenting entire acts from operas on the concert platform, particularly when the excerpts are taken from Wagner's early works and the choruses are sung by the Royal Choral Society, an organisation which excels in oratorio. Obviously the procedure is inartistic, but it enables those who do not care for, or are unable to attend operatic performances, to gain some idea of works which otherwise would be sealed books to them, and from a purely musical point of view there may be some who can appreciate the music more in the concert-room than in the theatre. Certainly the choruses in the first act of 'Loher rin' were rendered, on the 3rd ult., at the Albert Hall, with a volume of tone never likely to be heard at Covent Garden, the climax at the end of the act in particular being delivered with magnificent emphasis. The other excerpts comprised the greater part of 'The Flying Dutchman,' and included the Spinning Chorus, which was also sung in a manner that would have excited the envy of any operatic manager. The soloists were Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, Mr. Dan Price, Mr. W. Llewellyn, and Mr. Andrew Black. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mendelssohn, Wagner, Liszt, and Brahms supplied the instrumental fare at the fourth concert of the season, on the 10th ult. This quartet of composers were represented by the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture, Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan,' the Pianoforte Concerto in A, and the Symphony (No. 2) in D. All these representative works, especially the beautiful Brahms Symphony, were well interpreted by the orchestra, under Mr. F. H. Cowen's spirited conductorship. Signor Busoni played the solo portion of the Liszt Concerto with the brilliancy which the work demands, and Miss Clara Butt sang with much acceptance Mr. Edward Elgar's 'Sea Pictures,' conducted by the composer. In these poetically attuned lyrics Mr. Elgar gives further proof of his artistic intuitiveness and his mastery of dainty orchestration. It is no wonder that the subtle charm of 'In Haven' secured for it an encore.

MR. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S NEW SUITE.

The fifth concert, on the 24th ult., brought forth a novelty in the form of an orchestral suite by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, entitled, 'Scenes from an Every-day Romance,' originally announced, by the way, as 'Miniatures from an Every-day Comedy.' Since, however, the composer furnishes no clue to the romantic happenings in his four 'scenes,' the title is somewhat in the nature of a red-herring drawn across the path of his music, in that speculation upon what it is all about is apt to distract the listener from the music per se. The four movements of the suite consist of (1) an Allegro, E minor, 6-8 time; (2) an Andante, G major, 2-4 time; (3) a Tempo di valse in B minor, and (4) a Presto, E minor, in 2-4 time. Mr. Taylor has made so great and deserved a reputation with his 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha,' that any new work from his pen commands the respect due to his genius. Opinions will doubtless be strangely at variance as to the merits of this, his latest achievement—in fact, even in the concert-room, after the performance, it was quite possible to learn that one critical hearer bestowed upon it the laudation 'perfectly lovely,' while another, equally competent to judge, dismissed it with 'awful stuff.' Time, the great tester, will judge as to these differences of opinion. His verdict will probably avoid these extremes. In listening to Mr. Taylor's recent strains there arises the question, 'Is the eight-bar phrase to be banished from modern symphonic music?' Such an interrogator will probably be called old-fashioned by the young bloods. But there seems to be a danger of the domination of the two-bar or four-bar phrase, and the snippity wee-bittieness which may result therefrom in their so-called 'development.' What may be termed 'the barking of the brass' may also become a snare to young composers, who may now and then be reminded that a composer named Schubert had some very good friends in the wood-wind of the orchestra.

In regard to the remainder of the concert, lovers of pure melody, as from a pellucid stream, derived supreme satisfaction in the strains of an air, with six dainty variations, in F by the master-melodist, Mozart, from a Divertimento in B flat, meaninglessly designated 'No. 15' in the programme. Herr Ernst von Dohnányi gave an artistic interpretation of Beethoven's ever-welcome Pianoforte Concerto in G, and Miss Ada Crossley was successful in the 'Inflammatus' from Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.' The concert concluded with Berlioz's fine and finely played symphony, 'Harold in Italy,' in which that excellent artist, Mr. A. Hobday, gave every satisfaction in the viola obbligato. With the exception of the suite, which was conducted by its composer, the concert was under the direction of Mr. Cowen. Both concerts took place at Queen's Hall.

YSAYE CONCERTS.

The first of the three 'Ysaye' concerts, which took place on the 17th ult., at the Queen's Hall, bore convincing witness to the superlative powers of the Belgian violinist. To announce three concertos—Bach's in E, Beethoven's, and Mendelssohn's—was to show remarkable faith in the musical public, to play them was a herculean task, and to succeed, as M. Ysaye succeeded, was a veritable tour de force. To the student of music the selection possessed exceptional interest. The style of each work is so distinct and each in its own way so great. In loftiness and nobility Beethoven's immortal composition rightly occupied the central place, and it towered above its companions. Although to the thoughtful comparison of the works was inevitable, M. Ysaye seemed to be in such perfect sympathy with each that there was no desire to compare the merit of his readings. Mr. Wood secured an ideal accompaniment from the orchestra, the sympathetic manner in which M. Ysaye was supported in delicate passages resulting in entrancing effects. Mozart's Allegro in D, heard on this occasion for the first time in England, is the last movement of a symphony, and is a naïve example of the master's genius when he was fifteen years of age. It is in sonata-form, laid out for strings, oboes, and horns, and possesses many touches that will appeal to admirers of Mozart.

MADAME ALBANI'S CONCERT.

Madame Albani's concert at the Albert Hall, on the afternoon of Saturday, the 12th ult., marked a new departure in what are known as prima donna concerts. Such functions with scratch orchestras are, indeed, not unknown; but it was a bold step to engage the whole Queen's Hall band with Mr. Wood, and to put into the programme such things as the 'Peer Gynt' Suite of Grieg, the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and the Prelude and Death Scene from 'Tristan und Isolde,' among others on the same high artistic plane. It is a tradition that the Albert Hall is not suited for the niceties of the best orchestral playing. But Mr. Wood managed to disprove this fallacy. Madame Albani herself was in admirable voice, and her singing of Isolde's Death Scene was instinct with fervour and pathos. She also gave an extremely brilliant display of florid singing in Meyerbeer's 'Trio des Flutes' (in which the flute playing of Mr. A. Fransella and Mr. V. Borlée was admirable). But it is surely almost time to do away with soprano solos with flute obbligato. Another excellent feature of the concert was the performance, by a specially chosen choir, of Sir F. Bridge's 'Flag of England.' The spirited and virile music was sung in a very spirited way under the direction of the composer. Madame Albani sang the effective soprano solos with all her wonted conviction. Sir F. Bridge conducted a very good performance of 'Hail, gladsome Light,' from 'The Golden Legend'; and Mr. Santley, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Miss Ada Crossley were also in the programme. Another notable feature of the concert, which alone would have distinguished it from other similar ones, was the singing of the quintet from 'Die Meistersinger.'

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

Mr. August Manns's annual benefit concert took place on April 28, when the second movement (Humoreske) of Mr. W. H. Bell's 'Walt Whitman' Symphony (omitted at the first production of the work on March 10) was played for the first time. It consists of an air with eight variations, followed by a Finale in waltz measure. The variations are remarkable for their unconventional form, the third being a Polacca, the trio of which furnishes the fourth variation. The 'Waltz-Finale' makes a brilliant termination to the movement, which, however, should be heard in its proper place to be duly estimated. Other orchestral works were the vivacious Suite from Tschaïkowsky's ballet 'La Belle au Bois dormant' and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. The solo instrumentalists were Miss Maud MacCarthy and Miss Vera Margolies, Miss Lillian Blauvelt and Mr. Andrew Black sang, and the Crystal Palace Choir contributed Mr. Hamish MacCunn's choral ballad, 'Lord Ullin's Daughter.'

THE BRIDLINGTON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

The customary spirit of enterprise characterised the annual festival which is 'run' by Mr. Bosville at Bridlington, and which took place for the seventh time on April 26. It is astonishing what this most enterprising amateur accomplishes with a purely local chorus and a scratch band of players gathered from various parts of Yorkshire. A bare enumeration of the compositions heard at the afternoon and evening concerts will demonstrate this. In the afternoon we had Verdi's 'Requiem,' Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, three pieces from Mr. T. T. Noble's 'Wasp' music, and a March by Tschaïkowsky. In the evening the choral works were Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and Stanford's 'Revenge,' with the 'Coriolan,' 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' and 'Carnaval Romain' Overtures, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and some vocal solos.

Enterprise has, however, always characterised the programmes, but it is satisfactory to be able to record a distinct advance in the efficiency of the performances. The 'Revenge' was not satisfactory: it had been given before at one of these festivals, and perhaps too much reliance was placed by the chorus upon their familiarity with a work that is, as a matter of fact, extremely catchy. The 'Requiem,' too, strained the resources of both band and chorus pretty severely, but with these exceptions the performances were most creditable, the chorus singing with an intelligence that went far to atone for certain defects that seem inseparable from North and East Riding choirs, and the band being more efficient than it has ever been before. No doubt this may be due in great measure to the increased power over his forces which experience is giving to Mr. Bosville, who, with less apparent exertion, exercises a greater control on both players and singers than he did aforetime. This was especially notable in the Symphony, of which an excellent all-round performance was given, the conductor's reading evidencing sympathy and an intelligent study of the music. 'The Death of Minnehaha,' which had not previously been heard in Yorkshire, was exceedingly well done, far better than might have been expected in the case of a work both novel and difficult. It made a really profound impression, to which the highly sympathetic singing of the two soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. F. Harford, contributed not a little. It is indeed remarkable that a poem which, no doubt because of its monotonous metre, had hitherto attracted no composer of note, should have provided the material for two works as powerful, as picturesque, and, above all, as varied as Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Wedding-Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha.' There is a note of tragedy in the latter that is genuinely moving, and one feels that heart as well as head has had a share in the work. The description of Minnehaha's hallucinations would seem to have appealed less strongly to the composer than the purely emotional passages, for there is less spontaneity in them, but they are powerful and highly picturesque in expression. It would be dangerous, perhaps, to predict for 'The Death of Minnehaha' the same extraordinary popularity that has attended 'The Wedding-Feast' in Yorkshire, as elsewhere, for the simple reason that tragedy is not so generally acceptable as comedy; but the one is a worthy and necessary pendant to the other, and the two are among the most remarkable and individual things that have been produced by our native school of composers during the past generation.

Mr. T. T. Noble, the organist of York Minster, who is rapidly making himself felt as an influence in the music of the county, had been asked to contribute a composition to the programme. Being unable to provide anything new, he had recourse to the music he wrote for the Cambridge production of Aristophanes's 'Wasps' in 1897. From this we had the overture, a sparkling, bustling piece of true comedy-music, and the introductions to the first and second acts, of which the former is in the tender vein of the prelude to the third act of 'Die Meistersinger,' while the latter is a very sprightly piece. As the gay and irresponsible programme analyst puts it: 'In the play Philocleon became very fast, therefore the prelude is marked Allegro con brio.' Mr. Noble conducted his own music, which went well, though one felt it deserved more careful preparation than time had allowed, and it was received very warmly indeed.

Though Verdi's 'Requiem,' as we have said, proved a rather hard nut to crack, on the part of both chorus and orchestra, the performance was both plucky and intelligent. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mrs. Burrell, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Francis Harford, who all sang very artistically. Mrs. Bosville sang very expressively Liza Lehmann's scena 'Endymion,' Mr. Hast introduced the fine tenor solo from the prologue to Stanford's 'Savonarola,' and, of course, Mr. Bosville, a host in himself, conducted.

CONFERENCE OF ORGANISTS AND DIRECTORS OF MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

This Conference held its first sitting at the Royal College of Organists on the 2nd ult. Nearly all the great secondary schools were represented, and many letters were received from music-masters at other schools of the same kind, expressing sympathy with the objects of the meeting and regretting inability to be present.

Dr. Harford Lloyd (Eton) having been unanimously voted to the chair, the meeting proceeded to the election of a secretary, the choice falling upon the Rev. Dr. Rowton, organist of Epsom College, who had been provisionally filling that office ever since the movement began.

The following resolutions were agreed to:—

1. 'That this Conference views with satisfaction the resolution passed unanimously at the Headmasters' Conference on December 21, 1899: "That it is desirable that, in any system of public inspection of schools, the subject of school music be included"; and that this meeting would be grateful for information from the headmasters on the following points—(a) what exactly they mean by the term "school music"; (b) what increased facilities for musical instruction they contemplate, with the view of making such inspection effective.'

2. 'That no system of musical inspection can be considered satisfactory which does not require a knowledge of the staff notation.'

3. 'That far more satisfactory musical results would be obtained in the secondary schools if the elements of sight-singing from the staff notation were regularly and systematically taught in all preparatory schools; and that this meeting would be grateful if the headmasters would consider the possibility of securing such teaching.'

Dr. Rowton, in moving No. 1, after pointing out the connection between this Conference and that of the headmasters', observed that the resolution put the best construction upon the recent action of the latter; it assumed that the headmasters were moving with the times, that they desired inspection—which the speaker affirmed the music-masters also invited—and that they did contemplate granting some extended facilities, which are indeed sorely needed, in order to give due practical effect to their own resolution.

Mr. A. J. Sainsbury (Bromsgrove) thought the proper course would be for the meeting to inform the headmasters what musicians considered school music should be, and, instead of asking what the headmasters proposed to do, to put a programme before them, demanding certain hours for musical instruction, certain facilities and certain encouragements, in order to be able to carry out the scheme of inspection, whatever this might prove to be.

The resolution, however, after some discussion, in which Mr. F. Cunningham Woods (Highgate), Mr. Paul David (Uppingham), Mr. E. L. Price (Trent College), and Dr. H. A. Harding (Bedford) took part, was eventually carried by a very large majority, in the form above given.

Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, in moving No. 2, urged the necessity of being on the watch, lest, in the working out of the new Board of Education Act, legislation should be so influenced that secondary schools would be committed to the tonic sol-fa system.

The chairman pointed out that there was not the least wish to attack tonic sol-fa; but there was a real danger that the Government might force upon secondary schools an inspection at the hands of those who tolerate only the tonic sol-fa notation. The point was not that tonic sol-fa should be excluded, but that the staff notation should be included. The resolution was then agreed to, with only one dissentient.

In moving No. 3, Dr. Eaton Faning strongly condemned the mischievous practice, unfortunately very common, of making young boys get up a quantity of vocal music solely by ear, for no other purpose than that of making a show at an annual concert or prize-giving; and he insisted that the real remedy lay in making elementary sight-singing, from the staff notation, a compulsory class subject in the preparatory schools, to which all the young voices naturally go. In present circumstances, by the time a boy with a voice reaches a secondary school the mischief was already done. The speaker incidentally made the very just remark that a so-called unmusical ear is, in many cases, merely an untrained ear.

Upon the motion of Dr. Rowton, a small standing committee to form an executive was elected, the result of the poll giving the following five names of chosen members: Dr. Harford Lloyd, Dr. Rowton, Dr. Eaton Faning, Mr. F. C. Woods, and Dr. Harding.

Hearty votes of thanks to the chairman and the secretary closed the proceedings of the Conference, and the newly-elected committee sat immediately afterwards, when the secretary was directed to send copies of resolutions 1 and 3 to the members of the Headmasters' Conference, and of resolutions 2 and 4 to the Board of Education, Whitehall.

The following gentlemen attended the Conference: C. Harford Lloyd (Eton), chairman; Eaton Faning (Harrow), Basil Johnson (Rugby), Paul David (Uppingham), G. H. Robinson (Charterhouse), C. F. Abdy Williams (Bradfield), A. H. Peppin (Clifton), F. B. Rogers (Felsted), F. H. Cliffe (Haileybury), F. Cunningham Woods (Highgate), Rev. C. Wharton (Radley), A. P. Standley (Rossall), A. H. Fox Strangways (Wellington), Bernard Johnson (Leeds), A. Eaglefield Hull (Bishop's Stortford), C. M. Spurling (Oundle), Ernest Newton (Hackney), H. Riding (Chigwell), R. R. Terry (Downside), H. A. Harding (Bedford), R. Harris (Cranleigh), F. Leeds (Blackheath), E. L. Price (Trent College), A. J. Sainsbury (Bromsgrove), and Rev. Dr. S. J. Rowton (Epsom), secretary.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Mr. Charles Jacoby brought forward no novelties at his concert on April 28, at St. James's Hall, but the excellence of his violin playing on that occasion merits record. He was ably assisted by Messrs. M. Jacoby, Emil Kreuz, and Charles Ould in Schubert's Quartet in D minor, which received a very effective interpretation. Vocal music was contributed by the Misses J. Spencer, L. Eglinton, and M. Marks.

Miss Edie Reynolds, at her concert on the 1st ult., at Steinway Hall, presented a commendably unhackneyed programme. A feature of the afternoon was the first performance of an unpublished Pianoforte Quartet in B minor, by Miss Rosalind Ellicott. The themes in this work are bright and pleasing, and although they are treated at too great length the music is always clear and scholarly. Its executants were Miss Sybil Palliser, Miss Edie Reynolds, Mr. Lionel Tertis, and Mr. Charles Ould, who were heartily recalled to the platform. Miss Reynolds and Miss Palliser also played the same composer's clever and melodious Sonata in D for pianoforte and violin. The concert-giver selected for her solo a new Prelude and Rondo by Mr. Donald Heinz, in which a theme of Scottish character is treated in an effective manner, and for an encore gave Mr. Edward German's engaging 'Valsette.' The 'Dulcken' Trio, Miss d'Egremont, and Mr. Charles Copland also took part in the concert.

Mr. George H. Clinton gave distinction to the conclusion of his eighth season of Chamber concerts by including in his programme, on the 7th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, a MS. Grand Suite in B flat, for two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, four horns, two bassoons, and contra-bassoon, by Herr Richard Strauss. The work is numbered 'Op. 14,' but although the music is in this composer's early style, this Opus number is probably wrong, as it is also that of Herr Strauss's setting for choir in six parts and orchestra of part of Goethe's 'Wanderer's Sturmlied.' The suite opens with a 'Preludium' of earnest and impressive character. This is followed by a 'Romanze,' solidly written and expressive. A stately Gavotte follows, with a trio over a 'drone bass,' and the work concludes with a much-elaborated Finale, approached by an Introduction based upon the thematic material of the Romanze, and containing a brilliantly worked-out fugue. At the same concert there was produced for the first time 'A Mosaic in ten pieces,' for clarinet and pianoforte, by Mr. R. H. Walthew, who took part with Mr. Clinton in their performance. They are only trifles, more suitable to domestic circles than the concert-room, but they are eminently pleasing, full of melody and daintiness.

The Herbert Sharpe Trio, consisting of Messrs. Herbert Sharpe, Ferdinand Weist-Hill, and Tennyson Werg, began their third series of Chamber concerts on the 8th ult., at Queen's (Small) Hall, when proof was given of good musicianship and painstaking rehearsal.

A Chamber concert distinguished by refinement of interpretation was given on the 8th ult., at St. James's Hall, by Miss Ethel Bankart (pianist) and Miss Hannah Bryant (violinist), when their performances together and alone were very enjoyable. They were ably assisted by Mr. Ley Vernon, Mr. Joseph Ludwig, and Mr. Paul Ludwig, and mention is also due of Madame Lily Henkel, who played the accompaniments with notable taste and skill.

Signor Simonetti's concert on the 18th ult., at the Salle Erard, provided a numerous audience with a most enjoyable evening. His new MS. String Quartet in D minor proved a melodious, well-balanced, and musicianly composition, and his interpretation of Mr. Percy Pitt's expressive Ballad for violin (Op. 17) was marked by intelligence and finish of a high order. Miss Fillunger was the vocalist.

RECITALS.

Mr. Theo. Field and Miss Jessie Field gave an agreeable vocal and pianoforte recital, on April 25, at the Steinway Hall. The former possesses a musical baritone voice and the latter is a neat and expressive player.

Miss Helen Valma, assisted by Mr. John Dunn, gave vocal and violin recitals on the 2nd and 16th ult., at the Salle Erard, of considerable artistic interest. Miss Valma has a remarkably rich-toned and powerful contralto voice, and her selection of songs showed wide reading and good taste. Mr. Dunn's admirable violin playing provided pleasing variety.

Mdlles. Jeanne and Fernande Kufferath showed much skill at their harp and violoncello recital on the 1st ult. We shall hope to hear these ladies again.

Mr. Frederick Dawson gave abundant proof of earnestness of purpose to excel in his art at his pianoforte recitals, at St. James's Hall, on the 12th and 19th ult. His programmes contained the masterpieces of the greatest writers for the pianoforte, and his readings were always conscientious, clear, and painstaking. He was most successful in Chopin.

Miss L. Teify Davies gave a concert at Steinway Hall on the 23rd ult.

PURCELL OPERATIC SOCIETY.

'DIDO AND ÆNEAS.'

There should be room in these days for an association seeking to revive, with all the advantages of modern decorative art, operas by eminent composers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The Purcell Operatic Society made an excellent beginning at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on the 17th ult., by reproducing, with ample executive means and elaborate picturesqueness, the English master's 'Dido and Æneas.' In its stage business (directed by Mr. Gordon Craig) the performance presented many points of difference from that of the pupils of the Royal College of Music at the Lyceum Theatre, on November 20, 1895. The rendering of the beautiful music, under the conductorship of Mr. Martin Fallas Shaw, afforded evidence of careful preparation. The band numbered about twenty, including several ladies, and there were over thirty choralists, each department proving satisfactory. As regards the principals, Madame Grace Wike did justice to the expressive strains in which Dido bemoans her fate, and Mr. Leonard Sickert sang with spirit as the lover. The music of Belinda, a portion of which was given behind the scenes, was divided between Misses Teify Davies and Winifred Peake, the latter also appearing as the First Witch. Miss Jenny Atkinson did specially good service as the Second Witch, whilst the grim music of the Sorceress was admirably delivered by Mr. Edwin J. Evans. The whole work was carried through with a sincerity and conscientiousness deserving cordial recognition.

'TOURNAMENTS OF SONG' IN THE YORKSHIRE DALES.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

SWALEDALE.

Though in musical proficiency the North-East of Yorkshire will not bear comparison with the more populous parts in the Western division of the county, it is precisely for this reason that the establishment of music competitions after Miss Wakefield's model deserves unqualified support. Indeed, it may with truth be asserted that in proportion as the singing at these competitions increases in efficiency, their raison d'être tends to disappear, and their worst feature, the cultivation of music purely for the sake of competition, grows till they become agencies of less than doubtful value. Three years ago Wensleydale established its competitions, chiefly through the instrumentality of the Hon. Lucien Orde-Powlett, who is the musical missionary of the dales; and its value has been so convincingly demonstrated that neighbouring Swaledale has followed suit, and its first 'Tournament of Song' was held on the 16th and 17th ult., at the historic and romantic capital of the dale, Richmond, a town which is indeed 'beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth.' It is largely owing to the initiative of Mr. W. Ellis, organist of the Parish Church, that the Richmond tournament has been established; but its organisation is very properly left chiefly in the hands of amateurs, at the head of whom are the brace of genial honorary secretaries, Miss C. and Miss M. Yeoman, who have worked well to bring about so successful an issue.

There can, indeed, be no doubt that a most satisfactory beginning was made. For a first attempt a remarkable amount of interest and even enthusiasm was aroused, which, we doubt not, will be greatly enhanced now that the nature of the affair is better understood, and the spirit of a wholesome emulation excited. There will not, for instance, be so large a number of abstentions, especially in the choral classes, upon which Miss Wakefield, who judged them, commented, and we may hope that the Dissenting choirs will be inclined to try conclusions with Church choirs on a platform where both can meet without any sacrifice of principle. On this occasion four Church choirs sang Farrant's very beautiful anthem 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake,' and acquitted themselves well, and in many cases admirably; the Richmond Parish Church choir, who won the first prize, distinguishing themselves by their careful attention to the words and spirit of this truly reverential piece of Church music. Less showy, but of almost greater practical value, was the competition in Psalm chanting, a matter to which it is well that attention should be thus prominently called, and in which the establishment of a higher standard is most desirable. Here, again, the careful attention to enunciation and declamation won the first place for Richmond, which was, however, shared in this case by Aske Chapel. The vocal quartets were less satisfactory, for here the demerits of an individual voice are apt to become painfully apparent; but a class meant especially for small village choirs deserved more popularity than it secured, only one choir having the pluck to come 'up to the scratch.'

The instrumental classes, which were judged by Mr. T. T. Noble, of York, produced some good results, but for the most part indicated the want of more systematic teaching, and, as a corollary, the advantage of such an opportunity for comparison as these competitions afford. In no case could there be any doubt as to the pre-eminence of the player who was placed first, the young pianist, Randall Croft, and the young violinist, de Moleyn Rogers, showing unmistakable evidence of careful training on correct lines. The senior competitions in instrumental playing were less satisfactory, there being but few candidates. In the violin class the playing was excellent, and if the pianists attained a much lower level, this was to a great extent because the test pieces were unreasonably difficult. The junior vocal competitions were distinctly encouraging, and showed that there is some material in the district which deserves careful cultivation.

WENSLEYDALE.

The competitions at Leyburn, in Wensleydale, were held, for the third successive year, on the two following days, the 18th and 19th ult. Here Miss Wakefield acted as judge of the senior vocal classes, Mr. Ellis taking the junior in addition to the pianists, while the violinists were adjudged by Mr. C. E. L. Ehrke, of Richmond. Perhaps the most important thing was the performance of Bennet's beautiful madrigal, 'Flow, O my tears,' an exacting test, in the preparation of which great pains must have been expended. Bedale's success may be measured by this—that Miss Wakefield thought fit to award fifty out of a possible sixty marks for their careful and artistic performance. Sullivan's anthem 'O Love the Lord," a piece of very beautiful vocal counterpoint, was also ably sung by the Masham choir; but the class for small village choirs, as at Richmond, produced but one competitor. This is much to be deplored, as these tiny country villages want all the encouragement and stimulus that can be given them. For the reason we suggested in regard to the Swaledale competitions, the vocal quartets were very unsatisfactory, and it would not be amiss if intending competitors were advised to be at least note-perfect before they attempt public rivalry. The sight-reading of both adults and juveniles was very encouraging and so were the junior instrumental classes, which revealed several young players of exceptional promise. A little girl named Madge Jones showed an equal technical proficiency and general musical aptitude on both violin and pianoforte, and played sight tests on each instrument with remarkable readiness. She has the makings of a thorough musician, and it is much to be hoped that circumstances may not compel her to hide her light under a bushel. Here, if anywhere, is the proper occasion for scholarships and subsidies. As in the case of Richmond, the string quartet competition produced but a single entry. The test was far too difficult, and, besides, string quartets cannot be very common in these sparsely populated rural districts. Perhaps a pianoforte trio competition might produce better results.

At Richmond and at Leyburn there were concerts in which the winners were heard again, and some of the chief choirs united their forces in highly creditable performances of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, under the conductorship of Mr. Orde-Powlett. The value of the inclusion of an important work in the proceedings cannot be too much insisted upon, for it points the end to which these competitions should be the means, and tends to prevent the competitors from spending an undue amount of time on preparing competition pieces.

MUSIC COMPETITIONS AND FESTIVALS.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

KENDAL.—THE WESTMORELAND FESTIVAL.

The fifteenth Westmoreland Festival was held in Kendal on April 26, 27, and 28. Formerly this festival was named after its originator and most active promoter, Miss Wakefield, but as the scope of the scheme widened it was felt better to give it a local name. Since the establishment of the festival the progress made has been truly remarkable. The scheme provides for a series of competitions open only to the surrounding district and for the united performance, on a large scale, of some important works. This year a new departure was made, in the engagement, at great cost, of a full professional orchestra of nearly fifty performers from Manchester, under the leadership of Mr. Risegari. Another strong feature of the evening concerts was the engagement of Mr. Plunket Greene. There being no convenient concert hall available, all the performances were held in the Drill Hall. On April 26, the morning and afternoon were devoted to solo singing and village orchestra competitions. Twenty-seven soloists presented themselves, and there were four village orchestras. The test piece for the orchestras was Schubert's Overture to 'Rosamunde.' The playing showed a great improvement on that of previous years. It was not to be expected that such orchestras could be anything like complete, but even with the makeshifts for brass and wind the result was extremely creditable. The Leasgill band, under Mrs. T. A. Argles, gained the first place. At the evening concert, in which choirs from fifteen places took part, 'Phaudrig Crohoore' (Villiers Stanford) was performed, under Miss Wakefield's direction, with great success. The combined choirs numbered over five hundred singers. Mr. Plunket Greene sang eighteen songs in inimitable fashion, including the 'Maud' cycle, composed by Mr. Arthur Somervell; the 'Scotch' Symphony was admirably played under the direction of Mr. Risegari. On the 27th, the morning and evening were occupied with competitions of village choirs variously constituted. Eleven female voice and twenty mixed voice choirs competed. In the chief section, the test piece was 'Sweet love for me' (Villiers Stanford). The Kendal Parish Church Choir gained the first place, Yealand coming close behind. The singing throughout the day was of a high standard. The evening concert was commenced by a fine performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, conducted by Mr. Risegari. Mr. Plunket Greene sang twelve songs in two sets, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The chief feature of the programme was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' upon the preparation of which Miss Wakefield, who conducted, had spared no pains. Mr. Henry Beaumont sang the tenor solo. The work was well received by the large audience. At each of the evening concerts Miss Wakefield's popular setting of Colonel Hay's words, 'When the boys come home,' was sung by the chorus with much fervour. Saturday, the 28th, was the children's day. Fourteen junior choirs competed. Last year it was generally felt that the children did not sing as well as in some former years, but this year there was an unmistakable improvement. Most of the singing was acceptably in tune and afforded evidence of skilful training. After the competition, at the prize distribution, a concert was given, the chief feature of which was the humorous cantata 'The Frogs and the Ox,' by Shapcott Wensley and Sir Frederick Bridge. Dr. McNaught adjudicated at all the competitions. Mr. A. H. Willink proved himself to be an able secretary.

At the last evening concert Miss Wakefield definitely resigned her position as conductor. She felt that, after fifteen years' service, she was entitled to a rest, and she was proud to leave the Festival in flourishing condition. All who know of Miss Wakefield's remarkable work in creating an enthusiasm for music in a district formerly stigmatised as being unmusical will wish her well in her well-earned retirement. As we propose shortly to give a fuller account of this work we need say no more on this occasion.

YORK.

The York competitions, established chiefly by the energy and perseverance of Miss Mary Egerton, were held on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd ult. The fact that it was necessary to arrange for three whole days indicates the extent to which the competitions have grown. The vocal and instrumental classes numbered twenty-three. There were over a hundred entries, many of which were choirs from the surrounding villages. Probably there were not many short of a thousand competitors. On the first day the competitions began at 9.30 a.m. and lasted until nearly 11 p.m. Ten violinists played Svendsen's Romance and five trio parties played Hummel's Trio in E flat for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. Miss Betty Morris won the violin playing prize and Miss Groves' party won the trio prize. During the afternoon the competing children's choirs gave a concert, at which were performed the cantatas 'The Hare and the Tortoise' (Gaul) and 'The Waits of Bremen' (Luard Selby), and the winning choirs sang their test pieces. In the competition the children generally sang very well in tune and with fair refinement. On the second day a large number of choirs from the outlying villages competed, and the city itself was well represented by some excellent performances. The Centenary Chapel Choir, under Mr. M. Rymer, was especially successful in winning prizes. The third day was occupied almost exclusively with choral competitions. A good deal of the singing was first rate. It was evident that one good result of previous years' competitions had been that increased attention had been given to the drill and discipline necessary to produce good results. Teachers remarked that their pupils were more willing to attend to points not before considered important. The festival concluded, on the evening of the 3rd ult., with an evening concert, at which 300 choristers, and a band of about fifty, including the York Symphony Orchestra, performed. It was noteworthy that Mr. T. Tertius Noble, the Cathedral organist, played the tympani on this occasion. The programme included the cantata 'The May Queen' (Bennett), and many of the winning choirs sang their test pieces. Miss Egerton conducted. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. The educational value of the competitions in stimulating attentive practice and giving isolated communities a motive to work cannot be over-estimated. The share taken by Mrs. Adolphus Duncombe in the general arrangements deserves special mention.

MORECAMBE.

The Morecambe Music Competitions, which were held this year on the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th ult., have assumed far more than local importance. They attract a larger number of competitors than any other event of the kind held in England, and the scope of the undertaking generally is on a grand scale. Recently the Council were presented with a 100-Guinea Challenge Shield by a local patron, Mr. Baxter, and the generosity of another patron enabled them to offer a substantial prize for a part-song competition open to all the country. The event has come to be looked forward to by numerous choirs in the North of England, and audiences are attracted by the foreknowledge that at Morecambe they will hear some of the finest part-singing to be heard in this country. On the present occasion there were between two and three thousand competitors. One very great advantage the Morecambe scheme enjoys is the availability of the magnificent hall of the Winter Gardens, which holds about 5,000 people. The Council was fortunate in securing the attendance of Sir John Stainer, who, with Dr. McNaught, adjudicated. Sir John Stainer has for years abstained from work of this kind, but he was induced to go to Morecambe in order to exhibit his interest in and approval of a great educational undertaking. We have reason to know that he was very agreeably impressed by what he heard. The Morecambe folk were still further fortunate in securing the attendance of Lady Stainer, who gave away the prizes. The first day was devoted to local classes. There were church choirs, vocal duets, female voice choirs, string quartets, mixed voice choirs, violoncello and viola solos, male quartets, and other sections. One of the most notable performances of the day was that of the St. James's (Barrow) Choir, under Miss Lones. It is part of the plan of the Morecambe competition to pick out the best choirs or performers of the earlier part of the day and make them compete again with a new piece in the evening as part of an evening concert. At the concert given on the 9th ult. this plan was adopted, but by far the most notable and, we may say, educational part of the programme, was the singing of Mr. Plunket Greene, who gave a characteristic recital. It should be mentioned that as the pianoforte pitch was too high for Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. S. Liddle, who is an ideal accompanist, was called upon to transpose 'The Erl-King' and many other songs. Mr. C. H. Fogg, of the Hallé Concerts, accompanied all the other music. On the 10th ult. there were no competitions, but Dr. McNaught gave a lecture on 'Musical Competitions.' The lecture collated some of the experience gained in many parts of the country and embraced a discussion of the question as to whether we are a musical nation, and some speculations as to the underlying causes that account for the great differences of voice quality and power that exist in various parts of the country. The lecturer believed that vowel usage in speech was the predominant factor. Various types of musical competitions were criticised. The chief faults found in choral singing were then enumerated and illustrated. Sir John Stainer, who presided, made an interesting speech on musical accent, a point which grew out of the lecture. A choir from Skerton, under Mr. A. Davies, sang the illustrations. On the 11th the children monopolised the day. There were numerous sectional competitions, many of which brought out considerable skill. The proceedings were closed by a concert at which the principal piece was the humorous cantata 'The Waits of Bremen' (Luard Selby). This work was performed with astonishing precision, good tune and tone, and clear enunciation. Dr. McNaught, who conducted, stated that he had never before had a better children's choir to conduct. Most of the children sang the whole cantata from memory.

The open competitions of the last day (Saturday) are always the most interesting to the general public. Choirs come from distant parts, and the singing is usually of a high order. The proceedings, on the present occasion, began with a competition of church choirs, followed by one between female voice choirs, in which seven choirs competed. The first position in the latter section was won by the St. James's (Barrow) Ladies' Choir, under Miss Lones. They sang the difficult test pieces 'Sinks the night' (Schumann) and 'Questions' (Brahms) with beautiful tone and expression. Three string orchestras played Grieg's 'Aus Holberg's Zeit' Suite, the prize falling to Miss Cassidy's orchestra, which was conducted by Mr. Howson. Sight reading is a commendable part of the Morecambe scheme. Six mixed voiced choirs entered in this section, with the result that the Morecambe Madrigal Society gained the first prize, the Saltaire Choir coming second. Four full orchestras played the Overture 'Die Felsenmühle' (Reissiger), the first prize falling to the Nelson Congregational Orchestra, conducted by Mr. C. Townsley. The Colne Orchestral Society, under Mr. J. Lascelles Wildman, was an excellent second. The playing of all the orchestras was very satisfactory. It may be hoped that this section will grow and ultimately become one of the most important in the general scheme. In order to enforce adequate preparation of two works, 'Blest Pair of Sirens' (Parry) and the new madrigal 'Room, room, for Flora's Queen,' by Sir John Stainer, designed for combined performance at the evening concert, all choirs in the Challenge Shield class were compelled to use these pieces in another section. Blackpool, under Mr. Whittaker, was a capital first, Morecambe and Saltaire following close behind. A male-voice choir section, in which there were three test pieces—'The Lotus Flower' (Schumann), 'The Northman's Song' (Kücken), and 'Bind my brows' (Stainer)—brought seven choirs, several of which sang all the pieces with simply remarkable finish. The Manchester Orpheus Prize Glee Society, under Mr. Nesbit, gained nearly full marks for all three pieces and were justly awarded the prize. The most exciting contest was that for the Challenge Shield. Three pieces had to be sung, "Night Watch" (Brahms), a part-song very difficult to sing in tune, "Fire, fire my heart" (Morley), and "Soldier, rest" (Oliver King). An audience of between four and five thousand persons took a keen interest in this competition. That, in the opinion of the experienced judges, some of the singing approached perfection is evident from the fact that the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. H. Whittaker, gained the first place with 175 marks out of a possible 180. The Morecambe Madrigal Society, under Mr. R. G. W. Howson, also sang splendidly, the Colne Harmonic Society and the famous Saltaire Prize Choir following close behind. The proud possessors of the Challenge Shield are, therefore, the Blackpool choristers. The town may well be proud of its choir and its artistic conductor. In beauty of tone and charm of expression, in absolute precision and unity the Blackpool choir will be hard to beat. The evening of the final day included fine performances of Reissiger's Overture, 'Die Felsenmühle,' by three bands massed, and of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' for which all the choirs combined, the Colne Orchestra ably playing the accompaniments. Stainer's new madrigal, mentioned above, was also admirably sung, and roused the audience to demand an encore Dr. McNaught conducted. The prizes were distributed by Lady Stainer, and after several votes of thanks were passed the proceedings came to an end. The council can congratulate themselves upon a great success.

LINCOLNSHIRE.—BRIGG AND SPILSBY.

Schemes of competitions were this year commenced at Brigg in North Lincolnshire and at Spilsby in South Lincolnshire. The Brigg gathering took place on April 30. It was promoted chiefly by Mr. Gervase Cary-Elwes and his wife, Lady Winifrede, and proved to be an unexpected success. Children's choirs trooped in from outlying villages and other village choirs came to learn from one another and from frank criticism wherewithal they could improve themselves. The largest hall in the town, crammed to suffocation as it was, did not suffice to hold the people eager to hear the evening performance by the winning choirs and others combined. Thus the movement has received an excellent start. It will probably require two days next year. At Spilsby, Mrs. Massingberd was the moving spirit. On proposing the scheme she was met by declarations of its utter impossibility in such a music-forsaken place; but with rare faith she persevered, and, in spite of many obstacles, the first competitions, held on the 4th ult., were successful in bringing a number of entries from far and near. At the evening performance in the Drill Hall the largest audience ever gathered in Spilsby enthusiastically set the seal of its approval upon Mrs. Massingberd's efforts. At Brigg and at Spilsby there is much to be done in the way of training and sweetening voices, but the great achievement in both places is the establishment of a belief that the competitions are a practical means to the end. Dr. McNaught adjudicated on both occasions.

NORTHAMPTON.

The 5th ult. was busily spent in the Town Hall, Northampton. There were children's competitions, and a dozen or so adult choirs sang in various classified sections. In the madrigal class Harleston secured the first place and Long Buckby the same enviable position in the part-song class. Miss Wakefield and the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton were the judges.

WORCESTER.

The Madresfield competitions, originally promoted by Lady Mary Lygon, were this year held at Worcester, instead of as heretofore at Malvern. They took place, on the 16th and 17th ult., in the Public Hall. Only local competitors were admitted, even Worcester being excluded from the scope of the scheme. The entries were not very numerous, but it was gratifying to note that the standard of performance was higher than that of former years. Probably Lady Lygon's enforced absence in Australia deprived the gathering of some of its interest. But notwithstanding this disadvantage the scheme is undoubtedly doing a good work and is calculated to increase in usefulness. The combined adult choirs gave an excellent performance of the motet 'Blessing, Honour,' by Bach. Dr. McNaught adjudicated and conducted.

THE FEIS CEOIL.—IRISH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The fourth festival of the Feis Ceoil Association was held in Belfast during the third week of May. The entries were not so numerous in solo singing as in previous years, but a really high standard was attained in the soprano and contralto competitions, the gold medals of which were won respectively by Miss Lucy Brady (Dublin) and Miss Boyd (Carrickfergus). In the solo singing competitions the competitors had to sing, in addition to a classical test piece, an Irish air of their own selection. In the tenor competition the adjudicators were fairly tired of 'The Minstrel Boy,' which was chosen by twelve out of fourteen competitors! The vocal quartets for mixed and male voices, and the ladies' trios showed distinct advance; while the string quartet which won the first prize (Mrs. Swan, Miss Munster, and the Misses Butt) was one of the best performances during the week. The ladies' choir competition was most interesting, a choir from Ballymena (conductor, Dr. E. Corney) taking first place. The music for the choral competitions was selected mainly from Latin motets by Palestrina, Orlando di Lassus, and Vittoria, and these compositions were exceptionally fine test pieces. The rendering of Vittoria's 'O vos omnes qui transitis per viam' by the winning choir in the Choral Competition, Class 2 (the St. Cecilia Choral Society, Hillsborough), was the most refined expression of religious pathos, and the conductor, Mr. W. Hartz, was warmly complimented by the adjudicator, Mr. George Riseley.

The chief choral competition was held in the evening and attracted a very large audience. The test pieces were motets by Orlando di Lassus and Palestrina, and De Pearsall's madrigal 'When Allan-a-Dale went a-hunting.' The prize was obtained by Dr. Koeller's Belfast Madrigal Choir, which gave a wonderfully fine performance, not losing the slightest shade of pitch throughout these long unaccompanied pieces. The Saturday of the festival was devoted to competitions in Irish solo singing (gold medal, Miss Florence Crawford), for the Irish pipes, and for the best collection of unpublished Irish airs, and band contests.

Taken all round, the best things in the competitions were the prize male choir's singing (the Belfast Select Choir; conductor, Dr. W. G. Price), the string quartet already mentioned above, the prize choir's singing of Vittoria's motet 'O vos omnes,' and Master William Bennett's solo singing. The latter received quite an ovation at the final concert for his exquisite singing of 'Rose, softly blooming.'

At the first two concerts the various prize compositions were played. The cantata, 'A game of chess,' by the Rev. W. H. Collisson, proved to be an interesting, brightly written, and very melodious composition. Mr. Hardebech's part-song, 'The moon doth shed its quivering light,' is also a charming composition, and Mrs. Needham's songs, sung by Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, were very effective. Miss Agnes Nicholls was the soprano and pleased every one with her fresh and beautiful voice. Mr. William Green also was received with great favour, but undoubtedly the laurels of the week were won by Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, who simply captivated the audience by his inimitable singing of Irish songs of all sorts.

A very fine concert of classical music was given gratuitously by Miss Nicholls, Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, Herr Kruse (who gave a masterly rendering of Bach's 'Chaconne'), and the Chevalier Emil Bach (the last three of whom were adjudicators in the solo singing, strings, and pianoforte competitions) on one afternoon to benefit the funds of the festival. The principal adjudicators were Mr. George Riseley (Bristol), Herr Kruse, Herr Emil Bach, and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan. For the specially Irish competitions Mr. Brendan Rogers and Mr. P. J. McCall were selected for their pre-eminent fitness.

The festival was financially and artistically an unqualified success, and too much praise cannot be given to the ladies and gentlemen of the Belfast committee, who managed a most complicated and difficult week's programme with the most gratifying results, everyone being satisfied and pleased with the festival.

LONDON AND SUBURBAN CONCERTS.

AN English conductor and an English programme at the Queen's Hall! A somewhat rare combination in Langham Place, but a thoroughly successful one, to judge from the plaudits of a large and enthusiastic audience. The man of the occasion was Mr. Allen Gill, the young musician who is rapidly coming to the front as a conductor; and the occasion was the National Sunday League's concert of the 6th ult., at which Mr. Edward German's stirring Overture to 'Richard III.,' Mr. Edward Elgar's electrifying 'Sword Song' ('Caractacus') and 'Challenge of Thor' ('King Olaf'), in addition to Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha' formed an attractive programme, thoroughly to the taste of the Sunday Leaguers and their friends, and excellently presented by all concerned. The choir, largely recruited for this occasion from the Alexandra Palace, People's Palace, and other sources, proved a well-trained body of voices, alert and thoroughly in sympathy with the music. In Mr. Elgar's superb 'Challenge' (still the most effective and imaginative piece of choral writing produced within recent years), as well as in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's beautiful cantatas, they displayed such a good tone, such an intelligent appreciation of both the music and the gifted conductor's wishes, that the thought must have occurred to many in the audience: Why is choral music so rarely heard at the most central concert hall in London, while the requisite material to form an excellent chorus is so easily found, and an exceptionally gifted and successful choir-trainer, such as Mr. Gill has proved himself to be, near at hand? That Mr. Gill handles the orchestra with more than ordinary skill he has shown on many previous occasions. He combines thorough savoir faire with the requisite enthusiasm and temperament to interpret classic and modern music with equal success. Truly, he deserves to succeed! The soloists were Madame Medora Henson, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Andrew Black, who, needless to say, were all fully competent.

THE Putney Philharmonic Society, one of the latest additions to the goodly list of suburban musical bodies, gave a concert in the Putney Assembly Rooms, on April 26. Though still in its infancy and only able to boast of a choir of some fifty voices, the Society, under the direction of Mr. James Brown, put forth an ambitious and interesting programme, including Mr. Edward Elgar's splendid little cantata 'The Banner of St. George' (which is becoming more and more appreciated as its many fine qualities become known); the same composer's beautiful Song-cycle 'Sea Pictures' (sung by Miss Gertrude Lonsdale); Gade's 'Spring's Message,' Mozart's G minor Symphony, four movements from Bach's Suite in C, and a few smaller pieces, amongst which we were pleased to notice one of Lanner's fascinating waltzes, 'Die Schönbrunner.' This charmingly varied programme was performed in a very creditable style. Strange to say, Bach's Suite (in which, by the way, a lady, Mrs. F. Sturt, played the bassoon solo part!) pleased the audience more than anything else. It really looks as if, to quote a friend's remark, that 'coming' composer, J. S. Bach, had a great future before him in the twentieth century!

THE Hampstead Choral and Orchestral Society's concert at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on the 9th ult., was noteworthy for a smooth performance of Mendelssohn's too rarely heard 95th Psalm, 'O come, let us sing.' The choral points were firmly taken up, and there was no lack of devotional feeling. Miss C. Rayner, Miss Phœbe Green, and Mr. Henry Holyoake were the soloists. Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Gade's 'Spring's Message,' Bishop's 'Now by day's retiring lamp,' and Schumann's 'Gipsy life' were also in the programme. The band, which has much improved, played with spirit Haydn's 'Oxford' Symphony in G and Cherubini's 'Les deux Journées' Overture. Mr. Jules Koopman proved an efficient conductor.

THE Highbury Philharmonic Society provided a highly attractive programme, on the 8th ult., when Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' were performed. This was the second occasion on which the former work had been given by the Society, and the choir sang with the confidence gained by familiarity with the music, winning high commendation throughout. The orchestra was, as usual, excellent. The recitation was skilfully given by Mrs. Betjemann, and Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Whitworth Mitton were able representatives of the solo music in both works, being joined in Handel's cantata by Mr. Andrew Black, who, needless to say, was excellent in the music of Polyphemus.

THE Tonic Sol-fa College held its annual meeting at Queen's Hall, on the 14th ult., under the presidency of Lord Reay, who said the new notation had been a great boon to the rising generation. Mr. John Spencer Curwen was among the speakers, and Miss Lushington presented to several pioneers of the Tonic Sol-fa movement silver medals given by the president of the College. Part-songs and choruses were spiritedly rendered by the South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr. L. C. Venables, the Stockwell Pupil Teachers' Centre Ladies' Choir (Mr. T. Maskell Hardy), and the Gwalia Male-Voice Party (Mr. Madoc Davies). The choirs combined in rendering Sullivan's 'Song of Peace.'

THE Victoria Madrigal Society brought its season to a successful conclusion, on April 26, at St. Martin's Town Hall. The choralists remained true to their mission by singing, under the watchful conductorship of Dr. G. Stanley Murray, such justly esteemed compositions as Weelkes's 'As Vesta was,' Morley's 'Now is the month of maying' and 'What saith my dainty darling,' and Wilbye's 'The Lady Oriana.' These and other pieces were sung with genuine taste combined with spirit. Vocal contributions were forthcoming from Miss Gertrude Macaulay and Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and harp solos from Miss Molteno.

THE North-West London Choral Society, of which Mr. W. H. Speer is the conductor, honourably acquitted itself at the Hampstead Conservatoire on the 7th ult. The choralists, numbering about a hundred, sang with steadiness and regard for detail the anthems 'Ascribe unto the Lord' (S. S. Wesley), Stanford's 'Awake, my heart,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer,' their efforts in the last-named being particularly deserving of praise. Madame Isabel George and Mr. W. P. Richards were the vocal soloists, Mr. Healey Willan did excellent work at the organ, and Herr Georg Liebling played Beethoven's 'Sonata Appassionata' and other pianoforte compositions.

THE South London Choral Association, on the 2nd ult., gave a very satisfactory interpretation of Haydn's First Mass in B flat and of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie,' the principal solo vocalists being Misses E. Coward and Ch. Edwards, Madame Edith Hands, and Messrs. F. Bamford and J. Lacey. The excellently trained choir, under the direction of Mr. Leonard C. Venables, entered upon their task with great spirit and musical intelligence. Nor should a word of praise be omitted as to the share taken in the performance by the orchestra. Mr. Richard Temple recited the connecting narrative in 'Athalie' with much fervour and dramatic effect.

THE sixth annual concert of the Marlborough Place Amateur Orchestral Society took place at the Hampstead Conservatoire on the 22nd ult. The programme included Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' Overture, Mackenzie's 'Benedictus,' and two of Moszkowski's Spanish Dances. In the interpretation of these works, the performers gave abundant evidence of their efficiency under the skilful training and alert conductorship of Mr. Paul Oppenheimer. Mr. N. H. Geehl brilliantly played the first movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C, and Mrs. Helen Trust contributed some songs with acceptance.

AT the fine new Parish Church of St. Mary's, Hornsey, an excellent rendering of Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer' formed the musical attraction at a special service, on the 16th ult. The soprano solos were admirably sung by Master Jeffries; the tenor and bass work found capable exponents in Messrs. Thomson and Mason. The choir, numbering about seventy voices, sang with finish and precision, showing evidence of very careful training. Mr. Henry J. Baker conducted, and Mr. H. J. Baggs (assistant-organist, St. Mary's) presided at the organ, the overture and the accompaniments throughout being tastefully and neatly executed.

THE London County Council bands commenced their season in the parks and open spaces on the 17th ult. On the preceding day the customary rehearsal of the combined force of 100 performers took place at the Queen's Hall, Messrs. J. A. Hamilton, J. R. Macdonald, W. Short, and E. J. Elliot, the four conductors, in turn presiding. The majority of the pieces were thoroughly adapted for open-air performance, and some operatic selections were effectively played. More refined pieces in the season's programme are the 'Yellow Jasmine' number from Cowen's 'Language of Flowers' Suite and Elgar's bright 'Sevillana.'

THE Park Church Choral Society, Highbury, gave an excellent concert in the Lecture Hall, Grosvenor Road, on the 11th ult., under the skilful direction of Mr. John Cook. The chief feature was, appropriately enough, Macfarren's 'May Day,' the solo in which was well sung by Miss Kate Munro. Some well-executed violin solos by Mr. W. H. Reed, songs by Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. W. S. Laughland, and tastefully sung glees and part-songs by the choir completed an attractive programme. Mr. Frederick Meen was an efficient accompanist.

THE St. George's Glee Union gave its monthly concert at the Pimlico Rooms, on the 8th ult., when Macfarren's 'May Day' and Bennett's 'May Queen' were appropriately selected for performance. The solo music was sung by Miss Maud Bond, Miss Ethel Carlile, Mr. Wilfred Kearton, and Mr. T. J. Morgan, and the singing of the choir indicated satisfactorily the care bestowed in rehearsal by Mr. Joseph Monday, the conductor. The accompaniments were played by Miss Mills and Mr. F. R. Kinkee (pianoforte), and Mr. Ernest Stock (harmonium).

THE Finsbury Choral Association performed Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World,' at the Northern Polytechnic Institute, on April 26. The choruses were, on the whole, fairly well rendered, and the orchestra was excellent. The principal vocalists were Madame Lilla Harrison, Miss Bessie Jones, Madame Dews, Messrs. Herbert Grover, Edward Iles, and Andrew Black, the last-named artist giving the beautiful solo 'Daughters of Jerusalem' very finely. Mr. F. Cunningham Woods conducted with his customary skill and care.

ON the 1st ult. a very successful concert was given at the Northern Polytechnic Institution by Mr. Fountain Meen, who was assisted by Miss Florence Bethell, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. Santley, the Westminster Glee Singers, and Mr. W. H. Squire. Mr. Walter Churcher gave two recitations. Besides acting as accompanist, Mr. Meen played 'Four Sketches in Dance Rhythms' by the late Erskine Allon, and joined Mr. Squire in Mendelssohn's beautiful Variations in D for violoncello and pianoforte.

ON the 7th ult. Stainer's cantata 'The Daughter of Jairus,' and a miscellaneous selection of solos and choruses (including Barnby's motet 'King all glorious' and Sullivan's anthem 'I will mention'), were given in the Downs Chapel, Clapton. The soloists were Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Masters and Mr. Egbert Roberts. The choir consisted of about sixty voices, conducted by Mr. R. G. Tournay. Miss E. L. C. Head played Mackenzie's 'Benedictus' and effectively accompanied on the pianoforte; Mr. W. C. Webb, the organist and choirmaster of the chapel, was at the organ.

THE Plumstead Choral Society gave its first concert on April 24, when Gaul's cantata 'The Ten Virgins' was performed by a choir and orchestra of sixty (led by Mr. Charles Hoggard), under the baton of Miss Jean Hunter. The soloists were Miss Amy Harding, Madame Florence Logan, Messrs. Wright Beaumout and Robert Grice. Mrs. W. T. Vincent and Miss Tailby assisted at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

A SPECIAL musical service was held in the Wesleyan Church, Clapham, on the 8th ult., when Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Zion' and 'Hear my Prayer' were sung by the choir. Miss Kate Cherry was the soprano soloist, and the accompaniments were played by Mr. Wesley Hammet, the organist and choirmaster of the church.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Edgbaston Church College Choral Society gave its first concert in the Winter Garden Hall of the Botanical Gardens, on April 24. The programme consisted of Harford Lloyd's cantata 'Hero and Leander,' part-songs (including Faning's 'Moonlight'), and instrumental pieces. There was a small orchestra of strings and flutes, and with an excellent pianist the accompaniment to the cantata was really effective. The soloists were Miss Edith Ryland and Mr. F. T. Clayton. Mr. Wymark Stratton conducted. The concert was in aid of the Children's Hospital and was well attended.

The same evening the St. James's Choral Society gave a performance of Cowen's 'Rose Maiden,' at the Public Buildings, Handsworth. The principal vocalists were Miss Aimée Wathen, Mrs. Northall, Mr. Fred. Thomas, and Mr. William Evans. Mr. Richard Richards conducted.

A pianoforte and vocal recital was given in the Masonic Hall, on April 25, by Miss Mary Cracroft and Miss Olive Rae. Both artists gave evidence of genuine talent and the audience was thoroughly appreciative.

The most important event of the past month was the first visit here of the Moody Manners Opera Company, which began on the 7th ult., at the Theatre Royal. The operas presented were 'Lohengrin,' 'Il Trovatore,' Wallace's 'Amber Witch' (first time here), Balfe's 'The Puritan's Daughter,' 'Faust,' 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Carmen.' The company was strong in principals, the chorus was numerous, and the band, under the baton of Mr. Richard Eckhold, more complete than is usually the case with travelling companies.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ST. JOHN'S Choral Society had its annual concert on April 24, in the Parish Room, under the direction of Mr. A. E. Hill. Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and a miscellaneous selection were given, Miss Edith Evans, Miss Ada Lowe, Mr. G. W. Brierley, and Mr. J. W. Bradner being the soloists. There was a small orchestra, with Mr. Harold Bernard as leader.

At the annual concert of St. Bartholomew's Choral Society, on April 24, J. L. Hatton's 'Robin Hood' was presented in the first part, the soloists being Miss Marion Harris, Mr. T. A. Glass, Mr. J. York, and Mr. J. W. Davey. Mr. Alfred Brookes conducted.

The Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society gave its Spring concert on April 28, at the Victoria Rooms. The choir and band numbered 400, Mr. Edward Pavey conducting with much ability. In the first part Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' was performed, with Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Miss Eveline Gerrish, and Miss Ada Bennett, soloists. Mr. Charles Fry was the reciter, and he delivered the spoken passages in an impressive manner. The work, which had not been adequately given in Bristol for many years, was excellently interpreted. In the second part of the concert Grieg's Concerto in A minor was played, with Mr. Cuthbert Whitemore, a clever young pianist, at the pianoforte. The recitation by Mr. Fry of Longfellow's 'King Robert of Sicily,' with the incidental music by John E. West for orchestra and male-voice choir, proved highly attractive.

On the 1st ult. a concert was given on behalf of Miss Marie Hall, at Clifton Spa. Miss Hall, who is only fourteen years of age, has displayed considerable proficiency as a violinist, and some local musicians, Mrs. J. L. Roeckel among others, have started a fund in order that she shall receive a musical education in London.

The annual concert at the Broad Plain House was given on the 8th ult. The sacred cantata, 'King Hezekiah,' by Mr. J. Allanson Benson, was creditably rendered, the principal vocalists being Miss Eveline Gerrish, Mrs. Sheppard, Mr. A. E. Turner, and Mr. W. Irving. Mr. A. N. Price was at the organ and Mr. J. E. Seaton at the pianoforte. Mr. W. Vaughan Jenkins conducted with discretion.

Mr. Riseley's Male-Voice Choir, on the 5th ult., had its final rehearsal for the season at the Museum Theatre. It was really a performance, as a large number of ladies and gentlemen who had received invitations were present. The choir was heard in Gernsheim's 'Salamis,' Schubert's 'The night is cloudless and serene,' Handel's 'The Lord is a Man of war,' some choruses from Mendelssohn's 'Antigone,' and the Soldiers' chorus from Gounod's 'Faust.' The manner in which the vocalists acquitted themselves is deserving of great praise, and Mr. Riseley conducted with his customary skill.

A highly interesting concert at the Victoria Rooms, on the 9th ult., was largely attended. St. Mary's Church Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. F. W. Rootham, gave admirable interpretations of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' The former cantata had not before been heard in Bristol, and it produced a very favourable impression, the piquancy and emotion of the music being apparent in the rendering, and the choir, by its grasp of the work, proved that it had carefully studied its characteristics. Mr. Henry Beaumont sang with effect 'Onaway! awake, beloved!' and was much applauded. In the 'Golden Legend' he sang the music of Prince Henry, Miss Alice Boaden that of Elsie, Mrs. Couper Cripps that of Ursula, and Mr. Charles Knowles that of Lucifer. This favourite work was capitally given and the audience recognised the efforts of choir and soloists by frequent applause. An orchestra, with Mr. F. S. Gardner as principal first violin, was made up of the best players in Bristol and Bath.

St. Anselm's Choral Society terminated its first season, on the 16th ult., with a concert at All Saints' Hall. The programme comprised Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' and a miscellaneous selection, creditably interpreted. The principal vocalists were Miss Maud Southey, Miss Sylvia Tippett, Mr. L. Venn, and Mr. A. Jupp. Mr. Ernest Lane was leader of the orchestra and Mr. Arthur W. Merrick, the conductor.

MUSIC IN CHELTENHAM.

FAREWELL TO THE OLD ASSEMBLY ROOMS.

MORE than usual interest attached to the concert of the Philharmonic Society, on the 16th ult., inasmuch as it was the last occasion on which a performance of this kind took place within the walls of what has for many years been known as the Assembly Rooms. A short time since Lloyd's Banking Company purchased the entire block of buildings, and henceforth the only music to be heard on the old site will be the chink of 'real golden minted quid' and the soft rustle of banknotes and cheques. On July 29, 1816, the Assembly Rooms were opened with a grand ball, and since that time its historic roof has sheltered much social enjoyment and indoor amusement. All the fashionable balls have been held there, and most of the famous musicians of the century have played, sung, or lectured within its walls.

To the new Philharmonic Society fell the honour of giving the last concert in the room which has been the home of so much musical activity, and it may unhesitatingly be said that the performance was one of the Society's highest achievements. The work selected for this farewell was Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' and, on the whole, it received an excellent interpretation. A high level of artistic excellence was reached in the chorus following the contralto solo, 'Sweet is our welcome of the brave ones,' in the chorus of Houris, 'Wreathe ye the steps,' in 'Oh, blessed tears of true repentance,' and in 'Joy, joy for ever.' The solos were in the capable hands of Miss Alice Esty, Miss Alice Larkin, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Mansell Lewis, all of whom acquitted themselves excellently.

The second part of the programme was devoted to Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony and Wagner's 'Meistersingers' Overture, and the band, under the skilful leadership of Mr. Lewis Hann, finely interpreted both works. Mr. C. J. Phillips is a born conductor; he knows his score thoroughly and never misses a point. The orchestra, however, too often gave evidence of the common fault of over-assertiveness in accompanying the vocal music. Conductors need to exercise great firmness in this matter and to insist that the accompaniments be subservient to the voices.

The Society has made a wise choice in appointing its new and courteous secretary, Mr. C. E. Rainger, whose arrangements were in every way admirable, and added not a little to the success of a memorable concert.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A MORE than usually interesting concert was given by the Orpheus Society at the end of April. Dr. Culwick may always be relied upon for a careful reading and performance of any music for which he is responsible, and we can say that Samuel Wesley's fine eight-part motet, 'In exitu Israel,' was never better performed in Dublin. Dr. Cooke's delightful glee, 'Hark! the lark,' was excellently sung, but in Wilbye's madrigal, 'Flora gave me fairest flowers,' a too solid and rigid performance marred the effect of a delicious piece of light and wanton expression. The choir is immensely improved. The basses are still somewhat weak, but the quality of the ladies' voices is admirable. This was very noticeable in the motet for female voices, 'The heavens declare the glory of God,' by Dr. Culwick, which, as a composition, is distinctly above the average of such works. Mrs. A. McC. Stewart (née Alex Elsner) was enthusiastically welcomed once more at a Dublin concert. Mr. Henry Verbrugghen, a clever artist, and Mr. Edwin Wolseley were the other soloists.

The last concert of the season given by the Dublin Orchestral Society took place on the 2nd ult., in the Theatre Royal, when Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8) was played for the first time in Dublin, when it received an excellent rendering. The Schumann Concerto, with Signor Esposito as the pianist, was repeated, and the solo artist secured a perfect ovation at its conclusion. Humperdinck's Vorspiel to 'Hänsel und Gretel' was played for the first time here by the Society, and also the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. The performance of the latter was quite a revelation to those who think a piece of Wagner's can only be interpreted by an imported band. Signor Esposito is to be congratulated on the signal artistic success of the second season of the Orchestral Society.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AFTER a lapse of more than a quarter of a century, Mr. J. A. Harcourt's operetta 'The Science of Love' was reproduced in Noverre's Room, Norwich, on the 9th ult., by a body of amateurs with great success. The libretto is written by Mr. Clifford Harrison and is laid out with great judgment. The operetta was originally brought out in 1874 in the same room, and the music is so genuinely good that one regrets that Mr. Harcourt has allowed the work to remain so long on the shelf. Originally the only support to the voices was given by pianoforte and harmonium, but the composer has now added obbligati parts for violin, flute, and violoncello. It is to be hoped he may soon fully orchestrate it and that thus it may be added to the répertoire of one of our opera companies with the success it deserves.

The season of the Norwich 'Gate House' Choir closed on the 11th ult., when the evenly balanced body of voices achieved a uniform success, the result of painstaking care on the part of the conductor, Mr. Kingston Rudd. Dr. Bunnett's recently published chorus, 'May, sweet May,' was included in the programme and sung under the baton of the composer. The instrumentalists were Mr. Herbert Walenn, who played several violoncello solos and, in conjunction with Mr. Rudd, Mendelssohn's Variations in D for pianoforte and violoncello.

On the 3rd ult. the Norwich Orchestral Union gave its fifteenth concert in Noverre's Room, conducted by Mr. Ernest Harcourt. The principal work for the band and chorus was Costa's serenata 'The Dream,' not previously heard in Norwich. The solos were taken by Mrs. Cubitt, Miss Dora Bryant, Mr. Bright Jones, and Mr. C. T. Kerrison. The chorus did their work creditably, but the efforts of the band were far from satisfactory. An interesting feature was Mozart's little known Concerto in C for flute and harp, capitally played by Mr. Fred. Burrow and Miss Molteno.

The Primrose League Choral Society (Alexandra Habitation), assisted by a small band, gave a performance of Charles Kingsley's 'Ode to the North-East Wind,' set to music by Alice Mary Smith, on April 27, in the Conservative Club Room, Norwich, under the conductorship of Mr. Roy Campbell. Pierson's 'Ye Mariners of England' and Smart's 'Hunting Song' were also sung by the choir.

A new musical society, connected with St. James's parish, Norwich, appeared before the public for the first time on April 26, conducted by Mr. Frank Hill, organist of the Parish Church. Several part-songs were given with sufficient spirit and taste to show that Mr. Hill's training had borne good fruit.

The annual competitions connected with the Association of North-West Norfolk Village Choirs took place in the Town Hall, Hunstanton, on April 21 and 23. The number of schools competing was not so large as could be wished, but the remarks of Mr. Somervell, the adjudicator, were distinctly encouraging as to the improvement shown by the scholars since the competition last year. On April 23 the adult choirs competed. Here again great improvement was observed, a noteworthy fact being the success of some of the smaller places over those with a larger number of inhabitants. The Rev. H. D. Barrett, to whose indefatigable industry the scheme owes so much of its success, expressed the hope that these musical efforts would become general throughout Norfolk, and that a grand county competition might ultimately be held annually in Norwich.

Mr. A. H. Cross conducted Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" at a concert given by the Hunstanton Choral Society, on the 9th ult. The accompaniments were played on two pianofortes by Miss Elsie Moore and Mr. B. Roden-Hilder. Mr. Henry Franckiss sang "Onaway! awake, beloved!" and altogether the performance was highly creditable to all. A new part-song from the pen of the conductor, "Music, thou Queen of Heaven," and a new patriotic song composed by the Rev. A. W. Batson and written by the Rev. H. D. Barrett, entitled "Mother Country," were also included in the second part of the programme.

The forty-first season of the Great Yarmouth Musical Society was brought to a close on April 26. Sterndale Bennett's cantata the 'May Queen' was the principal attraction, and the work received a very careful interpretation from soloists, band, and chorus. The principal soloists were Miss Florence Lancaster, Mrs. Haydon Hare, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Charles Tree. The instrumentalists in the Overture as well as in the Pageant music achieved a distinct success, and the accompaniments were played with great delicacy. Mr. Haydon Hare conducted with commendable zeal. In the second part of the concert a new part-song from that gentleman's pen was introduced, entitled 'Good-night,' and was warmly received.

The Kirkley Madrigal Society (Lowestoft) closed the season, on the 10th ult., with an entertainment of a varied character. The Society's contributions were Sullivan's 'Love and beauty,' Gibbons's 'The silver swan,' Pinsuti's 'The sea hath its pearls,' Pearson's 'Three doughtie men,' Leslie's 'Thine eyes so bright,' and Haydon Hare's 'Good-night,' the last-named being conducted by the composer. Mr. H. Gale Gardner sang several songs; Miss Jose Dubois played violin solos, and Mr. Roland Henry gave humorous recitations. Mr. A. C. Kemp was an efficient accompanist. Mr. P. Chignell conducted.

The Diss Choral Society closed its season, on the 3rd ult., with a performance of Smieton's cantata 'King Arthur,' in which Miss Alice Simons, Mr. Alfred Pinnington, and Mr. Henry Bailey sustained the principal parts.

The Loddon Choral Society made its first public venture in the Town Hall, on April 25, when Gaul's 'Holy City' was sung, conducted by Mr. F. Brown. The choir consists of about fifty voices fairly balanced, and the performance was very commendable for a first attempt. The accompaniments were supplied by a pianoforte and harmonium. This young Society is another proof of the growing taste for music in our smaller agricultural centres.

The ninety-ninth concert of the Norwich Philharmonic Society, which took place on the 17th ult., was more than usually successful. In addition to Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, the Overture to 'Der Freischütz,' and a selection from Tschaïkowsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite, the programme contained two novelties from the pen of Mr. Cuthbert Hawley, a gentleman connected with Norwich. The first was a very dramatic setting of Longfellow's poem 'King Witlaf's Drinking Horn,' written for baritone solo and orchestra, which proved to be a work displaying intimate knowledge of orchestral tone-colour. The solo was admirably declaimed by Mr. F. Hosking. The second, a Serenade in E flat, for wind instruments, oboe, clarinet, two bassoons, two horns, and three trombones, composed expressly for the Society, wherein Mr. Hawley has cleverly overcome the difficulties presented by the rather peculiar combination of instruments for which he had to write. In consequence of the death of Dr. Hill, who has given his valuable services to the Society for nineteen years the onerous post of conductor was temporarily undertaken by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre, who fulfilled the duties with great tact and judgment. Miss Mildred Rix and Mr. Hosking contributed the vocal part of the programme.

A presentation of an ivory silver-mounted baton was recently made to Mr. Richard Lowne, organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich, by the members of the choir as 'a mark of their regard and esteem and of their high appreciation of his services as organist and choirmaster.'

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

An event of more than passing interest and importance was the first production of an operetta specially written and composed for the Pen and Pencil Club's War Fund entertainment at the Lyceum Theatre, on the 11th and 12th ult. 'The Insect seller of Japan' does not claim the attention of The Musical Times on account of the brilliance of its performance, nor on account of the success of the entertainment, but by reason of the delightful music written by Mr. J. A. Moonie. The choruses in particular achieved great success by the sparkle and melody of the themes; but the incidental music and the Japanese dances were equally delightful, the orchestration throughout was thoroughly effective, and one scena for bass, of somewhat ambitious proportions, won great favour. The performers were all members of the Pen and Pencil Club and lady friends; but some professional brethren assisted both on the stage and in the orchestra in order to further the success of the piece. Mr. Moonie conducted, which in itself was guarantee of a spirited and careful performance. The other number on the programme was Sullivan's 'Trial by Jury,' which was also extremely well done under the conductorship of Mr. Francis Gibson. The theatre was crowded at both matinées, and a handsome sum was realised for the Daily Telegraph and Scotsman War Fund.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Although our proper musical season closed early in April, we have since had two or three concerts deserving notice. At the last of Mr. Carl Fuchs's Subscription chamber recitals, at the Schiller Hall, the programme was, at the last moment, somewhat disarranged; but, by the aid of Mr. Willibald Richter and Signor Risegari, with Mr. Louis Froelich as a vocalist, a very agreeable selection was presented. A special performance of 'Elijah' was given on the 5th ult., by the Hallé Choir and band, with able principals, under the direction of Mr. R. H. Wilson, upwards of £200 being raised for the Indian Famine Fund. At the College of Music the first open practice since the series of public examination concerts given before the Easter vacation attracted a large audience, and was extremely encouraging. We must look to the regular fortnightly performances of the students, and to Mr. Pyne's organ recitals on Saturday evenings at the Town Hall, to keep us musically alive during the summer months.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Corbridge Choral Society gave a performance of F. H. Cowen's cantata 'The Rose Maiden,' in the Town Hall, on April 24. The soloists were Miss Maggie Wilson, Madame Adelina Gott, Mr. J. W. Coward, and Mr. G. Scott. Mr. E. J. Pigg presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. R. Morrison conducted.

On April 25 the Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society closed its season with a concert, at which Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and MacCunn's choral ballad, 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' were performed in Tynemouth Palace. Miss Florrie Roscoe, Miss Janet Reed, and Mr. Bright Jones were responsible for the solos, Mr. J. H. Beers led the orchestra, and Mr. W. Bird conducted.

The Spennymoor Musical Society also closed a very successful season on the 10th ult., with performances of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Arthur Somervell's 'The Forsaken Merman,' in the Town Hall, under the direction of the Rev. Canon Firth. The soloists were Miss Janet Reed, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. William Lyall; and Mr. F. Lonsdale was principal first violin.

On April 27 Miss Hildegard Werner gave a concert in the New Assembly Rooms, Newcastle-on-Tyne, at which all the performers were her pupils. The principal feature of the programme was J. S. Bach's Concerto in D minor for three pianofortes and orchestra of strings, which was very creditably performed.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Spring concert of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society was given in the Albert Hall on the 1st ult. The committee submitted a 'triple bill,' Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Andromeda' and Mr. Hamish MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter' with a miscellaneous middle portion. There was the usual large audience, and the singing of the amateurs delighted friends and critics alike. The recent progress of the Society's chorus achievements was abundantly manifest, the choir, under the admirable direction of Mr. Schollhammer, singing with brilliant, pure tone, well controlled expression, and perfect unanimity. The solos in 'Andromeda' were undertaken by an excellent quartet of members of the Society, Mrs. H. Smith, Miss Ward, Mr. P. Watson, and Mr. J. B. Eaton. MacCunn's breezy choral ballad was robustly sung, the tenors and basses in particular covering themselves with credit. Mr. John Peck led the band, and Mr. J. W. Phillips was organist.

An excellent concert was given by the St. Peter's (Abbeydale) Choral Society, on April 30, when Oliver King's cantata 'The Romance of the Roses' was performed for the first time in Sheffield. Mr. W. Gadsby conducted an enthusiastic body of choristers, who sang the grateful melodious music of this charming work in exceptional style. The principals were Miss Alice Gadsby and Mr. Tom Child.

The Conisborough Choral Society gave its inaugural concert on the 3rd ult., the venture being largely and influentially supported. Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' was admirably performed under the direction of Mr. W. Reeve. A miscellaneous second part followed. Mr. F. W. Wells accompanied.

The Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society's concert, on the 8th ult., fittingly terminated a successful season, the twenty-eighth in the annals of the Society. Haydn's 'Queen' Symphony, Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture, Luigini's 'Egyptian' Suite, and a selection from Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet' were played by the band. Dr. Coward conducted, and the vocalists were Miss Ethel Bird and Mr. W. H. Burrows.

At Dore, on the 7th ult., the St. John's (Abbeydale) Choral Society gave an enjoyable concert in the Church Room. The chief feature of the programme was a setting, by Mr. G. A. Seed, the Society's conductor, of Schiller's poem 'The Diver.' The work is for soprano, tenor, and bass solos and chorus, with pianoforte accompaniment. The choral portions are well written, the composer obtaining several striking effects from the dramatic text. A long solo, descriptive of his experiences beneath the waves, is allotted to the Diver, and contains some fine writing. A charming trio for the three principals is also especially pleasing. Mr. W. Wingfield was the accompanist, and the composer conducted an adequate performance of his work.

The Eyam Choral Society performed Haydn's 'Creation,' on the 19th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. W. Froggatt. There was a large audience and the fine singing of the chorus was a feature of the concert. A small orchestra was excellently led by Mrs. Smedly, who also played violin solos with striking success. Mr. T. Mellor was the organist and Mr. E. A. Ireland accompanied. The principals were Mrs. Haynes, Mr. H. Bryars, and Mr. A. E. Innocent.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At the third concert of the Cardiff Musical Society, given on April 25, Cowen's 'Ode to the Passions' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' were performed with much success, the solo vocalists being Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, Madame Nellie Griffiths, and Mr. Wetten, of Bath. Mr. T. E. Aylward conducted, as usual.

On April 28 the 'Hymn of Praise' was satisfactorily performed by the Newtown (Mont.) Harmonic and Orchestral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. J. C. Gittins. The soloists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss E. J. Taylor, and Mr. Gwilym Richards.

For this summer's holiday course in music, at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, the following teachers have been appointed: Pianoforte and organ, Mr. Leah; violin, Mr. Ollerhead; voice, Mr. Wilfred Jones; art of class-teaching, Mr. W. T. Samuel; and harmony, counterpoint, composition, and orchestration, Mr. David Jenkins, lecturer in music at the College. Welsh musical students should largely avail themselves of the opportunities offered them through the medium of these annual holiday courses.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

With the gorgeous tone of the London Festival double orchestra still ringing in our ears, we wended our way, on the 3rd ult., to the Public Hall in Worcester City. Thither had foregathered a most goodly company of music-lovers to let sweet music creep in their ears, and to wax warmly appreciative over those much sung, much played, and oft-maltreated twin cantatas, 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha,' and their gifted composer, who was to conduct. It was the Worcester Festival Choral Society's second concert of the season, and its enthusiastic young conductor, Mr. Ivor Atkins, to whom a thing of such fresh beauty as Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music seems indeed a joy, had taken exceeding pains (so many-tongued rumour wagged) to secure performances worthy of the works. Let us hasten to assure our readers that the chorus, for the preparation of which Mr. Atkins was responsible, easily and magnificently beat the soloists and orchestra out of the field. We have heard many performances of the two cantatas, but can honestly affirm that the small, but most excellent Worcester Society was an easy first as regards those qualities which constitute good chorus singing—e.g., a good, round, 'musical' tone, crisp attack, and exact release, true intonation, clear enunciation, and an intelligent appreciation of the emotional side of the music in all its varying moods. These points are not brought out without much careful and systematic work by a thoroughly competent choir-trainer, and to Mr. Atkins are due the thanks of those who were at last enabled to hear two such beautiful works beautifully and expressively sung.

We entered the hall anathematising (molto dolce e piano) stern Duty that had called us away from the Lucullus feast provided at Queen's Hall, to chew the oft-turned cud of 'mere provincial performances'! But no sooner had the full-toned chorus started, 'You shall hear how Pau-Puk-Keewis,' &c., than we forgot Queen's Hall and its marvellous musickings, and were enjoying Mr. Taylor's work as if it had been absolutely new to us. For it is one of the wonders of this simple music that, given an adequate performance, it appears always fresh and delightful.

As we have said, the small chorus produced a beautiful tone; its quantity, however, was almost more astonishing than its quality, and it is evident that Mr. Atkins has in these barely 100 voices one of the best and most workmanlike choral bodies in the Kingdom. Would that the orchestra had been as efficient. But, truth to tell, it was not, the wood-wind and percussion especially leaving not a little to desire. Though drums and cymbals were represented, the frequent and often striking effects of cymbals struck with drumstick were omitted; the tambourine was conspicuous by its absence, though, surely, any amateur might have struck it; and the triangle had no more music in its soul than a tin spoon. This was a pity, for the (largely amateur) strings did well. The soloists were Miss Estella Linden, who gave a good reading of the soprano part, though unable to do herself justice in consequence of a bad cold; Mr. Henry Beaumont, whose fine tenor voice rang out well in 'Onaway! awake, beloved!'; and Mr. W. E. Davies, who should have made much more of the most touching baritone solos in 'The Death of Minnehaha.' The works and their composer were most enthusiastically received.

The concert also included Tschaïkowsky's posthumous duet, 'Romeo and Juliet,' and the Overture-Fantasia of the same title. These two works were on this occasion performed side by side for the first time in England, and probably anywhere. Their juxtaposition proved highly interesting, because the music of the duet elucidates the overture, the love music in the two works being virtually identical. The beautiful duet was sung by Miss Linden and Mr. Beaumont with the requisite amount of passion, and the difficult overture went well under the spirited direction of Mr. Atkins.

Two days afterwards, in the afternoon of the 5th ult., the Worcestershire Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Edward Elgar, gave its fifth concert in the same hall. It was a smart enough function in all conscience. A dream of fair women! Such gowns! such hats! But the music's the thing we have to discuss. Well then, to begin with, we had one of the most varied programmes imaginable. Starting with that gorgeous chorus, 'Wach' auf!' from Wagner's 'Meistersinger,' which, we understand, ushers in all the Society's concerts (and the title of which is, moreover, its rousing motto), we heard Wagner's 'Rienzi' Overture, Brahms's 'Schicksalslied,' Beethoven's Fourth Pianoforte Concerto (played with rare refinement and beautiful technique by that too rarely-heard Irish pianist, Miss Elizabeth Reynolds), Mr. Granville Bantock's orchestral scene 'The Funeral' (Section I. of his orchestral drama 'Kehama'), the Cavatina and chorus of Druids from Bellini's 'Norma,' Act I., Arcadelt's motet, 'Ave Maria,' four of Brahms's part-songs for ladies' voices (Op. 44), and the ballet ('Dance of the Hours') from Ponchielli's 'La Gioconda.' There is eclecticism for you, ye London compilers of hackneyed programmes! To say that all these things were perfectly rendered would be beside the mark. But the 'Rienzi' Overture, the orchestral portions of Brahms's cantata, the accompaniments to the concerto, and the ballet were played in a style little suggestive of the fact that the orchestra of fifty performers contained quite a large number of amateurs, chiefly, of course, amongst the strings. The most perfect playing was heard in the divinely beautiful orchestral introduction and epilogue in the 'Song of Destiny': than this nothing could have been better. Mr. Bantock's 'Scene' left us (and the public) utterly unimpressed. Much as we desire and strive to appreciate native music, we confess that this most productive of English composers has not yet succeeded in convincing our dull brain that his 'Kehama,' in nineteen (or is it twenty-nine?) movements—most monstrous of fearful wild-fowls amongst modern developments of the symphony—contains any beautiful music. Yet there must be something 'in it,' or why should a brilliant musician and trenchant critic like Mr. Elgar perform it? We cannot solve the riddle, but wait and hope that our eyes may be opened to perceive beauties to which we are still blind, alas! The choir sang with refinement and expression, though as regards tone it could not compare with that of the Festival Choral Society. The slow movement in Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and the same great master's unaccompanied part-songs (sung, and excellently sung, in the original German!), were their best efforts.

Mr. Henry Brown was the soloist in Bellini's 'Cavatina,' while Mr. Elgar conducted with the thorough savoir faire and sangfroid resulting from a most intimate acquaintance with the technique of the orchestra, long experience, and an inborn aptitude, allied to an artist's temperament and a genuine enthusiasm for the beautiful or worthy wherever found in our art. We shall hear more of Mr. Elgar as a conductor in the future, or we are much mistaken.

Yet another concert, though of a very different kind, was given at the same hall, on the 8th ult., when the 'Civil-

Military Band,' conducted by Mr. Frank Elgar (brother of the composer), performed a highly interesting programme of pieces to a crowded and most appreciative audience.

Altogether, music seems in a most flourishing condition in the old Cathedral town. There seems plenty of room for the various societies. May they grow and prosper side by side in wholesome and stimulating rivalry, and may their watchword ever be: 'Res severa verum gaudium!'

MISCELLANEOUS.

Royal Academy of Music.—The Sainton Scholarship has been awarded to Marjorie Olive Hayward (a native of London). The examiners were Messrs. W. Frye Parker, Hans Wessely, and Emile Sauret. The Parepa-Rosa Scholarship has been awarded to Mildred Frances Jones (of Stourbridge). The examiners were Messrs. Richard Cummings, Fred. Walker, and Alberto Randegger. The Sterndale Bennett Scholarship has been awarded to Henry Oscar Franklin (of London). The examiners were Messrs. Oscar Beringer, Alfred Burnett, F. Corder, Tobias Matthay, and Walter Macfarren.

The first performance of Mr J. More Smieton's cantata 'Connla' did not take place at Dundee, as was stated in the programme-book and thus repeated in our columns last month. The work was produced, but with a small orchestra, by the Selhurst Musical Society, on December 14, 1897, under the direction of Mr. W. E. Partridge, when Miss Marjorie Eaton sang the soprano rôle of Nea with much acceptance.

The Old Tenisonians Choral Society gave an excellent rendering of Macfarren's 'May Day,' at St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 22nd ult., Miss Elsie Kingsley being the soloist. Various part-songs were also performed with much taste. Among the artists assisting were Miss Sissie Kingsley, Miss Gertrude Goulding, Miss Annie G. Bennett, and Mr. Dyved Lewys. Mr. David J. Thomas conducted.

The election for the Goss Scholarship will take place at the Royal College of Organists, on the 30th inst. The Scholarship, which is tenable for three years from next Michaelmas at the Royal Academy of Music, affords exceptional advantages, and those who are desirous of becoming candidates should apply to the Hon. Sec., Royal College of Organists, Hart Street, Bloomsbury.

One of the evenings at the Musical Competition at Morecambe (reported on p. 401) was devoted to a lecture by Dr. McNaught, the subject being 'Musical Competitions,' one in which the popular adjudicator is facile princeps. A full account of this lecture, which was given in the Albert Hall, Morecambe, on the 10th ult., will be found in the current issue of the School Music Review.

At the annual distribution of prizes to the pupils of the Blind School, as it is familiarly known, in Upper Avenue Road, St. John's Wood, on the 5th ult., an interesting selection of music was admirably given by these sightless performers, under the direction of Mr. Edwin Barnes, Professor of Music at the school.

At the recent Feis Ceoil held in Belfast, the winner of the gold medal in the Senior Organ Playing Competition was Mr. A. Cecil S. Thompson, pupil of Mr. C. J. Brennan, organist and director of the choir, Parish Church, Strabane, Co. Tyrone. A pupil of Mr. Brennan's also won this distinction at the Feis Ceoil last year.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to accept the dedication of a "Requiem Mass" for chorus, soli, and orchestra, composed by Mr. Luard Selby, in memory of the British officers and men who have fallen in the Transvaal War.

Miss Mildred Jones, of Pedmore, near Stourbridge, who has recently won that much coveted prize at the Royal Academy of Music, the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship, was a pupil, at Birmingham, of Mr. Robert George.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to accept copies of two sacred songs by Miss Kate Emil Behnke, entitled "Light" and "The Lord reigneth."

Mr. Allen Gill has been appointed Conductor of the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Barmen.—Professor Anton Krause, the well-known musical author, composer, and conductor, has retired from the various official positions held by him for the last forty years in this city, and will take up his residence in Leipzig.

Berlin.—Auber's 'Le Cheval de Bronze,' in part revised by Herr Humperdinck, was the gala performance at the Royal Opera in connection with the recent visit of the Emperor of Austria. The work had been most sumptuously mounted, the utmost care having been bestowed upon accuracy of detail in regard to both scenery and dresses.——Under the name of Berliner Tonkünstler-Orchester, a new orchestral body has just been formed, under the direction of Herr Carl Gleitz, a composer of some note. Thus there will be three symphony orchestras competing for public favour next season.

Bologna.—The concert recently given by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under Dr. Richter's direction, was made the occasion of most enthusiastic demonstrations on the part of the crowded audience, which included musicians from all parts of Italy—Mascagni, Sgambati, and others; Frau Cosima Wagner being also present. At the conclusion of the performance the popular conductor was presented with two laurel wreaths adorned with the Italian and German colours.

Brussels. — The season of the Ysaye Symphony concerts came to a brilliant close on the 6th ult., with a programme devoted to the compositions of M. Camille Saint-Saëns, who took part in the performances, partly in his capacity of conductor and partly in that of pianist, and in both of which he was greeted with enthusiasm by a numerous audience.——The excellent young pianist, Mr. Harold Bauer, gave a most successful recital last month, confining himself entirely, in his interpretations, to the classical composers.——Mendelssohn's not very frequently performed Trio for clarinet, bassett-horn, and pianoforte was an attractive feature in the performance, on the 6th ult., of the Société de Musique de Chambre.

Budapest.—Under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter, the first performance in Hungary was given recently of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, by the united choirs of the Philharmonic Society and the Verein der Musikfreunde, and with very able interpreters of the solo parts. The noble work was greatly appreciated by a numerous audience.

Dresden.—August Bungert has completed another music-drama (appertaining to the series entitled 'Homeric World')—viz., 'Nausikaa,' which, like the poet-composer's preceding works, 'The Return of Ulysses' and 'Circe,' will be produced at the Court Theatre.——The 100th performance of 'Lohengrin' was recorded, last month, at the Royal Theatre, the first performance here having taken place in August, 1859. It is interesting to note, however, that the final scene of the first act had been performed here, under the title of 'Ein Gottesgericht,' and under Wagner's own direction, as early as September 22, 1848, the performance being for the benefit of the orchestra fund.

Elberfeld.—An interesting revival took place last month, at the Stadt-Theater, of Méhul's opera 'Uthal,' the libretto of which is founded upon an episode in the 'Songs of Ossian.' This work is rendered specially remarkable by the fact that there are no violins in the score; violas, violoncellos, and contrabasses only being used to illustrate the sombre character of the subject.

Florence.—Signor Puccini has nearly completed the score of a new four-act opera, for which his old collaborator, Luigi Illica, has furnished the libretto. It is entitled 'Marie Antoinette,' and introduces, in addition to the unhappy Queen, King Louis XVI. and the Dauphin, some fifteen more or less (vocally) important characters.

Hamburg.—Count Geza Zichy's new opera, 'Meister Roland,' was produced at the Stadt-Theater, for the first time in Germany, on April 26, and very favourably received.

Helsingfors.—Under the zealous conductorship of Herr Koynanus, no less than four performances of Berlioz's 'Faust' were given recently within one week, the hall being well filled on each occasion.

LUCERNE.—Herr Fassbaender, a well-known local musician, has been awarded the first prize for his composition of a choral song, "Das deutsche Lied," which is to be sung by the different choirs competing for the 'Emperor's prize' at the great German choir festival, to be held in Brooklyn next month, and in which some 8,000 singers are expected to take part.

MILAN.—The new Perosi Hall, in the church of Santa Maria della Pace, was opened, on April 25, with the first performance of the prolific young composer's new oratorio 'Christ's entry into Jerusalem.' The work is divided into two parts, the first relating to the Saviour's entry into the holy city and the second to His betrayal by Judas. There were the usual enthusiastic demonstrations at the conclusion of the performance.——An excellent performance of Brahms's 'Triumphlied' (the first given in Milan) took place last month, by a choir of some 150 voices, under the direction of a distinguished amateur musician. The concert also included choral numbers from Schumann's 'Manfred' music, as well as compositions by old Italian masters.

MONTREUX (Switzerland).—During the winter season, 1899-1900, the Montreux Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. John Lomas, has performed the following works: 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Elijah' (selection from), 'The Ancient Mariner' (Barnett), 'God, Thou art great' (Spohr), and a new setting of Psalm xxiii. by the Rev. George Wheeler.

MUNICH.—An enthusiastic reception was accorded to Liszt's oratorio 'Christus,' produced, on the 7th ult., by the Chorverein, under the conductorship of Herr Heinrich Porges, a well-known champion of the late pianist-composer's works.

PARIS.—A one-act 'legende lyrique,' entitled 'Le Follet,' the libretto by Pierre Barbier, the music by M. Letèvre, was brought out, on the 1st ult., at the Opéra Comique, and received with some favour.——The interesting performances of oratorio given during the last few months by the choir under the direction of M. d'Harcourt, at the spacious church of Saint Eustache, came to a close last month with a very efficient production of the 'St. Matthew' Passion by Bach, a work hitherto scarcely known to French amateurs. Nearly the same may be said of Handel's 'The Messiah,' with which the series commenced, and it is pleasing to note that M. d'Harcourt's endeavours to popularise these and other masterpieces of oratorio in the music-loving French capital have been meeting, so far, with a fair share of encouragement.

STRASSBURG.—An oratorio, 'Der Münsterbau' ('The Building of the Minster'), for chorus, soli, orchestra, and organ, a posthumous work of Victor Elbel, was produced, last month, by the Société de Chant Sacré, and considered a very effective and musicianlike production.

TRIESTE.—Pergolesi's charming opera buffa, 'La serva padrone,' was revived on the 2nd ult., at the Politeama Theatre, with great success. Much care had been bestowed by the Maëstro Bartoli upon the work, which was given in its original form—that is to say, with an orchestra of stringed instruments only, while the recitatives were accompanied on a clavicembalo. The performance elicited the greatest interest on the part of the numerous musicians and amateurs present.

TURIN.—Under the direction of Signor Marcello Capra, a school for Church music, after the model of the famous Institution at Ratisbone, and with an efficient staff of professors, has been founded in this city, and will shortly open its course of instruction.

VIENNA.—The fiftieth performance was recorded, on the 2nd ult., at the Imperial Opera, of Kienzl's 'Der Evangelimann,' the composer himself conducting on this special occasion.——A very successful concert was given last month by the excellent organist, Herr Richard Urban, in which the Toccata and Fugue in D minor and the 'Air' by Bach, as well as an Andante religioso for organ and violoncello by Goltermann, and one of Mendelssohn's sonatas were the most admired numbers.——Among the manuscripts left by the late Johann Strauss have been found eight complete sets of valses, fully orchestrated, as well as a number of vocal valses, four-part songs and Lieder, likewise in a finished state. Strauss's widow intends shortly to publish these posthumous compositions and to devote the proceeds to the benefit of necessitous musicians. The manuscripts will eventually be presented to the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde.

WEIMAR.—Amongst the honours conferred upon Dr. Lassen, on the occasion of the seventieth anniversary of his birth, has been the naming of a street, in this classical little capital, after the distinguished composer and Capellmeister.

OBITUARY.

THE death took place on the 13th ult., at Munich, of HERMANN LEVI, the eminent Wagnerian conductor, in his sixty-first year. Born in 1839, at Giessen, he studied under Vincenz Lachner at Mannheim, as well as at the Leipzig Conservatorium. At the age of twenty he obtained his first orchestral conductorship, at Saarbrücken. In 1864 he was appointed principal conductor at the Carlsruhe Opera, which post he exchanged, in 1872, for a similar one at the Munich Royal Theatre. In his artistic activity at the latter Institution Levi soon became more especially associated with the Wagnerian music-drama. He gained the friendship and the entire confidence of Wagner himself, by whom he was chosen to conduct the first performance, in 1882, of 'Parsifal' at Bayreuth, and he also directed subsequent productions of that work up to 1894. His visit to England, in 1895, in order to conduct one of the Wagner concerts at Queen's Hall, will not easily be forgotten by those present on that occasion. Indeed, as an interpreter of Wagner's works, Levi had no rival (unless it be Dr. Richter); his firm grasp of the intricacies of the later scores of the Bayreuth master, and his power to reveal their innermost artistic significance were truly marvellous.

With HEINRICH VOGL, whose death (on April 21, at Munich) we briefly recorded in our last issue, one of the most gifted and versatile German vocal artists has passed away. For it was not only as an operatic singer and interpreter, more especially of Wagnerian parts, that Vogl excelled; but he was equally successful in oratorio (notably in the part of the Evangelist in Bach's 'Passion' Music) and as an interpreter of songs. He was a native of Bavaria, and had been associated with the Munich Royal Opera, in the capacity of leading tenor, since 1865. Among his most brilliant achievements in the Wagner repertory were his interpretations of Tristan, in 'Tristan und Isolde,' and of Siegmund, Siegfried, and Loge, in the 'Nibelungen' tetralogy. An opera from his pen, entitled 'Der Fremdling,' was brought out, with considerable success, at the Munich Theatre last year. He was in his fifty-sixth year.

We regret to record the death of ALEXANDER SAMUEL COOPER, which took place at the Charterhouse, on the 19th ult., at the age of sixty-five. Mr. Cooper was formerly a well-known organist in London. A Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, he was also a composer of popular Church music. He edited the 'Parochial Psalter' and was held in high personal esteem by his intimate friends.

At Sandy, Bedfordshire, on the 18th ult., suddenly, R. HEATH-MILLS, musical director of the West London Mission.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HAYDN'S LESSER-KNOWN SYMPHONIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Your interesting remarks upon Haydn's Symphony in D, resuscitated at the Philharmonic Society's concert given on April 5, reminds me of another symphony of the genial old Papa which, if revived, would, I feel sure, give 'much pleasure to those who can appreciate spontaneous melody, and natural simplicity.' I refer to the 'Favourite Overture in D,' performed at the Bach and Abel concerts.

The Andante, an air with variations in A, is well-known, the organ arrangement being frequently played at recitals. Moreover, the air formerly had a place in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' where it was set to 'Onward, Christian Soldiers.' But the remaining movements are practically unknown, and I doubt if the parts can be obtained in London. At least I could not obtain them a few years ago, when I sent the subject of the Allegro as a clue. At a performance of the symphony given in Coventry last winter, the Minuet was voted 'the prettiest of all Haydn's minuets!'

As the Bach and Abel concerts terminated with the death of Bach in 1782, the work, like the one to which you refer, belongs to the Esterhazy period. If you could tell me, by reference to Herr C. F. Pohl, the year of its composition, you would confer an obligation, Sir, upon

Your obedient Servant,
F. W. Humberstone.

Coventry, May 3, 1900.

[Pohl gives the year 1774 as the date of the composition of this symphony. It is, therefore, a product of Haydn's Esterhazy period. The theme of the slow movement (the air with variations in A) is probably derived from a folk-song. The orchestral parts of the complete work can certainly be procured in London.—Ed., M.T.]

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL RECITALS OF SACRED MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—I read with much interest the account of the recitals in Gloucester Cathedral in this month's Musical Times, but I notice one omission, which, with your leave, I can supply, and I am sure my friend, Mr. Brewer, will approve of my doing so. No notice of this astonishingly successful movement in Gloucester would be complete without mention of the fact that it was entirely owing to Dr. Butler (then Dean of Gloucester, now Master of Trinity) that the recitals were commenced on their present lines. After the Music Meeting of 1886, Dr. Butler expressed a strong wish that the nave of the Cathedral should be utilised during the winter months for some such purpose, and it was owing to his energetic support and approval, coupled with the fact that the late Mr. W. P. Price generously offered to finance the movement, that these recitals have become a permanent and, I think, a valued institution in Gloucester.—I am, yours faithfully,

C. Lee Williams.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Basingstoke.—The Choral Society performed 'Judas Maccabæus' at its second concert of the season on April 26. Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Mabel Lidbetter, Mr. James Leyland, and Mr. Frederic Ranalow were very successful in their respective solos, and the choir is to be congratulated on its share of the work. Mr. Charles Griffiths acted as leader of the orchestra, Mr. Welton Hickin played the harmonium, and Mr. H. E. Powell was the conductor.——The newly organised 'Free Church Choral Union' gave its first concert at the Congregational Church, on the 3rd ult., when Mr. T. Facer's cantata 'The Pilgrim Fathers' was produced. The choir was well balanced and sang with excellent effect; the solos and duets, &c., were taken by local amateurs: Mrs. Gammon, Mrs. Gage, Miss Gerrish, Messrs. Knight, Jenkins, Noakes, and Ricketts. Miss Gerrish and Miss Aylward presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Wilfrid Edney at the organ. Mr. A. A. Aylward, the organist of the church, conducted.

Bath.—The annual concert of the Christ Church choir was given in the Christ Church Hall, on the 14th ult., with marked success. The vocalists were Miss Florence Pinch (who sang Eaton Faning's 'Obedient to the call') and Mr. Eustace Wyatt. The choir contributed Pierson's 'Hurrah for merry England,' Martin's 'England, dear England,' and Faning's 'Miller's Wooing,' with commendable efficiency. In the last-named the accompaniment was excellently played by Miss Florence Moody, a pupil of Mr. H. J. Davis, the organist of the church, who, in addition to conducting the concert with painstaking care, contributed a brilliant pianoforte solo.

Cheltenham.—The Cheltenham Ladies' Choir gave a concert at the Rotunda on the 12th ult. Part-music by Brahms, Liszt, Coleridge-Taylor, Wagner, and Denza was rendered in a manner which reflected great credit on the conductor, Herr Lortzing.

Chepstow.—The Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. E. G. R. Richards, gave an excellent rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' in the Parish Church, on the 2nd ult.

Chichester.—The Musical Society gave a good performance of Gade's 'Crusaders,' on April 24, with Miss Gertrude Woodall, Mr. Clifford Hunnybun, and Mr. George Fielder as soloists. A small orchestra assisted, and Dr. F. J. Read conducted. The second part of the concert included two effective part-songs sung by the choir, 'Now is my Chloris,' by Battison Haynes, and 'You stole my love,' by Macfarren.

Cork.—On the 10th ult. the St. Luke's Choral Society, assisted by the Church Choir, sang Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' in St. Luke's Church. The choir numbered ninety voices. The solo parts were very effectively sung by Miss Edith Marks, Miss Emily Moore, and Mr. L. J. Garrett. The singing of the choir was noticeable for good attack and fulness of tone. Mr. J. Christopher Marks ably presided at the organ, and may be congratulated on the all round excellence of the performance.

Corsham.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' on the 2nd ult. The choruses were admirably interpreted, and the solos were efficiently sung by Miss Clara Spackman, Miss E. Sloan, Mr. E. T. Morgan, and Mr. C. E. Poole. The band was led by Mrs. D. Collen, and Mr. Lewin Spackman, organist of the Parish Church, conducted.

Darlaston.—On April 26 a successful performance was given, by the Choral Society, of Dr. Swinnerton Heap's cantata 'The Maid of Astolat' (composed for the Wolverhampton Festival of 1886). The solos were well sung by Miss E. Dudley, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. W. Molineaux, and Mr. F. Nicholson. There was a band and choir of 150 performers, and Mr. T. Johnson conducted.

Dawley.—The Philharmonic Society gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, on the 15th ult., when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Knott, Miss Hammond Ball, and Mr. Kemp, the accompaniments being played by Mr. A. Maiden (pianoforte) and Mr. J. Ellis (organ). The chorus did good work and the performance generally was excellent. Mr. J. Smart conducted.

Dover.—Gounod's 'Redemption' was given for the first time in this town on the 2nd ult., by the Choral Union. There was a choir and full orchestra (consisting largely of members of the Royal Engineers band), numbering altogether 150 performers. The solos were excellently sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. James Gawthrop, Mr. Henry Sunman, and Mr. E. W. Barclay, and the work was altogether rendered with much credit under the able direction of Mr. H. J. Taylor.

Driffield.—The Choral Society gave a concert on April 24, when Sir F. Bridge's 'Flag of England' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' were performed. The choruses were sung with much spirit, and there was an efficient orchestra, led by Mr. John Lawson. Miss Grime sang the solo in the 'Flag of England,' and the tenor solo in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata was sung by Mr. C. W. Fredericks. Miss M. E. Jefferson assisted at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. G. Peake conducted with ability.

Epsom.—The programme of the Epsom Choral and Orchestral Society, on the 10th ult., included 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' (Coleridge-Taylor); the Overtures, 'Hebrides' (Mendelssohn), 'Die Meistersinger' (Wagner), 'Zampa' (Herold); and the 'Henry VIII.' Dances (German). In the cantata, Mr. Vivian Bennetts gave a very fine and sympathetic rendering of the solo 'Onaway! awake, beloved!' The choral singing was throughout excellent, and the band played with great care and crispness, the performance being ably conducted by Mr. Rowland Bryant.

Gainsborough.—The Choral Society gave a successful concert on the 2nd ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Edgar C. Robinson. The first part consisted of Macfarren's 'May Day,' which was sung with vigour, expression, and attack, the solo vocalist being Madame Norledge. The concert concluded with Alice Mary Smith's 'Ode to the North-East Wind,' of which the chorus gave a very good rendering.

Gloucester.—The final concert of the season given by the Choral Society, on the 8th ult., was, as usual, of a highly attractive character, including, as it again did, the valuable services of Madame Ella Russell. The other vocalists were Miss Teify Davies, Miss Katie Smith, and Mr. Hirwen Jones, with Mr. Tivadar Nachez and Mr. J. M. Coward as instrumentalists, and Mr. Patrick Munro, an admirable reciter. The choir sang with excellent effect the part-songs 'Pack, clouds, away' (C. H. Lloyd), 'Parting gleams' (Sullivan), and 'It was a lover and his lass,' by their able conductor, Mr. A. H. Brewer. In the interval Madame Ella Russell was presented with a handsome silver bowl, subscribed for by the members of the chorus in recognition of that artist's generous aid to the Society on several occasions, the presentation being made in felicitous terms by the president, Mr. Joseph Bennett.——The 'Ladies' Night' of the Orpheus Society took place on the 17th ult., when a varied and interesting programme was presented, including 'The Toast,' 'A Ballad when at sea,' and 'There is a garden,' all by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer; 'Lost Time,' by Mr. C. Lee Williams; 'A wet sheet and a flowing sea,' by Dr. C. Harford Lloyd; 'The long day closes,' Sullivan; and other part-songs. It will be noted that, with the exception of the last-named, the composers are the present and past organists of Gloucester Cathedral. The solo vocalists were the Misses Hilda and Muriel Foster. The choir displayed good phrasing, clear enunciation, and excellent attack, and the conductor, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, is to be congratulated on the establishment of so excellent a choral body in the city.

Greenock.—The choristers of Ladyburn Parish Church presented Mr. Adam Henderson (late organist and choirmaster of the church), on the 12th ult., with a beautifully carved oak barometer and thermometer, on the occasion of his appointment to Whiteinch Parish Church, Glasgow.

Hatfield Broadoak.—A most interesting lecture on 'Haydn: his life and his works' was given by the Rev. F. W. Galpin, on the 9th ult. Selections from the master's works were given by the Hatfield Orchestral Society, and included the First Quartet and the 'Farewell' Symphony.

Hythe.—A successful performance of the 'Ancient Mariner' was given at the Institute, conducted by Mr. Arthur Simms, on the 17th ult.

Lancaster.—A successful concert was given by the Choral Society, on April 25, in the Palatine Hall. The programme included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' together with Weber's 'Oberon,' Wagner's Introduction to the third act of 'Lohengrin,' and Schubert's beautiful 'Unfinished' Symphony. The choral work throughout was of a very high standard, and excellent work was done by the orchestra, the performance of Schubert's 'Unfinished' especially being most delicate and sympathetic. Mr. W. R. Maxwell sang the tenor solo 'Onaway! awake, beloved!' and was joined by Madame Sadler Fogg in 'The Hymn of Praise.' Mr. J. W. Aldous, the conductor, is to be congratulated upon the high pitch of excellence attained by the chorus and orchestra.

Lincoln.—Owing to various causes, the May concert of the Musical Society was this year abandoned, and in its place a performance was given in the Cathedral of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' on the 4th ult. The constant and arduous practices that have of late been carried on by Dr. G. J. Bennett resulted in a splendid performance of the oratorio, the vigorous and dramatic choruses being given with a power and intensity that left little to be desired. The solos were entrusted to members of the Cathedral choir, Messrs. J. Orange, E. Dunkerton, B. Sedgwick, C. Woodward, and S. Atherton, and two of the choristers, Masters Gooder and Webb, and, considering the size of the building, were sung with excellent effect. Dr. Bennett conducted with his customary care and skill. The band, which also gave a fine performance of Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, was admirably led by Mr. Edward O'Brien, and Mr. H. S. Trevitt rendered efficient service at the organ.

Margate.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert, on the 17th ult., under the direction of Dr. E. J. Bellerby, when the programme included the Overture 'Tancredi' (Rossini), two of Coleridge-Taylor's Characteristic Waltzes, Elgar's 'Salut d'Amour,' and Moszkowski's Spanish Dances, all of which received a spirited rendering by the orchestra. The vocalists were Miss Nellie Sargent and Mr. F. Q. Woods, and Mr. A. P. Howells contributed violin solos.

Morriston.—A successful performance of Handel's 'Jephtha' was given by the Tabernacle Chapel choir, on the 10th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. W. Penfro Rowlands. The orchestra was led by Mr. W. F. Hulley, Swansea. The principal vocalists were Madame Ruth Lamb, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Trevor Evans, and Mr. David Hughes. The choral work was uniformly good, 'When His loud voice' and 'How dark, O Lord,' being particularly effective. Mrs. T. J. Davies and Mr. T. D. Jones presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

Penzance.—The Choral Society gave a concert-recital of Gounod's 'Faust,' on the 3rd ult. The choir sang with remarkable vigour and precision, and the orchestra (led by Miss Ash) was efficient. The solo parts were sung by Miss Violet Nunn (Marguerite), Miss Eldred Poole (Siebel), Miss Tresize (Martha), Messrs. J. C. Truscott (Faust), R. V. Hooper (Mephistopheles), M. Beardsworth (Valentine), and W. J. Tolley (Wagner). The whole performance reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. J. H. Nunn.

Reading.—The Lorne Philharmonic Society gave a concert in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult., the programme consisting of Cowen's 'Ode to the Passions,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' with a miscellaneous selection to complete the programme. The Society is to be congratulated on introducing two new works of so much beauty, and they were well received by an appreciative audience. The soloists were Miss Esmé Atherden and Mr. Gwyllm Evans. Mr. Strickland conducted, as usual.

Retford.—Mr. Hamilton White's Choral and Orchestral Class gave their second concert of the season in the Town Hall, on the 10th ult., with a highly interesting programme, which included Sullivan's cantata 'On Shore and Sea' and Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony as its chief features; the orchestra especially distinguished itself in the final movement of the latter work. The choir was also fully efficient in the cantata and in the rendering of Benedict's 'Hunting Song,' Pinsuti's 'The sea hath its pearls,' and other part-songs, which were sung with delicacy and good expression. The solo vocalists were Madame Lizzie Moulds, Miss A. F. Marks, Mr. T. E. Mackie, and Mr. Aldam Marshall. The general excellence of the performance was a tribute to Mr. White's ability and care in training his forces; and, indeed, the locality owes much to Mr. White's enterprise in the cause of music.

Rochester.—The Rochester, Strood, and Chatham Choral Society closed its twenty-seventh season with a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The chorus sang with much spirit, and the orchestra, composed of the band of the Royal Engineers, had been specially prepared by Lieut. J. Sommer. The principals were Miss Alice Esty, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Ivor Foster. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, one of the most enjoyable selections being Lacome's orchestral suite 'Mascarade.' Elgar's Bavarian Dances for chorus and orchestra were also much appreciated.

SEDBERGH.—The musical Society gave its thirteenth concert on the 10th ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's popular cantata 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was creditably performed, the sopranos especially singing with much spirit. The accompaniments were played by an orchestra, assisted by Mr. B. H. Tower and Mr. F. S. J. Pile on the organ and pianoforte; but it must be said that the music suffered from the lack of a complete orchestra. Mr. H. Brearley sang the solo admirably. The second part included German's Dances ('Henry VIII.'), and the choir sang Miss Wakefield's patriotic song, 'When the boys come home' (in unison), accompanied by the orchestra.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The St. Mark's Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' on the 4th ult., in St. Mary's Church. The choruses were given with vigour and good attack, and the solos were ably sung by Madame Eva Scorey and Mr. M. G. Conlan, the former being joined in the duet by Miss Mabel Lidbetter. The orchestra was led by Mr. E. Jones, and Mr. George E. Leake, who conducted with ability, was presented by the members of the chorus and orchestra with the robes of a Bachelor of Music, in recognition of the degree which he has recently obtained.

TETBURY.—A successful performance of the dramatic cantata 'The Holy Grail,' by H. E. Nichol, was given by the Philharmonic Society, on April 24, in the Assembly Room. The choir, which was well balanced, sang with refinement and promptness of attack. Especially did they distinguish themselves in the beautiful unaccompanied chorus 'O blessed are the pure in heart.' The solos were in the capable hands of Miss Percival Allen, Miss Marion Blinkhorn, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. R. Courtier Dutton. Mr. F. N. Baxter was the conductor.

WOODSTOCK.—The Choral Society gave its second annual concert on the 1st ult., when Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed, the solos being taken by Mrs. Buttifant, Mrs. Turner, Rev. W. K. W. Smith, and Mr. Higgs. The band was led by Dr. Elsmore, with Mrs. Banbury at the pianoforte, and Mr. Eugène Bayliss conducted.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

R. G.—(1) You probably mean the added sixth, a well known chord to which Rameau was the first to give it that name. It is the third inversion of the dominant eleventh . (2) The false fifth is a fifth when not perfect. (3) 'Equivocal or doubtful chords is a name given to combinations of sounds which are common to two or more distinct keys, and which, when heard, make the listener doubtful as to the particular key-tonality into which they are about to be resolved. The simplest form of chords of this class is to be found in the so-called diminished triad,' e.g.,  (Stainer and Barrett's 'A Dictionary of Musical Terms').

H. A. C.—The open Scholarships competed for annually at the Royal College of Music are such as would meet your case. Apply to the Registrar, Royal College of Music, South Kensington, for particulars. In regard to tuition, would it not be better for you, considering your circumstances, to take an occasional lesson from a really good teacher in one of the towns you name, and work hard during the intervals? You should go on with your theoretical studies, in which you could get some lessons by correspondence. Be cautious of Conservatoires, so called, which are often mere lesson-giving shops.

A. B.—The three Intermezzi of Brahms (Op. 117) may be played at: No. 1, quaver = 132; No. 2, quaver = 120; No. 3, crotchet = 120.

G. E. A.—(1) The mere designation, or name of an ornament, is comparatively unimportant, except in an examination paper, where the candidate, if he is wise, will quote authorities, such as you have given. It matters little whether thesign (and it is only a sign) should be called an 'acciaccatura' or a short 'appoggiatura,' but the manner of its performance is an essential. (2) The Pralltriller, or inverted mordent ( ) should be played with the beat. (3) The book you mention is of no particular value.

A NEW AND REVISED EDITION
(468 pp.)
OF
STAINER & BARRETT'S DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS
REVISED AND EDITED BY
SIR J. STAINER,
M.A., Mus.D., Oxford; Hon. D.C.L. and Mus. Doc., Durham.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

CONNLA

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

JAMES SMIETON, M.A.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR

THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, & ORCHESTRA

BY

JOHN MORE SMIETON.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d.

Full Score and Band Parts on hire.

(The work takes about eighty minutes to perform, and is adapted for Festival and the larger Choral Societies.)

"Space prevents us from noticing in detail this interesting work. The music, in which Scandinavian influence is perceptible, is fresh and imaginative. There is a great variety of rhythm; and the epithet 'dramatic' in the title is quite appropriate."—Musical Times.

"A new work of real power and grit is John More Smieton's Cantata 'Connla.' . . . The music flows natural and transparent, as do the words; and, taken altogether, the work is admirable in the arrangement of its matter and the clearness of its treatment. Conductors and choirmasters should not fail to procure copies of this new and distinctly notable production."—Musical Opinion.

"Last night, in the Kinnaird Hall, the first performances in Dundee were given of 'Connla,' a dramatic Cantata by John More Smieton, and 'Missa Solennis,' by David Stephen. As both musicians are well known in local musical circles a large audience turned out, and the works, which were conducted by their respective Composers, were received with great enthusiasm. The Scottish Orchestra played the accompaniments, and the soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Bessie Borthwick, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. Smieton . . . has risen to the occasion, and in 'Connla' we have eminently singable choruses, first-rate solo work, and clever and picturesque orchestration."—Glasgow Herald, Feb. 8, 1900.

"The dramatic cantata, 'Connla,' occupied the second half of the programme, and was also listened to with much interest. Mr. Smieton, indeed, all through shows that, as a composer, he possesses the precious gift of melody, a quality which, in a poetic work of this kind, is primarily requisite. Madame Russell thrilled the audience by the passionate feeling she threw into the invocation to Connla. She was enthusiastically applauded for this effort; and her singing of the love music was also one of the features of the performance. Mr. Black gave a spirited rendering of the Drinking Song, which was greatly appreciated. Mr. Richards made a favourable impression in the rôle of Connla. The Dundee Choral Union again approved themselves a capital body of vocalists, and the orchestra, led by Mr. Sons, acquitted themselves well."—Scotsman, Feb. 8, 1900.

"The second portion of the concert was occupied by the performance of Mr. Smieton's Cantata 'Connla.' The Composer has made his music thoroughly Celtic in style, as befitted the theme, and has emphasised its nationality by methods of orchestration entirely in keeping with the national spirit. Such numbers as the fine tenor solo, 'Fair is thy form,' and the beautiful duet for soprano and tenor, 'Thine is my heart,' are compositions that would grace any Cantata, and last night were rendered by the soloists in exquisite style. At the conclusion of the concert the Composer received his richly deserved meed of applause."—Dundee Advertiser, Feb. 8, 1900.

FULL SCORE, Ten Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

Incontestably a work of sterling value, the solo part of which is written with due regard to the powers of such a virtuoso as M. Ysaye.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The really melodious and strikingly impassioned "Ballade" by Mr. Percy Pitt, a composer who is rapidly making his way to the front. Here, happily, no dull moments supervened, and the richly-coloured piece, extremely modern in style, and adorned with numerous piquant orchestral touches, created a highly favourable impression. Its flowing phrases were interpreted with a full measure of sentiment by Mr. Ysaye, who, though summoned again and again, very sensibly declined to concede an encore.

MORNING POST.

A composition teeming with imagination, rich in its instrumental colouring, new in its harmonic texture, and unconventional in its form. The music seems to throb with passion. Though placed almost at the end of a long concert, when the attention of the audience might well be fatigued, it achieved a great success. M. Ysaye, who played the solo part to perfection, was recalled again and again.

OBSERVER.

Mr. Pitt's Ballade will assuredly enhance his reputation. It is an earnest, deeply felt piece, the polyphonic texture of which shows a mastery of modern methods and an instinct for colour that promise great things. Mr. Pitt has long been recognised as a "coming man." We think it time to class him among those who have "arrived."

SUNDAY TIMES.

Mr. Pitt's piece strikes a deeper note of passion, and abounds with more or less striking climaxes, set forth amidst much glowing orchestral colour, whilst here again individuality of feeling is a welcome feature.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Pitt's "Ballade" is in direct contrast . . . in its sustained interest and remarkable structural coherence. Moreover, it vibrates throughout with passionate feeling, and, in the hands of a great player like M. Ysaye, it produces a really thrilling effect.

THE WORLD.

Mr. Percy Pitt's Ballade is a passionate and poetical utterance which makes one think still more highly of him. He is a past-master of harmony, and his skill in orchestration is quite out of the common; and both these qualities appear in this Ballade, together with a vein of poignant melody and a dramatic sense which had not hitherto been in evidence.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Mr. Pitt's Ballade is of an entirely different character. Its themes express deep emotion, agitation, passion, and that peculiar phase of romantic feeling that is so wonderfully depicted in Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," but which as yet lacks a name. They owe their effect, however, in large part to the polyphonic treatment that marks their harmonisation, and the rich though sombre hues of the orchestral colouring.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Percy Pitt's Ballade, on the other hand, strikes a full-blooded note from the first. It is subjective music and not descriptive, and it has the natural logical cohesion of form, although the violin part is also in the nature of a rhapsody. Its climaxes are well worked up to, and there are many exceedingly clever touches in the scoring and in the harmony. The violin part is effective and often quite poetic.

FIVE-PART HARMONY

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

PREFACE.

THIS little book is intended for those who, having already gained a competent knowledge of four-part harmony, desire to write with confidence in five parts.

Five-part writing is compulsory for the degree of Bachelor of Music at the principal Universities; yet even the best text-books furnish candidates with little help in respect of five-part writing.

The plan of this work is arranged in such a manner that anyone who is already well instructed in harmony may advance without the aid of a teacher.

In each Chapter a problem is proposed, and its solution is given in the Appendix (p. 28 et seq.).

The conscientious student will first deal with the problem, shutting his eyes to the solution until he has worked the thing out for himself.

He will then find it profitable to compare his result with that of the author.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive, but it contains a more complete discussion of the subject than the author has met with elsewhere.

VARIATIONS

ON AN ORIGINAL THEME

FOR

ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 36.)

FULL SCORE (just published), 25s.

String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, 22s.

Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the COMPOSER.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.

The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.

The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.

They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.

The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

A COURSE OF HARMONY

BY

FREDERICK BRIDGE, MUS.D., OXON.

(Gresham Professor of Music)

AND

FRANK J. SAWYER, MUS.D., OXON.

(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

HORACE WADHAM NICHOLLS'S 12 SYMPHONIC PRELUDES and FUGUES for ORGAN (OP. 30). Can be had in 12 separate numbers.

Some eminent English opinions of these now famous Compositions:—

Dr. E. H. Turpin.—"Fine and masterly (contrapuntal) organ works which I intend to play: large scope of ideas and breadth of constructive art," &c.

Prof. Ebenezer Prout.—"Great novelty in ideas and form: contrapuntal part-writing is masterly. No. 12 is the only example of its kind, with its fine quadruple counterpoint. The Fugues are an honour to you and to English Art," &c.

Dr. T. H. Yorke Trotter.—"They show an enormous amount of learning and contrapuntal ingenuity, &c. I will certainly have your works studied by the students of the 'London Organ School.'"

Frederic Archer.—"Bach-like methods: an English musician of whom all his compatriots may justly feel proud," &c.

Musical Opinion.—"Masterly productions; elevated and noble in character; Bach-like in effect. In Mr. Nicholls, organists have secured a 'heaven-sent genius.'"

Musical Standard.—"Have a distinguished contrapuntal quality; the true gift of scholarship: most certainly beyond the achievement of ordinary workers in composition."

Organist and Choirmaster.—"These masterly compositions will appeal to cultured organ players as the work of an earnest and erudite musician who desires to carry on the torch kindled by such writers as J. S. Bach and Johannes Brahms."

SCENES FROM LONGFELLOW'S
SONG OF HIAWATHA

1. HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST.
2. THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA.
3. HIAWATHA'S DEPARTURE.

SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Paper boards, Four Shillings. Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, Two Shillings.

THE TIMES.

. . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's claims to be heard are based on other merits than these—on his directness of emotional utterance and on his originality of melodic design, although he never suggests that he is seeking for originality. His melodies have the rare quality of distinction, and his handling of short phrases is as characteristic as it is fresh. Altogether a very great success was scored, and the composer was called again and again to the platform, both after the second section and at the end of all.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These "Scenes from Hiawatha" are a creation of high importance, bound to exercise large influence upon English music. . . . The composer, who conducted, and his music had the heartiest possible reception. There could be no doubt as to this, for it is seldom that a musical audience becomes so wildly enthusiastic as was that of last night.

STANDARD.

Only those who were present last night at the Albert Hall, when he conducted "Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha," can realise how great and rare is the talent that has come amongst us. . . . Nothing more exquisitely pathetic can be imagined than the strains which accompany the death scene, and the husband's lament is instinct with manly grief, resigned dignity, and fortitude. It is music that goes to the heart, and lingers in the memory, and presses home the poet's saying, "our sweetest songs are those which tell of saddest pain."

DAILY MAIL.

All that can be taught in the way of technique he has learnt well. And this knowledge, combined with the gifts, priceless because impossible of acquirement, of spontaneity, genuine feeling, rhythmical command, and the power to express original thoughts in his own way, make him a force. We do not think we exaggerate at all in using the phrase "epoch-making" in the English musical Renaissance in connection with "Hiawatha."

MORNING LEADER.

Genius is a strong word—it should be the last in the critic's vocabulary. It is like a banknote—worthless unless it represents wealth. . . . The word cannot be recalled; the banknote cannot be stopped without damaging the critic's credit. I paid it away in my brief chronicle of Thursday night's performance, for of one thing I was sure at least—Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a genius. . . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has individuality — individuality and freshness and spontaneity of feeling, and individuality of technique, of harmony, of melody, of orchestration.

MORNING POST.

The success thus achieved by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will assuredly not be grudged by anyone, for the young West African composer is endowed with real talent and distinct individuality. . . . The last section, "Hiawatha's Departure," is on a par of interest with the rest of the work. It contains a bright solo for soprano, telling how Spring had come as fresh as the season it celebrates, also an expressive song for baritone, "Beautiful is the Sun." The instrumentation of the entire work is excellent and replete with picturesque devices.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Hiawatha's Departure" is in every way worthy of association with the joyous "Wedding-Feast" and the deeply pathetic "Minnehaha," and this effective rounding-off of the trilogy undoubtedly gives the young composer a very firm position among the creative musicians of his day.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

There is no pretence, no shamming, no mere imitation of a supposed national style; but it has the fragrance, on the contrary, of a peculiar nationality, one, we will say, of confirmed rhythmical habit, of artless melodies, of poignant if simple emotionalism, while to all of these qualities Mr. Taylor has added a finely trained technical gift, a noble inspiration in harmony.

THE GLOBE.

His flow of melody is unfailing, and the brilliancy of his orchestration and the fertility of his imagination are quite astonishing. Not less surprising is his originality; from first to last every page of the score is stamped with the composer's individuality. This is, perhaps, one of the most satisfactory features of his talent, but quite as striking is his power of producing big effects by comparatively simple means. The lament for Minnehaha in Part 2 is an admirable example of pathos obtained by the most straightforward devices, and equally fine is the movement "quasi una Marcia Funebre" later in the same section, in which the sustained power of the choral and orchestral writing is extraordinary. . . . The young composer fully deserved the ovation which he received.

GUARDIAN.

Through every page of "Hiawatha" Mr. Coleridge-Taylor proclaims his kinship with the great composers of the past by the simple directness of his melodies and by his strict economy of thematic material; moreover, the frequent recurrence of short rhythmic figures and phrases has an almost Homeric effect, and combines with other causes to make the music an ideally complete illustration of Longfellow's epic.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ

AND

JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE	(1st Position)	2s. 0d.	1B.	STUDIES	(1st Position)	2s. 0d.
2A.	DITTO	(1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 0d.	2B.	DITTO	(1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ..	2s. 6d.
3A.	DITTO	(1st to 5th Position)	3s. 0d.	3B.	DITTO	(1st to 5th Position)
4A.	DITTO	.. .. ..		4B.		.. ..
5A.	DITTO	.. .. ..		5B.		.. ..
6A.	DITTO	.. .. ..		6B.		.. ..
	Books 1A, 2A, and 3A now ready.				Books 1B and 2B now ready. Book 3B (in the Press).

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822. INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

PATRONS:

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES
AND OTHER MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY.

PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA, DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, MUS.D., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

The World's Greatest Pianists prefer the Bechstein Piano to any other.

LISZT writes:..... "For twenty-eight years I have now used your Pianos, and they have maintained their superiority. Your Instruments are perfect."

RUBINSTEIN writes: ..... "At my Concerts I use BECHSTEIN'S Pianos almost exclusively. C. BECHSTEIN has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making."

VON BÜLOW writes: ..... "C. BECHSTEIN'S Instruments are distinguished by their superior quality in every branch of Pianoforte manufacture."

CARL TAUSIG writes: ..... "I play in public everywhere only on Mr. BECHSTEIN'S Pianofortes, because I regard them as the very best Instruments I know."

LESCHETIZKY writes:..... "The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist."

MOSZKOWSKI writes: ..... "By BECHSTEIN the last word in Pianoforte manufacture has been said."

EUGEN D'ALBERT writes: "My best teachers and dearest friends are the BECHSTEIN Grands."

SOPHIE MENTER writes: "BECHSTEIN, the King of all Pianoforte Manufacturers."

STAVENHAGEN writes: ... "I do not know of any other Pianoforte besides yours which, in tone and touch, affords the player facilities so exquisite and ideal."

JOSEF HOFMANN writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano possesses greater poetry of tone, and resembles the human voice more than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a Piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN writes: "To me it is the height of joy to play on these Instruments, then alone can I become one with the Piano and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a 'BECHSTEIN' Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius String Quartet."

BUSONI writes: ..... "Your Pianos are as regards beauty of tone and evenness, precision and delicacy of touch the acme of what can be produced in this art."

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY. (Founded 1741.)—THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative Part-Writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz.:—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1900, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1900.

J. EDWARD STREET, Hon. Secretary.

Caterham, Surrey, June 1, 1900.

MR. CHARLES COPLAND
(BARITONE)
Of the Royal Choral Society's Concerts, Royal Albert Hall;
Mottl-Wagner Concerts, Queen's Hall;
The London Ballad Concerts;
Crystal Palace Orchestral Concerts, &c., &c.

A few opinions from the leading London Papers:—

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.
"Mr. Charles Copland is a resourceful and cultivated artist who has not only gained distinction on the concert platform, but has asserted himself in oratorio, and made successful appearances in opera. He sang a number of well-chosen vocal pieces last evening, electing to commence with Stradella's beautiful 'Pieta Signore,' which he interpreted with notable care, and following on with Handel's fine air, 'Finchè lo Stralo,' sung in bright and resolute fashion. In Tschaïkowsky's 'Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt' Mr. Copland revealed strong command of expression, while Schubert's 'Aufenthalt' was attacked by this able singer with all needful vigour."
QUEEN'S HALL.—". . . while it need scarcely be said the singing of Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Charles Copland was accorded a glad hearing."
"The vocal interest was supplied by Mr. Charles Copland, whose singing of Cowen's 'Love me if I live,' Tosti's 'La Serenata,' and Bohm's 'Still wie die Nacht,' gave entire satisfaction."

THE TIMES.
QUEEN'S HALL.—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES in the chair.—"Mr. Charles Copland sang the Prologue to 'Pagliacci' very well indeed."
STEINWAY HALL.—"Mr. Copland sang Schubert's 'Der Wanderer' with really fine feeling."

MORNING POST.
ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—"The Redemption,"—"The difficult points of the bass Narrator were admirably filled by Mr. Charles Copland."

SUNDAY TIMES.
STEINWAY HALL.—"Mr. Copland is one of our most sympathetic baritones, and the naturally rich quality of his organ is set off to advantage by the rare warmth of sentiment which he infuses into his delivery. His enunciation, too, is perfectly distinct, an attribute seldom found in any of our young singers to-day, and he phrases with the intelligence and feeling of a cultivated artist."

MORNING ADVERTISER.
ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—"Of the vocalists who took part in the performance we were best pleased with Mr. Charles Copland, whose fine baritone voice told with excellent effect in 'My heart is wi' my lassie' and 'Loch Lomond.'"
CRYSTAL PALACE.—"Mr. Charles Copland was not only artistic, but his fine baritone voice fell with wonderful sweetness and persuasiveness on the ear. It is strange we do not hear Mr. Copland more frequently in the exclusive inner circle of metropolitan musical life."

THE ECHO.
CRYSTAL PALACE.—Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night."—"The most artistic feature in connection with the performance was Mr. Charles Copland's fine rendering of the baritone music."

Applications respecting Oratorio and Concert Engagements should be addressed to 5, Greencroft Gardens, N.W.; or to Mr. N. Vert, 6, Cork Street, W.—Telegraphic address, "Stalheim, London."

MR. CHARLES TREE
First London Vocal Recital, Queen's Hall, June 15, 1900.
The Times.—"A decided success. His well-produced baritone voice possesses the variety of tone-colour which is above all other qualities necessary for such an undertaking. Songs by Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Leoncavallo, Korbay, and Frances Allitsen were sung with evident understanding and success, while his West Country songs excited much amusement."
Daily Telegraph.—"He owns a powerful baritone voice, bright and telling, and his enunciation is commendably clear and distinct. He manages his organ with skill. Two of Korbay's Hungarian melodies were admirably presented, and he sang the prologue from 'Pagliacci' in good style, also two West Country songs, whose humorous qualities were fully brought out."
Standard.—"It is not often that vocal recitals are of such an agreeable nature. He has a baritone voice of good proportions, and his singing shows something of the elocutionist in its artistic feeling and clear enunciation. In the course of solos by Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Leoncavallo, Blumenthal, and Allitsen he exhibited a wide range of capabilities."
Oratorios, Concerts, &c. Address, 23, Clifton Road, Maida Vale, W.

MR. J. E. ROBERTS

MR. ARTHUR SEDGLEY

(PRINCIPAL BASS of the late Arthur Rousbey Opera Company).
For Oratorios, Opera, and Ballad Concerts.
ROCHDALE.—"Mr. Butterworth, the organist and choirmaster, had secured the services of Mr. Arthur Sedgley, who sang the recit., 'Behold, I tell you a mystery,' and aria, 'The trumpet shall sound,' from 'The Messiah.' He has a magnificent and powerful voice of wide range, and his masterly interpretation was greatly admired."—Times.
For terms, Press notices, &c., address, 51, Worcester Street, Wolverhampton.

MR. LORNE WALLET

(BASS-BARITONE)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JULY 1, 1900.

Two Extra Supplements are presented gratis with this number. A Portrait of Dr. Henry Hiles, taken by Mr. Franz Baum, St. Ann's Square, Manchester; and an Anthem for Harvest, entitled 'Father of mercies, God of love,' by John E. West.

HENRY HILES.

MANCHESTER has every claim to be musically respected, not only in the light of past and present-day achievements, but also upon the score of antiquity. That venerable institution known as the Gentlemen's Concerts was founded more than a century and a half ago, while Handel was still in the flesh. The first Manchester Musical Festival took place in 1785, similar functions were held in 1828 and 1836—the latter event being made memorable by the tragic death of that superlative artist, the great Madame Malibran, the chief vocalist on that occasion. Another old Manchester society is the Gentlemen's Glee Club, now in its seventy-first year. It still flourishes like a green bay tree—long may it continue so to do—under the skilful direction of Dr. Henry Watson, who also discharges a similar duty in connection with the Manchester Vocal Society. In the region of oratorio music there was in the forties the splendid bequest of Mr. Hamer Hargreaves—'a gentleman whose love for music was both discriminating and enthusiastic'—which went to form the Hargreaves Choral Society. This Society, founded in 1841 and dissolved in 1849, gave the third performance (the second of the revised version) of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and, moreover, under the composer's conductorship. Then there is the splendid work done for music in Manchester by the late Sir Charles Hallé, and which still goes vigorously on under the beneficent sway of Dr. Hans Richter. And reference must of course be made to the establishment in recent years of the Manchester Royal College of Music and the excellent tuition which is given within its walls.

At some future time we hope to give more detailed information—of a very interesting nature and now pigeon-holed — concerning some of the organisations above referred to. In the meantime the mere mention of them is sufficient to justify the assertion that the musical history of Cottonopolis is not threadbare.

Good men and true not a few have laboured in season and out of season for the cause of music in the great Lancashire city. Some of them now rest from their labours, but their works do follow them. Others have long borne the burden and heat of the day, and yet, even with the weight of advancing years upon them, they are never weary in well doing for the good of the art. Such an one—one of Manchester's prominent citizens and honoured art-lovers—forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Henry Hiles was born on December 31 (not the 3rd, as is sometimes stated), in the year 1826. He first saw the light at Shrewsbury, the birthplace of two distinguished bearers of the name of Charles—Charles Burney and Charles Darwin. Henry was the youngest of six sons, of whom John was his eldest brother. John Hiles (1810-1882) was well known as the author of several catechisms on various branches of music and also for his many 'organ arrangements.' Master Henry began music at a very early age. He just remembers that after he had played the pianoforte to some friends, he was asked his age. 'Four years and a half,' was the reply. He was not much older when he began to make his acquaintance with the organ. And here it may be remarked that, apart from able instruction on the violin, Dr. Hiles never had a music lesson in his life—except one, and that was in singing from Henry Phillips, the distinguished bass singer. Although nominally a pupil of his brother John at Shrewsbury, young Henry was obliged to have recourse to the old 'picking up' process for the acquirement of knowledge. He says: 'Instruction, especially of a lad intended for the profession, was very different in those days from what it is now. Organists were easy going in the old days. For instance, once, in company with a friend, I called on the late Frederick Gunton, organist of Chester Cathedral, and when I asked to be allowed to see the new organ in the Cathedral, Gunton replied, 'All right; but I can't come with you, I'm kippering salmon!' 'In my young days,' continues Dr. Hiles, 'the articled pupil had to gain his knowledge as best he could; to acquire his instrumental technique by careful watching of his tutor's style, and his theory by unwearied pouring over exercises which were pronounced to be faulty without much clue to their faultiness being vouchsafed.' Three times the boy threw away his theoretical books in sheer disgust, as they contained mere dry rules unsupported by any reason, and contradicted by every composition of worth which he took up.

FIRST ORGAN APPOINTMENT.

At the age of thirteen he deputised at several churches in Shrewsbury, including the Abbey Church, for his brother John, who nominally held the organistships of several sanctuaries. But in 1845, at the age of eighteen, Henry competed for and gained the appointment of organist of the Parish Church of Bury, near Manchester. His salary at Bury was £20 a year, but the leading soprano singer received £40! One of the churchwardens, who sang in the choir, could go down to double B flat! In the following year (1847) young Hiles was selected by the Hon. and Rev. Valerian Wellesley, one of the 'golden canons' of Durham, to take charge of the music at his well-endowed church at Bishop Wearmouth. He remained there for three years, and formed a choral society and conducted a band.

'HUSHED IN DEATH.'

At this time he, like many other young musicians of his day, came strongly under the influence of Mendelssohn—in fact, he had a great desire to come into the personal relation of pupil and master with 'the greatest oratorio composer since Handel,' to use his words. But the early death of the composer (in 1847) frustrated all such desires. The event made such a profound impression upon him that he gave vent to his feelings of sorrow by composing his celebrated glee, 'Hushed in death.' This beautiful 'Lament' remained in his desk for thirty years, till (in 1878) it obtained the prize offered by the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club for the best serious glee.

AUSTRALIA.

In the winter of 1851, owing to considerations of health, endangered by over-study, our hero determined to go abroad. He had some tempting offers from Canada; but having a brother in business in Australia he decided in favour of Victoria. Perhaps the prevailing gold fever, and a natural love of an out-door life, biassed him. However, after having spent £150 in order to gain three ounces of gold, he abandoned the digger's career. Colonial life was very rough in those days. 'You had,' he says, 'to fire off a revolver every night to show your neighbour that you possessed fire arms.'

LONDON.

In Australia he pursued music only as a recreation, but on his return to England in 1857 the old love for the divine art asserted itself, and henceforth music was to be the work of his life. He was appointed organist of St. Michael's Church, Wood Street (London), in May, 1859, concerning which The Musical Times of June, 1859, gives us the following information :—

Organist Appointment.—On the 20th ult. Mr. Henry Hiles was, after a trial of skill, appointed organist of St. Michael's Church, Wood Street. There were numerous candidates, and Mr. Goss was umpire.

At St. Michael's the entire congregation, of about eighty or ninety persons, formed the choir, and the young organist and the blower were the sole occupants of the West gallery, where the instrument was then located. The congregation used to meet for practice every week.

MANCHESTER.

Hiles, who was then thirty-two, soon came to the conclusion that there would be more scope for him in the Provinces than in the huge Metropolis; and it seemed as though Fate drew him irresistibly to the city with which his name for forty years has been so closely associated. After holding the St. Michael's appointment for three months, he was elected, after a keen competition, organist and music-master of Henshaw's Blind Asylum, Manchester. Here again our columns supply the record in the following words :—

Organist Appointment.—Mr. Henry Hiles has been appointed organist and teacher of music to the Blind Asylum, and organist of St. Thomas's, Old Trafford. There were 30 applicants. (The Musical Times, August, 1859.)

Of his work at the Asylum it is sufficient to say that the choir was able to provide a weekly concert programme of one hour's length for an entire half-year without repeating a note; moreover, for each of these Wednesday afternoon recitals only one hour's rehearsal was possible without interfering with the ordinary lessons and practice of the students, which the zealous music-master would not permit. St. Thomas's Church, Old Trafford, was, it should be recorded, the chapel attached to the Blind Asylum.

To complete Dr. Hiles's organ appointments—all of which were under mixed choir conditions—he became organist of the new Parish Church of Bowdon in 1861, and from 1863 to 1867 he held a similar post at St. Paul's Church, Hulme. In the latter year he relinquished all Sunday work.

DEGREES.

When in his teens at Bury, his first organ appointment, young Hiles sought the stamp of University recognition. He satisfied Dr. Crotch, the then Oxford Professor, of his fitness, and obtained the necessary Testamur; but he was confronted with a difficulty not musical, yet not unknown to many young men just starting on their career. In other words, his pocket was not so full of money as his mind was of counterpoint; and when he fully realised the necessary outlay for fees, travelling, and the performance of his exercise, he was considerably exercised thereby and relinquished the idea of graduating. But upon his return from Australia he took, in 1862, the degree of Bachelor in Music at Oxford, and five years later that of Doctor, both examinations being passed during Ouseley's Professorship. Dr. Hiles received from Ouseley the gratifying assurance that it was impossible to suggest any correction or alteration in his two exercises—both of which contained eight-part writing of an elaborate kind—and that only once before had he (the Oxford Professor) been able to congratulate a candidate in such terms of commendation.

COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' PRIZES GALORE.

Upon the foundation of the (now Royal) College of Organists, in 1864, he determined upon winning, if possible, the prize for the best organ composition three times consecutively, and he succeeded! The adjudicators for the first competition (1864) were Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. W. Spark, and Mr. C. E. Stephens, who awarded the prize to the composition bearing the motto 'Let the pealing organ blow,' which proved to be the work of Henry Hiles, of Manchester. The same success not only attended him in the next two years, but he also gained the first prize (of ten guineas) for the best anthem in 1866. This was his setting, for seven voices, of 'O give thanks,' in which he had incorporated some movements from the Oxford exercise approved long before by Dr. Crotch. Hiles was becoming a thorough monopoliser of these College of Organists' prizes. In the following year his six-voice motet, 'Sing unto the Lord,' was considered to be 'immeasurably superior to all the other compositions sent in'; but being a work of such scope and length it was not considered as fulfilling the terms of the competition. The Council of the College, however, heartily congratulated him upon his efforts, and made him an Honorary Fellow. It causes no surprise to learn that someone wrote to the Choir in regard to all these prizes going to that Manchester man named Hiles! This outcry caused the 'conquering hero' to hold his hand for a time. However, no suitable anthem for several years after having been submitted, a double prize of sixteen guineas from the Meadowcroft fund was in due course offered, which was awarded to Dr. Hiles for his simple four-part setting of 'I will alway give thanks'; a work which we believe the composer esteems but lightly. Mention must be made of his widely known and expressively beautiful little anthem, 'Blessed are the merciful,' which appeared in The Musical Times of February, 1869. It must have given its composer great satisfaction to know that Dr. S. S. Wesley thought highly of this devotional setting of one of the Beatitudes. Was it not the expressive passage 'for they shall see God' that so greatly impressed Wesley? It is one that would naturally appeal to his poetic temperament.

PRIZE GLEES—ALSO GALORE!

Dr. Hiles also made his mark in the field of secular composition in a somewhat similar manner. In 1878 the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club, after a lapse of many years, again asked for fresh contributions to its library of prize works. Dr. Hiles, by his serious glee already referred to, 'Hushed in death'—a work which has probably more frequently than any other been selected as a test piece at choral competitions—secured the prize. Furthermore, it was publicly stated by one of the adjudicators that that particular glee ('Hushed in death') was selected mainly because it was considered that it was more vocal in character and less exacting to the singers, although none the less artistic, than two others, which were afterwards discovered to be by the same composer! The other two glees were 'The wreck of the Hesperus' and 'The calm of the sea'—glees highly dramatic and exacting, and which, like 'Hushed in death,' worthily sustain the reputation of their composer as a vocal writer of the English school.

A BUSY TEACHER.

For the last forty years Dr. Hiles has been a familiar figure and hard working teacher in Manchester, the city of his adoption. He formerly conducted, night after night, many important choral societies—at Knutsford, Blackburn, Preston, Warrington, and Manchester—so many, in fact, that he could only visit some of them fortnightly. Twice he was offered the conductorship of the famous Huddersfield Choral Society. But no one could continue in advanced life to endure so great a strain as teaching all day long, conducting every evening, and getting home at midnight, or even later, without running serious risks to the wear and tear of the nervous system. Therefore, in addition to the relinquishment of all Sunday work, Dr. Hiles has, for the past twelve years, wisely declined all professional evening engagements, in order that each morning he might come fresh to his work in his spacious teaching-rooms in the centre of Manchester. Here, at his studio in Barton Arcade, Dr. Hiles gives a daily round of lessons in singing, harmony, and pianoforte playing. The studio, which can accommodate a class of seventy or eighty students, contains a three-manual organ of modern construction. It is hardly necessary to say that as a teacher Dr. Hiles is much sought after, and that he is a very busy man.

COMPOSITIONS.

In addition to the numerous prize works already referred to, Dr. Hiles is well-known as the composer of a large quantity of music for the concert-room as well as for the church. He has published an oratorio, 'The Patriarchs'; a cantata for female voices, 'Watchfulness, or the Ten Virgins'—which is as full of contrapuntal ingenuity as it is of melodic charm; a dramatic cantata, 'The Crusaders,' performed with great success by 4,000 voices in America at one of the annual conferences of music across the water; an operetta, 'War in the household' (Der hausliche Krieg), upon a plot similar to that of Schubert's; pianoforte pieces; a large number of songs, part-songs, &c. In the domain of church music there can be placed to his account fourteen anthems, including settings of Psalms 34, 46, 90, 96, 100, 116, 122, and of portions of Psalm 119; Services in G and F—the latter in unison with a fine free organ accompaniment, orchestrally treated; hymn-tunes, of which his melodious and smoothly written 'St. Leonard's' is deservedly a favourite; and much organ music. He has edited the 'Wesley Tune Book.' Two concert-overtures, entitled 'Youth' and 'Harold,' must also be included in this varied list of compositions, the first-named was produced by Mr. Manns at the Crystal Palace, and the latter by the lamented Dr. Swinnerton Heap at his North Staffordshire concerts.

EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

Dr. Hiles, in spite of the constant claims upon his time in the practical duties of his professional life, has by no means been idle with his pen. Of educational works there are his 'Grammar of Music,' two volumes; 'Harmony of Sound," three editions; 'Part-writing, or Modern Counterpoint'; 'Harmony, Chordal and Contrapuntal'; 'Harmony versus Counterpoint'; 'First Lessons in Singing'; and 'Fingers and Wrists,' technical exercises for pianoforte. All these treatises, to which further reference will subsequently be made, give abundant evidence of the deep thinker and the practicabilities born of common sense as opposed to dry effete dogmatisms.

LITERARY OCCUPATIONS.

In the field of musical literature Dr. Hiles has been a no less active worker. For four years (1885-88) he edited, with much ability, the Quarterly Musical Review, of which he was the proprietor. This periodical contained many varied and suggestive articles from his pen—e.g., 'Music an essential factor in education,' 'Absurdities of Musical Notation,' 'Are we making Musicians?' 'The training of Cathedral Choristers,' &c. He has read several erudite papers at meetings of the Musical Association, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and elsewhere, which have been received with much acceptance by reason of their lucidity of expression and thoughtful subject-matter.

AN UNCOMPROMISING REFORMER.

No sketch of Dr. Hiles's life could be considered at all complete without some reference to the influence he has exercised upon instruction in the principles of the art. His own dissatisfaction with 'the teaching of musical construction' in his student days has already been referred to. He would always insist upon knowing the reason why this was right and the other was wrong; and why the music of the Masters so often contradicted the dogma of the schools. It is no wonder, therefore, that, unlike many experts in the teaching of the grammar of music, Dr. Hiles is an out and out reformer. By his strenuous efforts to remodel the teaching of what is called the 'theory of music,' he claims the gratitude of students. He quarrels with the term theory, and will not admit the force of a dogma which, he says, cannot be explained and justified by logical argument. His chief treatises—'The Harmony of Sounds,' 'The Grammar of Music'—treat not only of Harmony and its contrapuntal developments, but of Form as springing from rhythmic pulsations. The latter subject he treated in a paper entitled 'From rhythmic pulsation to classic outline,' which he read before the Musical Association, of which he was an original member, on June 5, 1882. A short work upon 'Part-writing' passed through two editions. This treatise, in addition to explaining the simple requirements of invertible parts—double, triple, and quadruple—divested the subject of much of the mystery with which it had been customary to surround it; and also showed the close connection between invertible parts and canons of various kinds. In later years he has followed the lines he boldly laid down in a paper, entitled 'Harmony or Counterpoint?' which he contributed to the Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians held at Cambridge, January, 1889. That paper created no small disturbance in the ranks of the orthodox contrapuntists, and caused no slight flutterings in their peaceful little dovecotes. Here are two extracts from the aforesaid forceful paper. First, in regard to an equally tempered scale:

> Time forbids that I should even glance at the delusion which underlies all craving after the perfect scale, which never did, and never will, exist; and which—if it could be devised—would create such a multiplicity of 'false relations,' and would so utterly prevent the fairy-like transitions and delicately-insinuated modulations, which give such charm to modern art, that music would be robbed of almost every shred of poetic character; and would degenerate into the dismal, stereotyped, and uninteresting condition of the monotonous lucubrations of Messrs. Zarlino, Fuchs, Albrechtsberger, and Co. I may not dwell upon this; although upon the right appreciation of it must depend your readiness—and, indeed, to a large extent, your power—to follow me further.

Again:—

> You are familiar with the arpeggiod chords in Bach's 'Chromatic Fantasia.' A recent critic has been bold enough to insinuate that even modern research does not justify them all. If so, so much the worse for the 'modern research.' To me, they seem to show a wonderfully modern insight into harmony; they symbolise the stretching out of the arms and legs of a Samson, who has been bound with rotten willows, and who could not resist the manly impulse to snap his feeble fetters. What shall we say, then, about Bach's progressions?
> I understand that they cannot be justified, or accounted for by any light of Day. Is it an electric light that shines in and through them? For truly they are luminous: and they must have electrified and startled the slow old pedants of Bach's time and country.

In his latest treatise, specially designed as a teaching book, 'Harmony, Chordal and Contrapuntal,' Dr. Hiles treats the whole science of sounds as consistently developed, whether those sounds are used in masses or in chords, or polyphonically, in varied and intricate part-writing.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY (MANCHESTER).

The Victoria University, which received its Royal Charter in 1880, comprises the following affiliated Colleges: Owens College, Manchester; University College, Liverpool; and the Yorkshire College, Leeds. To Dr. Hiles is due the establishment in the University of a proper Faculty of Music—tutorial as well as examinational. Sir Frederick Bridge, during his organistship of Manchester Cathedral (1869-75), held classes in Owens College. After his removal to Westminster those classes came for a very short time under the care of the late Edward Hecht. The authorities, however, soon appealed to Dr. Hiles to take up the work. From that time forward he determined upon the establishment in the great and active Northern University (of which Owens College is the seat) of such a full and complete Faculty of Music as its Charter empowered. Dr. Hiles drew up a complete code of rules, which obtained the sanction of the Senate and Court of the University. Classes were formed in which, after the student had passed an entrance examination, an admirably complete course of instruction, spreading over three sessions, could be obtained; each year's progress of the student being tested by searching examinations, and the whole curriculum leading to graduation.

No less than 180 lecture-lessons are now given in each session, and thus Victoria is a teaching as well as an examining University in the art of music. The first degrees were granted in 1894, when one of those duly capped on that occasion was a lady: in the present year the first Doctorate has been conferred. It should be added that an annual scholarship of the value of £25 is provided for the undergraduate who sends in the best paper in the examination held at the termination of his or her first year.

DR. HILES, NOMINALLY PROFESSOR HILES.

Awaiting the desirable liberality of some wealthy donor for the permanent endowment of a chair of music—Why does he or she not come forward at once?—Dr. Hiles is content with the title of Lecturer on, and Senior Examiner in Music; nevertheless he is to all intents and purposes the actual Professor of Music. He is entirely responsible for all the arrangements and for the appointment of an external examiner to co-operate with him in the setting and scrutiny of the students' papers. The post of external examiner has been held by Sir Frederick Bridge and the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap. In this connection it is sad to relate that Dr. Heap (whose term of office has just expired) had in his possession the current examination papers for his inspection—papers, alas! which the sudden call of the messenger of death prevented his looking over. Dr. Harding, of Bedford, has been nominated by Dr. Hiles to be his co-examiner for the next three years.

A connection between Owens College and the Royal College of Music (Manchester), of which Mr. Adolf Brodsky is the Principal, is maintained by the acting Professor (Dr. Hiles) being also the Professor of Harmony, Composition, and Musical History at the latter institution. All facilities, therefore, exist for the more promising students of composition in the College of executive music to be drafted into the Owens College classes, and there following the three years' course of preparation for graduation prescribed by Victoria University. Thus the active work pursued at the Manchester Royal College of Music affords the amplest security for the executive ability of the students who proceed from thence to take degrees in music. This happy combination of circumstances is one that calls for approval and congratulation.

BIRTHPLACE OF THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The formation of the Incorporated Society of Musicians is primarily due to Mr. James Dawber, a sightless musician, of Wigan; he is, in fact, the father of the Society. In the year 1882 Mr. Dawber first wrote to the late Sir George Macfarren on the subject of forming an association for musicians. Sir George sent a reply that was neither hopeful nor encouraging. Dr. Hiles was next approached, but he then thought that the time had not come for the practical working of such a proposal. Dr. E. G. Monk was thereupon sounded, but he, while, like Dr. Hiles, thinking the idea an excellent one, felt himself too far advanced in age to take any part in furthering its aims. A second visit to Dr. Hiles—who seems to have discovered the secret of perpetual youth—secured his valued co-operation, with the result that to him the formation of the Incorporated Society of Musicians is largely due. All the early meetings summoned by Mr. Dawber of that handful of energetic teachers of Manchester and Liverpool, who formed the nucleus of the Society, were held at the chambers of Dr. Hiles in Manchester, the first gathering being held on June 8, 1882, under his chairmanship. After a time increased accommodation was found in the old Town Hall of Cottonopolis. Mission work, in which Dr. Hiles was a most zealous propagandist, was subsequently undertaken, which resulted in the Conference held in London in January, 1886. On that important occasion Dr. Hiles was able to announce that the whole of England had been mapped out into seven wide districts, in each of which the organisation of the Association was complete and in thorough working order. Shortly before that Conference Dr. Hiles was strongly urged to undertake the responsibilities of General Secretary of the Society, as, at first, the Presidentship had been pressed upon him. But Dr. Hiles could not be induced to give up any of the engagements which he loved, and Mr. Chadfield, the present able and genial General Secretary of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, was induced to serve. Under his energetic rule Scotland and Ireland have been conquered, and Dr. Hiles has the supreme satisfaction of beholding the 'little one' of eighteen years ago become 'a thousand' multiplied by two. All honour to his energetic zeal and infecting enthusiasm.

In conclusion, the career of our hero furnishes another instance of that patient perseverance in well doing, that steadfastness of purpose, those high ideals of work and duty, and that constant seeking after knowledge, or 'picking up,' which have so frequently been commented upon in this series of biographies. He fully deserves all the success which has fallen to his lot. His literary gifts, his fine mental equipment, his kind-heartedness, his dignified and courteous bearing so typical of the true English gentleman, and his artistic musical temperament—these are some of the attributes which go towards constituting the personality of one of the present-day leading musicians in England, and who is so well known and respected as Dr. Henry Hiles, the chief musician of Manchester.

'WHAT IS ART?'

Count Tolstoy, in answering his self-propounded question, does not forget to decry the critics. It would be strange if he did, since they are a class which, from the dawn of literature, has been the best abused. All men speak ill of them—those excepted who may happen to be praised, and even then the truce endures but a little while. How the critics have managed to perpetuate their kind under such apparently desperate conditions is a mystery, unless we assume the existence in them of a delusion, stupendous and invincible, that they really are of some use in the world. If that delusion exists, Count Tolstoy's attack is not likely to dispel it. He not only refrains from abusive epithets, but even offers a left-handed compliment. The professional valuers of art are, he tells us, 'erudite' persons, who, in the measure of their learning, are 'perverted and at the same time self-confident individuals.' But he does not entirely agree with a friend who once said, 'Critics are the stupid who discuss the wise.' Indeed, he brands the remark as partial, inexact, and rude. Yet he holds it partly true, and more just than it would be to say that critics are men who can explain works of art. Critics, according to our author, are wholly superfluous persons. If a work of art be good, it explains itself; if it be bad, no amount of explanation can make it contagious. In this summary manner is the whole array of modern criticism dismissed. But the explainers are not only useless, they are mischievous. The critics set up false standards, and propound judgments based on traditions which have become inapplicable. On this point let me quote: 'The chief harm done by the critics is this, that themselves lacking the capacity to be infected by art (and that is the characteristic of all critics, for did they not lack this they could not attempt the impossible—the interpretation of works of art), they pay most attention to, and eulogise, brain-spun, invented works, and set these up as models worthy of imitation. That is the reason they so confidently extol in literature the Greek tragedians, Dante, Tasso, Milton, Shakespeare, Goethe, and, among recent writers, Zola and Ibsen; in music, Beethoven's last period, and Wagner. To justify their praise of these brain-spun, invented works, they devise entire theories (of which the famous theory of beauty is one), and not only dull but also talented people compose works in strict deference to these theories, and often real artists, doing violence to their genius, submit to them.' I do not pretend to explain this tremendous indictment of criticism. It sounds like revolution, with anarchy in waiting round the corner; but what would follow were the criminals found guilty, and how much better art would be for their punishment, are questions which I respectfully leave the reader to answer for himself, with just a hint of warning that even a Tolstoy may destroy with no conception of how to reconstruct.

Having ground the critics to powder and blown the atoms into space, our author turns to Richard Wagner as to an arch-heretic, as to an embodiment of the Evil One in music, with whom there can be no peace. Our author begins by assailing Wagner's theory as to the union of arts in music-drama. Under this head he makes some points with which I am bound to agree. The reader, however, would, if put to it, prefer to pass them over the sooner to reach Tolstoy's description of a performance of 'Siegfried,' witnessed by him in Moscow. This is very funny, and the fun is partly due to the author's wish to put his subject in a ridiculous light; partly to the nature of the subject itself, in which there are irresistible provocations to mirth. But when the story is told, Tolstoy passes judgment with by no means a smiling face. He wrathfully denounces what he regards as a masterpiece of counterfeit art, and embraces in one sweeping condemnation the composer, his work, and his admirers. 'Listening to this opera,' writes the critic, 'I involuntarily thought of a respected, wise, and educated country labourer. . . . What would he think if he knew of all the labour spent upon such a performance, and saw that audience, those great ones of the earth—old, bald-headed, grey-bearded men, whom he had been accustomed to respect—sit silent and attentive, listening to and looking at all these stupidities for five hours on end. Not to speak of an adult labourer, one can hardly imagine a child of over seven occupying himself with such a stupid, incoherent fairy-tale. And yet an enormous audience, the cream of the cultured upper classes, sits out five hours of this insane performance, and goes away imagining that by paying tribute to this nonsense it has acquired a fresh right to esteem itself advanced and enlightened.' This is strong language, but the author's intensity does not blind him to the fact that it is necessary to show how an opera so false in art and so 'stupid' manages to hold the attention and command the applause of an educated audience. In discharging this part of his task, Tolstoy recognises the extraordinary cleverness with which Wagner has made use of all that is considered poetical. Beyond this even hypnotism has been pressed into the service of sham art. Indeed, it is this strange power which should be held answerable for much of the result. 'Sit in the dark for four days in company with people who are not quite normal, and, through the auditory nerves, subject your brain to the strongest action of the sounds best adapted to excite it, and you will no doubt be reduced to an abnormal condition and be enchanted by absurdities.' Tolstoy thus dismisses 'Siegfried': 'So, thanks to the masterly skill with which it counterfeits art while having nothing in common with it, a meaningless, coarse, spurious production finds acceptance all over the world, costs millions of roubles to produce, and assists more and more to pervert the taste of people of the upper classes and their conception of what is art.'

I apprehend that few who read Count Tolstoy's book will agree with all he says. The distinguished author is too sweeping, too uncompromising, too oblivious of facts and considerations which his theory, being crude and hard as most theories are, cannot be made to fit. But while the Count falls into extravagance of thought and word, and often irritates where a more reasonable advocate would perhaps convince, I am bound to say, after due reflection, that in the main he is right. He is right certainly in distinguishing between real and counterfeit art by reference to the condition, mental and emotional, which the one sets up in us, while the other leaves us unmoved and cold. 'However poetical, realistic, effectful, or interesting a work may be,' says Tolstoy, 'it is not a work of art if it does not evoke that feeling (quite distinct from all other feelings) of joy, and of spiritual union with another (the author), and with others (those who are also infected by it).' No doubt there are many works—a vast majority indeed—which, while they fail according to the test just laid down, do actually kindle some excitement and communicate a sense of pleasure. But those results do not represent the infectiousness upon which Count Tolstoy insists. Their origin is traceable, in point of fact, to considerations which fundamentally have no essential concern with art, but are in the nature of adjuncts and, often, of mere accidents. Our author, we have seen, attributes to Wagner, as he appears in 'Siegfried,' unbounded ability in the creation and employment of clever, poetical, and interesting accessories. But these things, he consistently argues, merely put a gloss upon that which is not true art, because, though it may secure our attention, it leaves us unmoved.

An example used by way of illustration often throws more light upon argument than any amount of rhetoric, and Tolstoy does not fail to take advantage of its power. He tells us that, one day, when returning from a walk in a depressed state of mind, he heard the singing of a large choir of peasant women—singing which conveyed such a definite feeling of joy, cheerfulness, and energy, that it braced him up and restored his good spirits; that is to say, the music 'infected' him with its qualities, so that he also became glad, cheerful, energetic. The same evening, a famous pianist who chanced then to be a guest of our author, played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 101. Here I must quote: 'For a long time, I used to attune myself so as to delight in those shapeless improvisations which form the subject-matter of the works of Beethoven's later period, but I had only to consider the question of art seriously, and to compare the impression I received from Beethoven's later works with those pleasant, clear, and strong musical impressions which are transmitted, for instance, by the melodies of Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Chopin (when his melodies are not overloaded with complications and ornamentation), and of Beethoven himself, in his early period, and, above all, with the impressions produced by folk-songs . . . and other such simple, clear, and powerful music, and the obscure, almost unhealthy, excitement from Beethoven's later pieces, that I had artificially evoked in myself was immediately destroyed. On the completion of the performance (though it was noticeable that everyone had become dull) those present, in the accepted manner, warmly praised Beethoven's profound production, and did not forget to add that formerly they had not been able to understand that last period of his, but that they now saw that he was really then at his very best. And when I ventured to compare the impression made on me by the singing of the peasant women—an impression which had been shared by all who heard it—with the effect of this Sonata, the admirers of Beethoven only smiled contemptuously, not considering it necessary to reply to such strange remarks.'

It may be that the reader is also smiling contemptuously, and saying to himself: 'This is only ignorance, or want of taste, condemning what it does not understand.' But it must be conceded, at all events, that in the passage just quoted, Count Tolstoy carries out his own theory—namely, that true art explains itself to the humblest, while counterfeit art leaves the observer uninformed and unmoved. In support of that theory it may be pointed out, as a matter of observation and experience, that from time to time a work appears which leaps into popularity at a bound, which learned and unlearned, gentle and simple, accept without question, and carry forward on the very crest of the wave of universal favour. Yet another work, written, let us suppose, by a man of equal or even superior ability, and recommended by all the resources of a cultured mind and clever pen, obtains no more than a 'success of esteem,' is soon put upon the shelf, and practically forgotten. Of examples in the second of these categories no one in particular need be cited. They are numerous, and the reader can make his choice. But of those in the first and much shorter list, I cannot refuse to mention Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' than which no choral composition ever met with greater or more immediate success, or, let me add, was ever more deserving of such good fortune. How are we to account for the triumph of this and the failure of that? There must be some reason, apart from technical excellence, which often more fully appears on the side of the failure, some reason which gathers round the successful effort not so much the suffrages of the intellectual as the palpitating emotions which it is the main business of music to excite. To my mind, in the case of 'Hiawatha' that reason appears, not in the effect of its orchestration, but in the power of its simple and natural vocal melody—a power which so many modern composers, some by mistake of judgment, others to cover deficiency of melodic invention, practically despise and neglect. It is not only the simple and touching beauty of the phrases in 'Hiawatha' that 'infect' the hearer, but also their naturalness and truth. 'So must it be,' one thinks as the music goes on, 'so must it be, and in no other way!' The word is wedded to its pre-destined tone—this sort of marriage is also made in heaven—and the combined appeal cannot be resisted. A thousand other examples to be found in the records of musical art convey the same lesson and point to the same conclusion—namely, that the true and irresistible spirit of music is not found in the schools, does not lie in technical complications and elaborate developments (which only tend to smother it), but in utterances, often as simple as a folk-proverb, and, like that, forming part, ultimately, of individual and national life. When will the majestic 'Old Hundred' cease out of the land, or the Dead March in 'Saul,' or 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' or 'O rest in the Lord,' or a hundred other embodiments of musical expression such as cannot die?

Count Tolstoy very explicitly lays down the qualities which must exist in any true work of art. They are three, and first in order comes individuality, as to which our author says: 'The more individual the feeling transmitted, the more strongly does it act on the receiver; the more individual the state of soul into which he is transferred, the more pleasure does the receiver obtain, and therefore the more readily and strongly does he join in it.' The second quality is clearness of expression. This, says our author, 'assists infection, because the receiver who mingles in consciousness with the author, is the better satisfied the more clearly the feeling is transmitted.' Last, and greatest of all, comes sincerity. 'As soon as the spectator, hearer, or reader feels that the artist is infected by his own production, and writes, sings, or plays for himself, and not merely to act on others, this mental condition of the artist infects the receiver.'

Here I put Tolstoy's book on my library shelf, conscious that there is much in it hard to be understood, harder still to accept, yet glad that I have read it, and, I hope, benefited to the extent of wider and also more definite views on the great subject of which it treats.

THE TRAINING OF A CHORUS

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS

By Henry Coward

(Chorus-master of the Sheffield Festival Choir).

(Concluded from p. 383.)

WORDS.

The most unsatisfactory part of the average choral performance is the slovenly way in which words are uttered. This is owing to the inertia of the muscles of the tongue and mouth. The dictum of St. James, about the tongue being an unruly member, is true also in another sense from that intended by the Apostle. The strong indisposition to work—better known by its real name, idleness—which causes the lips and tongue to sing with no more effort than in ordinary conversation, is the Giant Despair against which a conductor must wage war. Assuming that you get your choir to speak distinctly, then comes the difficult question of proper vowel sound. It is hard to convince even educated persons that, although they may speak correctly—with proper accent and proper vowel quantity—as soon as they begin to sing they oft-times alter the vowels in ways most ludicrous.

And is it at all wonderful that choristers should be deficient in this respect when, at every important concert, we hear singers with reputations singing 'moi' and 'thoi' for 'my' and 'thy'; 'thau' (very short vowel) for 'the'; when 'ow' as in 'now' is refined, or rather perverted, to 'o' as in 'know'; and when the vowels generally are maltreated for the purpose of some fancied gain in tone? Let me tell these singers that they fail in their object of winning admiration. The public are quick to note all subterfuges, and they soon discern between the true and the false. If they (the singers) only heard the remarks upon this 'make believe,' or incompetence, they would at once amend their ways.

INITIAL AND FINAL CONSONANTS.

In the training of a chorus the conductor should insist upon his singers saying their words apart from the music—he patterning the precise sound required, and then getting the same sound when sung to music. To do this is often very worrying and troublesome; but the living interest which these clear singing words give to the pieces performed amply repays for all the work involved. The initial and final consonants are also sources of weakness in articulation, but these can be overcome by exercises similar to the following, which I have found to be most effective :—

P. Please 'pay, pay, pay' promptly.
B. Big Ben broke Bertha's bouncing ball.
T. Try teaching to tax temper.
D. Dear Dora danced delightfully.
Th. Thin things think thick thoughts.
Th. Thee they them these those.
Ch. Church chaps chirp chants cheerfully.
J. John Jones jumps jauntily.
K. Kruger can't conquer Khaki.
G. Guy gives good gifts gracefully.
F. Fair flirts fancy French fashions.
V. Vain Vernon vowed vengeance.
M. Mild mannered men make money.
N. Nellie never noticed Norah.
R. Round rough rocks ragged rascals ran.
L. Lion lilies like light.

These, of course, are only suggestive, but they have proved very useful.

EXPRESSION.

Expression calls for extended treatment, as upon this essential the success of choral singing largely depends. Expression is generally neglected because even moderate success is not achieved without considerable trouble. For instance, it is much easier to prepare four pieces in a 'rough and tumble,' though fairly accurate style, than to get up one with real finish. It also makes larger demands upon the nerve power of a conductor, even supposing that he has the mental grasp and poetic faculty to conceive the proper artistic interpretation of the music; and conductors, like other things in nature, take the line of least resistance—hence, beyond a perfunctory attention to 'p' and 'f,' they leave true expression severely alone. Many conductors fancy that they have merely to observe the common pianos and fortes, crescendos and diminuendos of a composition, and then they are sure of a good expressive performance. It is indeed something to be thankful for if a conductor will do even as much as this; but mere 'light and shade' is only one of many points that go to make 'expression' in choral singing. The mechanical piano and forte choirmaster becomes a mere bandmaster rather than a conductor.

The factors which go to make perfect expression in choral singing are Rhythm, Attack, Phrasing (of both words and music), Tone Colour of Voice, and balance between the essential or primary feature of the music, say in any one voice, and the incidental or secondary character of the music in the other voices.

RHYTHM.

The popular notion of rhythm is the giving of the strong accent at the beginning of every bar. This is perfectly true in theory, but if the accents are struck remorselessly with metronomic regularity they get on one's nerves and produce an effect similar to that caused by the recurring jolt of the tramcar, or the whirr of machinery, which is typified in the well-known lines of Mark Twain :

> Punch, brothers, punch, punch with care,
> Punch in the presence of the pas-sen-ger.

But, although there is the greatest objection to this too obvious recurrence of the accents except in such pieces as the grand stirring chorus 'He gave them hailstones' ('Israel'), the presence of the accents must be heard throughout a piece so clearly that the rhythm, whatever it may be, is always in evidence, except when a temporary disturbance of it is purposely introduced. It is here that the skill of the conductor is made manifest. He will in some parts have the single bar rhythm, in other parts he will, by means of crescendos or diminuendos, get a two-bar, or three, or four-bar rhythm; delicate changes in the pattern of the dynamics of each bar will be introduced; nevertheless these and all the different points of expression should make the rhythm a central pivot upon which to turn, as for example in the following simple phrase :—

It is the absence of this sense of rhythm which makes many pianoforte recitals wearisome and causes much singing to lack point. This is probably due to two causes. First, the fact that as many choral conductors are organists, they have grown so accustomed to the lack of spring in the music they most frequently hear, that its absence does not strike them as it does the general public, who, though critical, are not analytical enough to hit upon the missing link. The second cause is the perverted taste of a number of neurotics, who cannot tolerate anything that is free, spontaneous, natural, and pellucid; decadents who say Handel is out of date, Mozart is puerile, Mendelssohn is insipid, and the glorious Finale to Beethoven's C minor Symphony unadulterated vulgarity. These morbid souls, who prefer the semi-darkness of a room lighted by tapers, shrouded with heavy red shades, to the glorious sunlight of God's heaven, try to impose their mediævalism upon music. And as these people always have the bump of 'Love of approbation' largely developed, they make no end of fuss by their 'posing and prating.' Like the fox who had lost his tail, they assure us that they are right and that everyone else is wrong. It is therefore necessary to assert plainly that the boneless, invertebrate class of music which these people advocate is, as Charles Lamb said of poor relations, 'a well without water,' a cloud without rain; or, to quote still more powerful words, it is like 'salt that has lost its savour.' Therefore conductors must get rhythm; not the bald rigid thing which reminds one of an architect's plan, but poetical pulsations—i.e., with the corners rounded off—accents with an 'atmosphere'—and if this is done successfully the chorus performed will come upon the critic with the freshness of a 'new drink' in the dog days. Quite recently I heard a mild-mannered lady asked how it was that she got her very determined husband to do just as she wanted. She said it was simply that she 'managed' him without letting him know that she did it. This is precisely what conductors and performers must do in regard to obtaining rhythm. They must 'manage' it without making the means employed, or the accents themselves appear too obvious; in fact, the successful attainment of artistic rhythm may be set down as a good example of 'Art concealing art.'

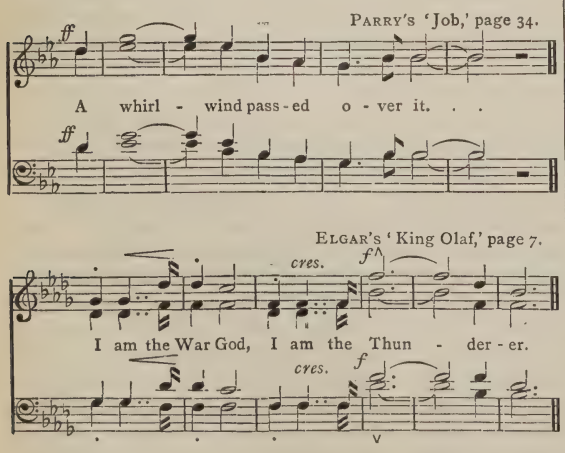
ATTACK.

Good attack is of such vital importance that if it be absent there is very small probability of the piece or the performance being tolerable, let alone pleasure giving. But the attack I refer to as being a factor in good expression is something more than the ordinary firm striking of the notes. It is the crisp, true, and forceful ejecting of the notes sung so as to endow the sounds themselves with vitality, vehemence, and dramatic power, quite apart from the words, although the words often require this forceful treatment of the music.

The thrilling effect of this nerve-shaking shock can be well shown in such passages as the following:—



Passages like the above could be multiplied indefinitely, but these must suffice. In connection with the second example, the effect of 'expression attack' was strikingly shown at the final rehearsal of the last Sheffield Festival. A gentleman, whose name is a household word in Yorkshire through being in constant request as an adjudicator at choral competitions, was sitting in the balcony with a select few. When the chorus sang the 1st bar, with its test of attack in the staccato notes, he gave a slight start and looked at his score. The 2nd bar seemed to impress him still more. At the 3rd and 4th bars he seemed to quiver. At the words 'I am the Thunderer' (given above) he gave the book a bang with his closed fist, passed his fingers through his hair, turned to his colleague and said: 'Well! this beats all I have ever heard.'

PHRASING.

Quite a long chapter could be written under this heading, showing 'How to do it,' and, what would perhaps be more useful, 'How not to do it.' Under this division comes the management of light and shade, piano and forte, but used in such a way as to secure just proportion and contrast between the various sections of the composition. How these points are disregarded was recently illustrated at a performance in London of 'O gladsome Light.' The chorus was commenced mezzo-forte, instead of piano. This would not have mattered much had it been done with the intention of securing a contrast at the repetition of the theme at the 14th bar. But no; instead of commencing this section pp, there was the same mezzo tone at a speed much too fast to bring out the devotional spirit of the words. Then when the climax was reached at 'We bless Thee' and 'Father omnipotent,' the increment of sound was small and the 'attack' so feeble that all interest in the piece evaporated, with the result that one got exasperation of mind instead of exaltation of spirit. There was no stirring outburst of power, no spirit searching pianissimos, no charm of contrasts—in fact, there was no phrasing.

As to what can be done by proper phrasing, one has only to recall the brightening effect of the accellerando with its subsequent rallentando to the normal tempo of the choral part of 'I waited for the Lord,' from bar 71 to the re-entry of the solo voices; the exquisite effect of the ritardando and pianissimo at the close of 'O pure in heart' ('Golden Legend'); the imposing dignity of the broadening out of the final phrase of the men's chorus at the end of the Prologue; and the overpowering majesty of the swell at the 13th bar from the end of the Epilogue of the same work.

Objection may be raised to these effects on the ground that they are not indicated in the score. The answer to this is: Composers at the time of writing do not always realise all the possibilities of their music, and after giving general directions, they leave their works to the tender mercies of the performers, and, moreover, it may be assumed that they reasonably expect that conductors will 'mix brains' with their methods of preparation.

PHRASING OF WORDS.

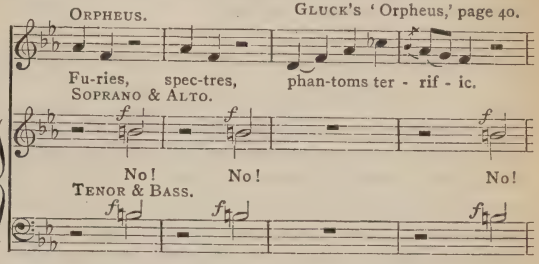
The diminishing sheets of paper allowed for this article warn me to be brief in my further remarks; therefore I will only give one example of the important part which the proper phrasing of words plays in giving point and virility to performances. It is taken from Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' at the point where the Philistine maidens are trying to bring Samson under the spell of Delilah (page 62) :—

As it stands above there is nothing very remarkable about the phrase; but cause the word 'flame' to be sung rather staccato, and 'thrill' with a pressure (>) upon it, taking care to get the initial consonant distinctly, and then note the difference. I have often heard it described as really 'thrilling' by those who have heard it performed in the manner I have indicated.

TONE COLOUR OF VOICE.

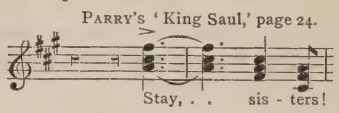
The points already passed in review are all more or less familiar; but that next to be considered never seems to have received any attention. Yet the tone colour of voice is destined to play a most important part in the choral singing of the future. 'The old order changeth,' and the whilom notion that words were merely pegs upon which to hang certain contrapuntal melodies is now a thing of the past. People are awaking to the fact that distinctness of words is of vital importance. And further, some few have realised that even mere distinctness of articulation is not sufficient to meet the artistic needs of perfect interpretation. These prophetic souls see that there must be appropriate shading of the voice—now bright, now sombre, now threatening, now persuasive—and not as in the past, even at our principal festivals, the same unemotional quality of tone. The tone may be full, grand, and sonorous, as at Leeds and Birmingham and at the Handel Festivals, but this will not suffice much longer.

Conductors will have to realise that above and beyond the words, there is the more important point of the thought expressed by the words, which merely form the shell, while the thought itself is the kernel. Recognising this they will not have to use the same quality of voice for 'Mary had a little lamb' and 'Stone him to death'; and they will take care that there is a difference in vocal colour between 'He watching over Israel' and 'Unbar the door, murderer.' I fairly laughed, as did a friend, when I heard the latter sung at the performance referred to above. The weak, unconcerned manner in which the choir warbled the words 'Murderer, it shall not be too late,' was simply ludicrous. Such feebleosity would not have scared a tom-tit. Of the score of illustrations of this point which I should like to have given one or two must suffice :—



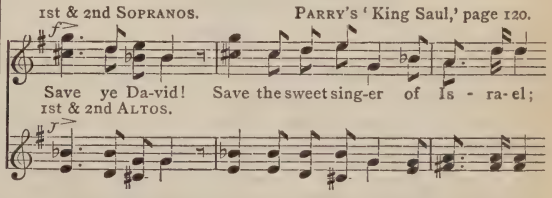
The above passage does not at first sight appear to be particularly striking, but when the first 'No!' has been firmly sung, the second more emphatically, and the third uttered with the the concentrated essence of nasality—n-n-n-no—the effect is overwhelmingly tremendous, there being no doubt left in the mind of the listener as to the negation of the Furies to the petition of Orpheus.

Other examples of effective use of tone colour are—



Here delighted expectancy can be infused into the voices with splendid effect.

Terror and dismay can be typified in the following—



Only those who heard in rapid succession the tragic effect of—

and the sombre tone picture—and the vivid brightness of the succeeding phrases to the words

But the land of Judah shall be a land of rejoicing, can realise the enthralling and inspiriting effect produced by these contrasted tone tints, which made people feel sorry when the chorus was finished.

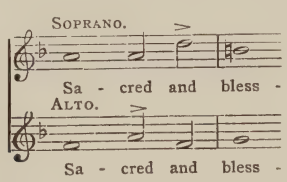
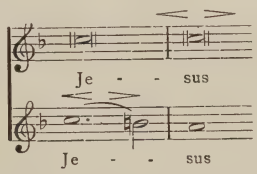
We may take it that however satisfactory in the past grand choral sonority may appear to have been, in the future something more will be looked for, because audiences will not be satisfied with that uniformity of tone which we usually associate with a German organist's rendering of a Bach fugue.

BALANCE BETWEEN THE PRIMARY AND SECONDARY PARTS OF A CHORUS.

I intended to enlarge upon this important feature of choral singing, but my space is more than exhausted; therefore I will only say that in every work performed the conductor should single out those phrases which ought to be brought into prominence, if only for one beat. 'O gladsome Light' furnishes a case in point. At the 8th bar the alto and treble parts should be treated so as to secure the effective imitation—



In the following phrase (bars 10 and 11) the effect of getting the reply of the treble swell to the alto is also very fine—



The second minim in each bar of the tenor part should also be 'picked out.'

The tenor part from bars 52 to 58 is most notable and effective if treated as follows—where the second, third, fourth, and the last three notes get prominence.

The three notes of the first bass in bar 62 are particularly effective, I might almost say thrilling, when 'brought out' with proper balance, clear and distinct, but not too heavy—while the term seraphic, heavenly, or, even better still, 'unutterable,' can be applied to the effect of the last nine bars of the chorus if the altos, tenors, and basses sing an ideal pianissimo, to form a sea of ultra-subdued harmony, upon which the ravishing melody of the sopranos—sung in the most dulcet tones—can float away, as it were, into eternity.

GENERAL HINTS.

As to the size of a choir, I say the bigger the better; but a good working basis is for a choir to occupy about twenty per cent. of the seating capacity of the concert hall. Of course, if one cannot get so many singers, a smaller proportion must do. With respect to the proportion of parts, I prefer the basis to be: twenty-two sopranos, twenty altos, nineteen tenors, and twenty-one basses. I like a bright sky and a firm foundation.

To the capital closing hints offered by Mr. F. H. Cowen, on Conducting, in his pregnant article which appeared in the May issue of The Musical Times, I would add, conduct as much as you can with the eye. A look towards a part—each member of which takes it for granted that he or she must be looking at the conductor—I find is more potent than any other sign, as it seems to establish perfect sympathy between the performer and the conductor.

Many other points, such as how to sing a fugue, a part-song, the development of good tone, &c., must be held over until a more convenient season.

SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

A LOST ANTHEM AND 'ASCRIBE.'

The year 1854 was an active one for Wesley and not without some importance in regard to Winchester Cathedral. Upon his advice the Dean and Chapter purchased 'about three-fourths' of Father Willis's fine organ in the Great Exhibition, which was completely rebuilt for its new location. The instrument was formally opened on June 3, when, at Evensong (at 1 p.m.), S. Wesley in F was sung in addition to the following anthems, performed consecutively—'O give thanks,' Purcell; 'Ascribe unto the Lord' and 'The Wilderness,' S. S. Wesley. 'A new anthem, composed for the occasion,' a setting of the words 'By the word of the Lord were the heavens made,' by Dr. Wesley, was announced to be performed 'after the Thanksgiving'; but there is no evidence of its having been sung on that occasion, or even of its existence. Wesley was probably dissatisfied with his attempt, and therefore relinquished the idea and destroyed what he had already written. Among a strong contingent of singers from various cathedrals gathered together on that occasion was Master John Stainer, aged thirteen, then a chorister of St. Paul's Cathedral. Sir John, in recalling the incident at this distance of forty-six years, says in regard to 'Ascribe unto the Lord':—

> 'At the rehearsal in the Cathedral, Wesley could not get the combined choirs to take the movement "As for the gods of the heathen" rapidly enough. So he came down into the body of the church, leaving one of his assistants (probably Garrett) to play and beat time with a stick on the side of a choir book, a device which left no doubt as to the position of the down beats! We all thought it a great scramble at the pace he took it; but of course he was right, and I have always kept it up to his pace. But I am sorry to say this movement is often quite spoilt—being slowly dragged along by those who are ignorant of the composer's intention.

'Wesley had to make the choirs go through the same portion without accompaniment before he got his own way.'

A Royal Commission on Cathedrals, which sat in 1854, drew from Wesley an emphatic reply to the enquiries of the Commissioners. This, which formed a second pamphlet from his pen on the subject uppermost in his mind, he afterwards published with the title:—

Reply to the Inquiries of the Cathedral Commissioners relative to improvement in the Music of Divine Worship in Cathedrals. London [1854].

Wesley designed the organ, built by Father Willis, in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, and played it at the inauguration of that noble building on September 18, 1854. Curiously enough, he not only insisted upon 'unequal temperament' in the tuning of the Liverpool organ, but strongly wanted both pedals and manuals to be of the G compass! Thereupon a battle royal ensued between Wesley and Willis. The latter said: 'Unless you have the pedal compass to C, I shall absolutely refuse to build the organ.' That essentially English characteristic, a compromise, was thereupon effected, with the result that the manual compass was G, while the pedal-board was C!

HYMN-TUNES.

It was during his Winchester period—which extended to nearly sixteen years—that Wesley turned his attention to the composition of hymn-tunes. This seems to have been a congenial occupation to him. He says in a letter to a friend: 'Writing hymn-tunes became interesting to me, and I had to do much that way in order to supply the many new metres with tunes, some metres being but ill-provided, I thought.'

'Aurelia' made its first appearance in a hymnal entitled:—

A Selection of Psalms and Hymns, arranged for the public services of the Church of England. By the Rev. Charles Kemble, Rector of Bath. The music . . . selected, arranged, and partly composed by Samuel Sebastian Wesley. . . . 1864.

The following extract from Wesley's preface may be quoted as showing that he considered Psalmody to be 'an interesting and grave subject':—

From the frequent occurrence of unusual metres, much new composition seemed necessary, unless I accepted the alternative of inserting tunes apparently quite devoid of merit. The task of composing new music for congregational use is an onerous one. Many efforts of the kind have proved unsuccessful; should such be the result in the present case, it will at least not have proceeded from any lack of earnest desire to do full justice to so interesting and grave a subject.

This hymnal was 'a cut book'—that is to say, the tunes were printed above the words, but the leaves were so cut that any tune could be brought into juxtaposition with any hymn, a method familiar enough in Scotland, but happily unknown South of the Tweed. 'Aurelia' is set to 'Jerusalem the Golden,' hence its name. The tune received a great impetus along its popularity pathway when it was selected to be sung at the Thanksgiving Service for the recovery of the Prince of Wales, St. Paul's Cathedral, February 27, 1872. The smallest tribute that can be paid to the merit of 'Aurelia' as an ideal tune for congregational song is to say that any hymnal is considered incomplete without it.

Wesley's arrangement of the 'Old 100th' tune was made for the laying of the foundation stone of Netley Hospital by the Queen, on May 19, 1856, at which ceremony the choir of Winchester Cathedral sang it under his direction. To the 'Hymnary,' issued by Messrs. Novello in 1872, he contributed thirteen original tunes.

For the inauguration of the North London Working Men's Industrial Exhibition in the Agricultural Hall, opened on October 17, 1864, Wesley composed an Ode to Labour. This work, which is not so well known as it deserves to be, contains a fine bass song, 'When from the great Creator's hand,' which used to be sung at Eton College concerts by one Hubert Parry. The Ode was appropriately revived under the direction of the composer's brother, Mr. R. Glenn Wesley, at the opening of a similar Exhibition, also in the Agricultural Hall, on July 1, 1893.

GLOUCESTER.

The death, on February 3, 1865, of John Amott, rendered vacant the organistship of Gloucester Cathedral. The Dean and Chapter consulted Dr. Wesley in regard to filling up the appointment with the result that he offered himself for the post! Wesley was appointed on February 18, 1865, 'subject to his accepting the terms offered.' Six days later he was sworn in by Dean Law, but he did not commence his duties until June 24, Mr. J. A. Matthews, now of Cheltenham, playing in the interim as temporary organist. Gloucester was Wesley's fourth and last Cathedral appointment. The remaining eleven years of his life were comparatively uneventful, except that, by virtue of his office, he, after an interval of thirty-one years, conducted the Three Choirs Festival of 1865, and those of 1868, 1871, and 1874. The most memorable of these four Festivals were those held in 1868 and 1871. At the former (1868) the name of Hubert Parry, then a youth of twenty, first came prominently before the public as a composer, his contribution to the Festival programme being an 'Intermezzo for strings.' At the next Gloucester meeting (1871) Wesley put on the Bach mantle, the royal robe in the artistic wardrobe of his father, 'Old Sam,' by producing the great Cantor's 'St.

Matthew' Passion. This experiment was so successful that the work was repeated at Worcester in the following year (1872). Thus the great revival by the late Sir Joseph Barnby of Bach's noble Passion music in London in the year 1870 soon spread to the Provinces. In the process thereof it found its true home in such stately fanes as the Cathedrals of Gloucester and Worcester.

FESTIVAL HUMOUR.

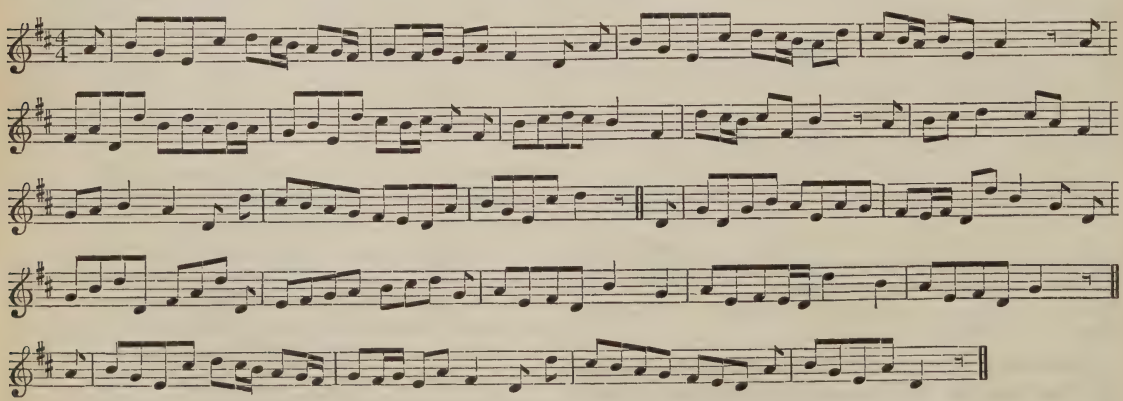
Two amusing incidents connected with Wesley's Festival experiences may be recorded. At that of Hereford in 1867 he was the official pianoforte accompanist. In the course of one of the concerts Miss Julia Elton sang John Barnett's piquant ditty, 'Little fay, pretty fay.' The audience wanted to hear that strain again, and as the singer returned to the platform to acknowledge their plaudits, the 'Doctor' naturally assumed that an encore was imminent. He accordingly resumed his seat at the pianoforte and again played the introduction to the song. But the laughter of the audience convinced Wesley that something was wrong. On looking round he found himself to be the sole occupant of the platform, the soloist having fled. Nothing daunted, however, the 'Doctor' had his revenge by proceeding to the ante-room and bringing Miss Elton back in triumph to repeat the song. The Gloucester Festival of 1874, the last that Wesley conducted, took place 'under uneasy circumstances.' Owing to the action of the Worcester Cathedral authorities there was some danger of these time-honoured music-makings coming to an end. The Festival concluded with a grand choral service in the Nave of Gloucester Cathedral. After a somewhat ominous sermon by Bishop Barry, then Canon of Worcester, and as a practical comment on the tendency of that discourse, Dr. Wesley played the Dead March in 'Saul'!

PROOFS THAT SPROUTED!

To the Gloucester period belongs the publication of the 'European Psalmist,' which appeared in 1872. This work was on the stocks for at least twenty-one years! Writing to a possible subscriber on May 2, 1854, Wesley said, 'between 4 & 5 hundred pages have been engraved these three years.' It is therefore no wonder that in the long period of the preparation of the 'European Psalmist' some of the original subscribers to the work had departed to a sphere whereunto their copies could not be dispatched. Upon his attention being called to a stray minim on the margin of one of the proof sheets, Wesley said: 'I don't know what it means, unless it is because the thing has been so long absent that the proofs have begun to sprout.'

A SECOND HOLSWORTHY MELODY.

On January 14, 1873, Mr. Gladstone granted Dr. Wesley a Civil List pension of £100 per annum, 'in recognition of his musical talents.' After his (Wesley's) death this pension was continued to his widow, who died on February 28, 1888. One of his latest and popular organ pieces is that known as the 'Holsworthy Church Bells.' The melody of this he wrote in 1874 for the bells of Holsworthy Parish Church, at the residence of his friend, Dr. T. Linnington Ash, J.P., of that town, who retains vivid recollections of the Doctor's visits to Devonshire and his fishing enthusiasticalities. This tune is played on Mondays. Another and much more ornate tune, and which is almost more than machinery can manage, is played on Wednesdays. Through the kindness of Dr. Ash we are enabled to give this Wesley melody—



NUNC DIMITTIS.

One of Wesley's last appearances as a recitalist was at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, when, in conjunction with Mr. (now Sir) Walter Parratt, he opened Hill's organ with two performances on April 29, 1874. This instrument, which was originally in the Panopticon, Leicester Square, had been removed from St. Paul's Cathedral to Clifton. Dr. Wesley accompanied a service for the last time on Christmas Day, 1875, and at its conclusion he played Handel's 'Hallelujah' chorus. This was literally the Nunc dimittis to his agitated career. He died at his official residence, Palace Yard, Gloucester, on April 19, 1876, aged sixty-five, his last utterance, addressed to his sister, Miss Eliza Wesley, being 'Let me see the sky.' There has been much speculation as to what prompted the dying man to utter these words. This we can remove by a recent letter from Mrs. Alan Haigh, of Huddersfield, an old friend of Dr. Wesley's, in which she says: 'I always think that the letter I wrote to my friend Dr. Wesley on the day before his death was in his mind when he said, "Let me see the sky," as in that letter I had alluded to two lines in Dr. Doddridge's hymn, which begins "God of my life, through all my days"—

> With what glad accents shall I rise,
> And join the music of the skies.

He was very fond of visiting us, when he would tell us of all his worries about the music in the Cathedral and with the Dean and Chapter; and he knew that we appreciated and liked to perform his anthems in Huddersfield.'

Dr. Wesley was buried in the old cemetery at Exeter, in the same grave where the remains of his infant daughter had been deposited thirty-six years before. A tablet to his memory has been erected in the North Aisle of the Nave of Exeter Cathedral, and a stained glass window in the South Chantry of the Lady Chapel at Gloucester Cathedral.

Samuel Sebastian Wesley stands in the front rank of English Church composers. His deeply poetic and masterly anthems will ever remain the best monument to his remarkable genius. They are as fresh to-day as when they were written. Age cannot wither, nor custom stale, their infinite variety. His organ music belongs to the same category of expressive, inspired strains. The greater part of his life was spent on a storm-tossed sea of troubles with Cathedral dignitaries and the conditions under which he had to work. The Cathedral precentor was his pet aversion. His views on cathedral musical matters he strenuously and ably set forth in the pamphlets and preface to the Service in E already referred to; we regret that the exigencies of space prevent our epitomising, or even of giving extracts from their interesting and suggestive contents.

GREGORIANS?—NO!

He had a rooted dislike to 'Gregorians.' Writing in 1849, on the subject of a revival of English church music, he said: 'Some would reject all Music but the unisonous Chants of a period of absolute barbarism—which they term "Gregorian." All is "Gregorian" that is in the black diamond note! These men would look a Michael Angelo in the face and tell him Stonehenge was the perfection of architecture!' To a pupil who had leanings towards Plain-song, he wrote: 'Your question about Gregorian tones has caused me much pain. I thought I had made a better musician of you. I am sorry for this. I beg to assure you that I am a musician, a protestant, and yours truly, S. S. Wesley.'

CATHEDRAL WORRIES AND CATHEDRAL REFORM.

In 1870 he wrote to his London publisher: 'I am sadly vexed. What a folly I committed in leaving London about 40 years ago'; and in a letter to his friend, Dr. Ash, of Holsworthy (to whom he dedicated the anthem 'I am Thine, O save me'), he said, in reference to his declining health: 'This comes of my getting out of the world when young and remaining out for my love of the country. Worry, worry, worry. No delight anywhere.' In the letter to Mr. Blanch, Camberwell's historian, already referred to, he says, under date of November 25, 1874: 'I have been organist of the Cathedrals of Hereford, Exeter, and Winchester. And now for the floodgate difficulty. I have moved from Cathedral to Cathedral because I found musical troubles at each. Until Parliament interferes to put Cathedrals on a totally different footing as to music, I affirm that any man of eminence finds obstacles to doing himself and music justice which render his life a prolonged martyrdom.'

Mr. Joseph Bennett has related (The Lute, May, 1885, p. 97) how that, in the year 1875, Wesley invited him to dinner in order to discuss 'important business,' the object of the 'important business' being: 'To sweep away Deans, Canons, and Precentors, and thus clear the ground for a better order of things; . . . . to establish a College of Preachers in London, that institution to supply the Cathedral pulpits with qualified orators who would serve for a month in each place; . . . . and lastly, to make the Cathedral organist absolute director of the music, with a salary proportioned to his standing in the profession.' Mr. Bennett was to act as literary and journalistic 'chief of the staff' in moving Parliament, the public, &c., &c.—but it need hardly be said that this drastic scheme of Cathedral reform did not get beyond that dinner party of two. A few months afterwards Wesley had gone to that place where Precentors cease from troubling and organists are at rest.

Music publishers, like Cathedral dignitaries, were as anathema to him. He showed his dislike to them by issuing most of his compositions on his own account through a non-music-publishing firm. In 1868, however, he disposed of the copyright of his anthems, organ and pianoforte pieces, &c., to Messrs. Novello. Certain traditions in regard to the settlement of that transaction, not altogether without their humorous aspect, still linger in Messrs. Novello's office—Dr. Wesley silently sitting on a stool, afraid to commit himself lest he might name too small a sum, and the then head of the firm, the late Mr. Henry Littleton, quietly writing his letters while waiting for the composer to proceed. This state of siege was maintained for several days. At the close of each succeeding day, the composer and publisher, having exchanged their daily good-byes, went their respective ways. A capitulation, however, ultimately took place to the tune of £750. When Wesley received the cheque for that amount, he remarked: 'When I get home they'll think that I have been robbing somebody'!

PERSONALITY.

In regard to Dr. Wesley's personality, the following recollections from an old chorister and from an articled pupil of his cannot fail to be of interest. The first are selected from those kindly supplied by Mr. Thomas Evans, lay clerk of Gloucester Cathedral, who writes:—

I was but a lad when Dr. Wesley came to Gloucester. I well remember the trial day for the organistship in the place of Mr. Amott, deceased. The Dean (Dr. Law) met me and said, 'Evans, do you know whom we have appointed organist?' I replied that I did not. He then said: 'the great Dr. Wesley. He came to judge those who were in for the trial; but he has accepted the post himself because he is fond of fishing and he hears that some good fishing is to be had about here.' I myself did not then know who the 'great' Dr. Wesley was, but I soon found out by his 'funny ways,' as we boys used to call them. I was the solo boy when he arrived, and I well remember the many drillings I had before I was allowed to sing the solo in 'Blessed be the God and Father.' However, it finished up with a final try over at the Doctor's house, when he gave me such a long and trying drilling, which ended in his getting cross (as I thought) with me. I had a good cry, and that put an end to the rehearsal of 'Love one another'; but as I was leaving the room he slipped a two-shilling piece into my hand and kindly said: 'There, don't cry.'

When I had finished my choristership I thought I should like to say good-bye to the Doctor. On seeing him in the Cloisters I went up to him and said, 'I am come to say good-bye, Doctor.' He took no notice and kept walking slowly on, seeming to be greatly pre-occupied. I then overtook him, and, turning round, faced him again. I repeated what I had already said, but he simply walked round me and went off. He would not utter a word. I have since learned that he very much disliked saying 'good-bye,' but I know that he meant well.

The Doctor more than once said: 'The best music is that which gives the greatest pleasure.'*

You are welcome to use any or all of these, my recollections of the great Dr. S. S. Wesley.

The following reminiscences are kindly furnished by Dr. Wesley's distinguished pupil, Dr. F. E. Gladstone:—

Dr. Wesley's extempore playing, recalls Dr. Gladstone, was very remarkable when he was in the humour. There may not have been much plan in it, but it was full of striking effects. A not uncommon device of his was to say to me, 'Hold that note,' and when I obeyed (on one manual) he would proceed (on another) to treat the sustained note as an inner 'pedal,' with results which must have greatly astonished any listener who knew anything about organ playing.

It may not be generally known that his anthem 'All go unto one place' was written on the death of the Prince Consort. If my memory serves me rightly, there was a special service held in Winchester Cathedral on the day of the funeral. But I shall never forget the impression produced by the performance in the Cloisters of Winchester School of his anthem 'Man that is born.' A popular Warden had just died, and for the funeral Wesley made a special arrangement of his music for unaccompanied singing over the grave. The place was thronged, and everyone must have been deeply moved on that solemn occasion.

There is one thing which I have never been able to understand, and that is how Wesley could endure the sound of his 'Wilderness,' or of the beautiful Service in E, when the organ was tuned to 'unequal temperament.'*

Wesley had a beautiful pianoforte touch. He used to play pianoforte duets charmingly with Mrs. Stewart, mother of the late Sir Herbert Stewart. Some of his expressions were very funny. On one occasion he came up to me in the Cathedral and said, 'Bring down your piano this evening'! †

In concluding this biographical sketch—and by the limitations of space it is nothing more than a sketch—of one of the greatest masters of English Church music, full acknowledgment, as is their just due, must be made to those who have rendered assistance in its preparation. The material for a biography of Dr. Wesley is so scattered—a line here, a line there, and so on—that it would have been impossible to gather even these fragments together without the aid so kindly and so willingly rendered by the following helpers:—

The Rev. F. G. Wesley (Durham), The Very Rev. the Dean of Winchester, Sir John Stainer, Mrs. Alan Haigh (Huddersfield), Miss Rooke (Leeds), Rev. Edgar Sheppard and Dr. Creser (Chapel Royal, St. James's), Rev. Arnold D. Culley (Exeter), Rev. F. F. Kelly (St. Giles's, Camberwell), Dr. T. Linnington Ash (Holsworthy), Dr. G. R. Sinclair (Hereford), Mr. A. Herbert Brewer and Mr. Thomas Evans (Gloucester), Mr. T. W. Taphouse (Oxford), Mr. Henry C. Embleton, Mr. Herbert Thompson and Mr. Frank Kidson (Leeds), Dr. F. E. OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Dr. Basil Harwood, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, has, upon the nomination of Professor Sir Hubert Parry, been elected to the office of Choragus in the University of Oxford. The Choragus, who derives his title from the leader of the chorus in the ancient Greek drama, formed part of the original foundation of the Oxford Professorship of Music created by Dr. William Heyther (or Heather) in 1626. His idea was to make the Faculty of music both theoretical (examining) and practical (teaching). 'Twice a week,' state the ordinances of Dr. Heyther, 'is the Choragus to present himself in the music school and conduct the practice, both vocal and instrumental, of all who choose to attend'; but, as if he had some prognostication that the practical part of his benefaction would become a dead letter, he enacted that 'if no one shall attend the meetings in the music school, then the Choragus himself shall sing with two boys for at least an hour!' Even this vocal trio observance fell into decay, and all Heyther's castles in the air met their usual fate. We learn that 'the practices ceased; the instruments were dispersed, and their remnant finally broken up as old lumber; and no Choragus has either conducted or sung in the Music School at Oxford within the memory of man.' The duties of the Choragus in the present day are theoretical and not practical. By virtue of his office, the Choragus forms one of the Board of Examiners for degrees in music at the University. For more than two hundred years, rom 1626, it was held by the Professor of Music. In 1848, when Sir Henry Rowley Bishop was appointed Professor, the offices were divided. The duties of Choragus have since been discharged by Dr. Stephen Elvey (1848), Dr. C. W. Corfe (1860), and Sir Hubert Parry (1883), who, in 1899, succeeded to the Professorship of Music upon the resignation of Sir John Stainer.

* These pregnant words of Wesley's deserve to be 'writ large,' or, typographically speaking, to be printed in capitals.

* For an exhaustive statement of Dr. Wesley's views on 'Temperament,' see the Musical Standard of April 1, July 1, and December 1, 1863, which contain long letters from him on the subject.

† For some additional personal recollections of Dr. Wesley, by his pupil, Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral, see The Musical Times of June, 1899, p. 376. We regret that the portrait of Dr. Wesley, given as a special supplement in our last issue (June), was inadvertently stated to be that taken in 1849, and presented to him by the Leeds choirmen. As a matter of fact, the portrait is of the Hereford period, and thus it may be welcomed as being a presentment of Wesley in his more youthful days.

THE new Choragus was born at Woodhouse Olveston, Gloucestershire, on April 11, 1859. After receiving his early education at the Charterhouse he entered Trinity College, Oxford. Dr. Harwood took the following degrees at Oxford: Mus.B., 1880; B.A., 1881; M.A., 1884; and Mus.D., 1896. He studied in England under Mr. J. L. Roeckel, Mr. George Riseley, and the late Dr. C. W. Corfe, a former Choragus of the University; in Germany, at the Leipzig Conservatorium, his teachers were Herr Karl Reinecke and Dr. Jadassohn. His first organ appointment was that of his own College (Trinity) at Oxford, 1878-81, which was followed by St. Barnabas, Pimlico, 1883-87, and Ely Cathedral, 1887-92. Since 1892 Dr. Harwood has been organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. He is also Precentor of Keble College and conductor of the Oxford Bach Choir. His published compositions include a fine Cathedral Service in A flat; 'Inclina, Domine' ('Bow down Thine ear, O Lord,' Psalm 86), for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, performed at the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1898; an 'Agnus Dei' and 'O Salutaris,' for chorus and organ; a Sonata in C sharp minor and Dithyramb for organ; Three pieces for pianoforte; songs, &c.

THE name of Harwood was that of a now almost forgotten composer—Edward Harwood, 1707-1787—whose magnum opus, 'Vital Spark,' had an extraordinary vitality many years ago, but which, like many another spark, has now 'gone out.' The traditional story of the composition of 'Vital Spark'—or 'Wital Spark' as the rustics were prone to designate their favourite funeral 'piece'—is thus related by the Rev. Henry Parr:—

Harwood had been staying in London, in the company of Alexander Reed, of Liverpool; but when the time for their return arrived, they found themselves without the means of discharging their reckoning at the inn. In this emergency it was resolved to compose some piece of music, and raise money upon it. What Reed attempted in that direction is not told; but Harwood, taking up a collection of poetry which lay in the coffee-room, came across Pope's Ode, which he immediately set to music, and, taking it to a publisher, sold the copyright for £40. This relieved the friends from their embarrassment and took them back to Liverpool.

NOT the least interesting, and certainly not the least gratifying feature of the winter philanthropic work in London is that of ministering to the musical wants of its poorer and hard-working inhabitants. The People's Palace deserves a premier place for mention in this connection. There, under the enthusiastic sway of Mr. Allen Gill, excellent choral performances have been given, to the edification of the 'masses' and to the credit of the People's Palace Choral Society, which Mr. Gill so ably conducts. This body of efficient performers, be it recorded, had the honour of introducing to a London audience Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha.' The Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association, of which Mr. A. P. Charles is the general honorary secretary, has also done great things. During the past four seasons high class orchestral concerts have been given, under the direction of Mr. Hugh A. Burry, at which the 'Jupiter' and 'Unfinished' Symphonies, the 'Meistersingers' Overture, Tschaïkowsky's Fifth Symphony, Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, and other standard works have greeted the ears of East-end listeners. A Choral Society has also been formed which will doubtless give a good account of its operations. At Toynbee Hall an interesting and educational series of Chamber concerts was given on successive Sundays, from January to March, at which the best concerted music was played—and admirably played, too—by professional and amateur performers; one concert, consisting of the works of Purcell and conducted by Mr. Morton Latham, calls for special notice.

TWENTY-TWO years ago the People's Concert Society was founded. Congratulations are its just due, from the fact that very soon this admirable Society will have given 1,000 concerts in various parts of the Metropolis, these concerts being of high-class music. A specialty has been the Chamber concerts given at Holloway, Bermondsey, Bishopsgate, Greenwich, and Woolwich, at prices of admission ranging from 1s. to 1d. At these music-makings many artists of repute have given their valuable services; moreover, a leading feature of its operations has been the attention given to young English composers, of which Mr. Thomas Dunhill's Quintet for clarinet and strings may be instanced. Miss Ethel Robinson is the successful secretary of this deserving Society. All this, as we have already remarked, is not only extremely gratifying, but calls for full acknowledgment and genuine appreciation. It is equally pleasing that the quality of the music performed is so good and that no vulgar trash is tolerated in the various schemes to which we have referred. Other organisations have doubtless adopted the same artistic creed, and can show as good a record. To sum up: there is abundant evidence to prove that the toiling inhabitants in the poorer districts of this vast Metropolis of ours—an empire in itself—are quite as capable of appreciating a good oratorio, a symphonic masterpiece, or a concert of chamber music as are the well-to-do folk in the 'better' parts of the town.

THE Gentlemen and Children of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, are in the habit of giving an annual concert—a custom which is in the highest degree commendable. The seventh of these yearly music meetings took place in the Picture Gallery of Bridgewater House, the London mansion of the Earl of Ellesmere, on May 28. It was a not unpleasant change from the overmuch strenuousness of modern orchestral music to listen to a selection of purely vocal strains, by native composers, for the most part excellently sung. The practice of compiling the programme entirely from compositions by past and present musical officials of the Chapel Royal is, however, open to question. In the first place, it shuts out some of the finest works of our unrivalled English madrigal school—works which so excellent a choir, with adequate rehearsals, ought to interpret with unusual merit. Secondly, it opens the door for the introduction of certain trivialities which are out of place at such a concert, and, moreover, are not without some incongruity when sung in a noble apartment having upon its walls magnificent Titians, Rembrandts, and Raphaels. The book of words was certainly not up to date in regard to accuracy. How could John Stafford Smith have been appointed organist of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, in the year 1862, if he died in the year 1836? And the statement that Henry Purcell became 'Composer in ordinary to the King' in the year 1863 came as a sort of shock to one, at least, of the audience, who has always been under the impression that Purcell died in 1695.

A RECENT prospectus of the International Musical Society (Internationale Musikgesellschaft) shows that the contents of the Society's publications—the Monthly Journal (Zeitschrift) and the Quarterly Magazine (Sammelbände)—now amount to 800 pages, large 8vo. The English committee of the Society consists of Sir Hubert Parry, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Dr. Armes, Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Dr. Charles Maclean, Mr. Fuller Maitland, Professor Niecks, Professor Prout, Mr. Barclay Squire, Sir John Stainer, and Professor Villiers Stanford.

THE Girls' Realm recently contained an interesting and well illustrated article on Mdlle. Chaminade. As a child her talents attracted the attention of George Bizet, who urged that they should have every possibility of becoming developed; she also knew Gounod very well in the last years of his life and often used to play to him. In regard to the study of the pianoforte, Mdlle. Chaminade wisely observes: 'By thinking of each note a girl can do more in half-an-hour than she can in four hours with her mind on other things.' This recalls the story of a somewhat flighty damsel, who dolefully remarked to her teacher: 'I don't know how it is, Mr. Playall, but I don't seem to get on; yet,' she sighingly added, 'I practise four hours a day.' A cynical smile stole o'er his countenance as he said: 'Really, Miss Gyddy! Now suppose you change your plan. Practise two hours a day, and think two hours.'

THE Western Morning News thus comments upon our biographical sketch of Dr. S. S. Wesley:—

THE MUSICAL TIMES for June contains a continuation of a sketch of the life of Dr. S. S. Wesley, who became organist of Exeter Cathedral in 1835, transferring from Hereford. He afterwards became a famous organist of Winchester Cathedral. In a letter dated 'Exeter, January 29, 1840,' Wesley says: 'I have been striving hard to get a Festival in our fine roomy Cathedral, but our clergy are at present unfavourable to it.' Are the clergy of to-day of the same opinion? Why should Exeter be behind Gloucester, Hereford, Worcester, Peterborough, and many other cities in this respect? There is a wealth of musicians, both vocal and instrumental, in Devonshire, and a grand chorus and full orchestra could be obtained. As to the expenses, if small counties can obtain more than sufficient guarantors, surely there should be no difficulty in Devon.

The 'Why' of our contemporary finds an echo in these columns. Who, at Exeter, will take up the 'striving' of Dr. S. S. Wesley of sixty years ago?

THERE is a well known story concerning an unsophisticated visitor to the Royal Academy Exhibition many years ago, at which Landseer's picture, 'There's life in the old dog yet,' was first shown. He, by a happy slip, applied the title to a neighbouring painting which had for its subject the aged King Lear, and was naturally struck by its appropriateness. A similar, if not equally brilliant blunder, was made by the writer of the article on the Royal Academy Exhibition in our last number. Miss Nina Hardy's picture, entitled 'A Love Song,' depicting a young lady who has just finished singing some drawing-room ballad and is apparently being congratulated by an appreciative swain, happens to hang next to Mr. Strutt's 'Thanks, awfully!' and, by a pardonable slip, the writer transferred the title to Miss Hardy's, which it suits equally well.

THE mention of pictures recalls a curious pair of blunders perpetrated in two of the National picture galleries. In the National Gallery there is a picture by one of the Dutch masters styled 'The Guitar Lesson,' in which the pupil is playing an unmistakable lute. In the superb Wallace collection, just opened to the public at Hertford House, we find a complementary mistake, Netscher's picture of a lady playing a guitar being entitled 'The Lute-player.'

THERE has been much comment anent Herr Rosenthal's tempi in the first and last movements of the Mozart Pianoforte Concerto, which he played at the concert of the Philharmonic Society on the 14th ult. In connection with this matter, the following quotation from Abt Vogler's 'System für den Fugenbau,' published in 1811, may prove interesting, seeing that Mozart came immediately after Handel.

The author is complaining bitterly of the rapid rate at which the conductors of his day ran through Handel's fugues at full speed, and, therefore, without revealing the pathos of the master's music. And he continues as follows :—

The direction allegro misleads them; they ought to be guided by the effect, and not by the word itself. Signs have periods in which they are in force, and again periods in which they change or lose their meaning. Conductors should therefore reflect that in the olden, and even in Handel's time, slow rendering was the order of the day, and that by the prescription allegro was understood pretty much what is now conveyed by the term andante.

Vogler's comparison may not be literally correct; but it is noteworthy to find a man of no mean authority complaining at the beginning of this century that the tempi of music, then only half-a-century old, were being hurried.

The excellent concerts, to which we have previously referred, given during the past season by the Bournemouth municipal orchestra have fully maintained their high standard and artistic interest. The long list of works performed—symphonies, 59; overtures, 57; concertos, 30; suites, 18; ballets, 15; various pieces, 79—shows a wonderful activity during this 'fifth series of sixty symphony concerts, given between October, 1899, and May, 1900'—a list of which Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., has just reason to be proud, and upon which he may be heartily congratulated.

Mr. W. C. Stockley has been appointed chorus-master for the remaining rehearsals of the Birmingham Musical Festival in the place of the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap. Mr. Stockley, who was born at Farningham, Kent, on February 1, 1830, went to Birmingham in the year 1849. From 1858 to 1894 he was chorus-master of the Birmingham Festival; thus he has had an experience of works and chorus-singing that is quite unique. He retired from that post after the Festival held six years ago, and he has now, at the age of three-score years and ten, responded to the call of the Committee in a manner which merits full acknowledgment. A prominent member of the Committee, writing to us under the date of the 21st ult., says: 'It is an appointment that is universally popular, and we have every confidence that Mr. Stockley will be able to carry out the work to a satisfactory conclusion.' That the veteran chorus-master will be sure to justify this confidence is a foregone conclusion.

Mr. Frederic H. Cowen has been appointed to the conductorship of the Scottish Orchestra. This important post has not been held by a British-born subject since the régime of Sir Arthur Sullivan, nearly a quarter of a century ago. Mr. Cowen now holds the conductorships of the Philharmonic Society (London), the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, the Scottish Orchestra, and those of the three chief Societies in Bradford. Congratulations hearty to him upon his most recent appointment—a plum in the land o' cakes.

Mr. Granville Bantock has been appointed Principal of the Midland Institute of Music, Birmingham, and will enter upon his duties in September next. Mr. Bantock, who is well known as a composer, as well as an excellent conductor, is an 'old boy' of the Royal Academy of Music, where, in 1889, at the age of twenty-one, he won the Macfarren Scholarship for composition. Congratulations to Mr. Bantock and to the Midland Institute of Music.

Mr. Arthur O'Leary has resigned his professorship of the pianoforte at the Guildhall School of Music, in order that he may have more time for other work. Mr. O'Leary was one of the original staff of professors when the School was opened, in a disused city warehouse, in September, 1880. He has therefore been connected with the Institution from its infancy and throughout its extraordinary expansion, right on to the time of its present Brobdingnagian development.

Mr. J. F. R. Stainer contributed a learned paper on 'The Notation of Measurable Music' to the meeting of the Musical Association on the 12th ult., which discourse, in the regretable absence of the lecturer, was read by Mr. H. B. Briggs. Mr. Stainer's paper is not one that easily lends itself to the process of summarization; but it will form a valuable feature of the printed Proceedings of the Society, wherein it will be read with interest and profit.

We have pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to a letter in our correspondence column (p. 486) from Mr. W. Barclay Squire, of the British Museum, in the hope that the whereabouts of a copy of 'Parthenia In-violata,' which he seeks, may thereby be traced.

The inaugural lecture delivered by Professor Sir Hubert Parry at Oxford, on March 7 last, entitled 'Style in Musical Art,' has been published by the Clarendon Press in pamphlet form.

Next month we hope to give an article—historical and descriptive—upon Kneller Hall, the Training School for Bandmasters in the British Army.

SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

Born, August 13, 1820.
Died, May 28, 1900.

It is with deep regret that we place upon record the death, in his eightieth year, of Sir George Grove, which took place after a long and wearisome illness at his residence, Lower Sydenham, on May 28. Within the limits of a biographical sketch, the incidents of Sir George Grove's unceasingly active, varied, and interesting life were fully set forth in our issue of October, 1897. He not only personally supplied the material for that biography, but took special pains in revising and amplifying its proof—and the 'correction' of a proof was a serious matter to Sir George Grove and to the compositor! Thus the information then given and duly recorded received the seal of undoubted authenticity. In a letter dated October 1, 1897, to the writer of that article and of these lines, he said: 'I am rather knocked up the last four days, and as Miss Squeers said of her father, "My pa has not yet recovered the use of his legs which prevents his holding a pen," so I say that the rehearsals of Beethoven, Stanford, Mozart, and Tschaïkowsky [for the Birmingham Festival] have nearly broken my wrist, and made my writing worse than it usually is—but I must give you a few lines to thank you for your capital resumé of my life which reads admirably, and for which I am extremely grateful to you.' There is no need, therefore, to recapitulate the biographical particulars already set forth in detail in these columns, especially as since their appearance the genial knight had lived in retirement. The funeral of Sir George Grove took place on May 31. The first part of the burial service was read in St. Bartholomew's Church, Sydenham, in the presence of many of his friends, including his old colleague at the Crystal Palace, Mr. August Manns, and some of 'Grove's young men'—men who have made their mark, but who owe not a little to the stimulus, help, and encouragement, ungrudgingly given to them by their kind-hearted friend whose memory they will ever cherish with affection and gratitude. The Lesson was touchingly read by the venerable Dean of Westminster (the Very Rev. Dr. G. G. Bradley), Lady Grove's brother, and the interment subsequently took place at Ladywell Cemetery, Lewisham.

The magnetic personality of Sir George Grove will never be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to come under its influence. His vivacious temperament, his breezy enthusiasm, his eagerness to pick up and assimilate every scrap of information that came in his way, his varied interests, his never-failing kindness—especially to young men—his boundless energy, even after he had passed the Psalmist's limit of age—all these attributes were really quite extraordinary. And then how remarkably these characteristics were ever bubbling up in his charming letters. 'There is always something interesting in Grove's letters,' once remarked a very distinguished organist to the present writer. Is it any wonder, therefore, that such letters—and post-cards galore, sometimes two per diem!—from 'G.' are treasured by one, at least, who was in the habit of receiving those somewhat illegible, but unconventional epistles? He would sometimes begin a letter with 'Dear X. Y. Z.,' or whatever the initials of his correspondent might be; or 'Dear Beethoven-admirer,' if his ever dear Beethoven formed the main theme of the communication. And then the endings were so characteristic of his warm-heartedness. For instance, in the dictated letters of recent years his secretary would write 'Yours ever'; but, in his shaky handwriting, he would often add 'and ever, G. Grove.' He was always so grateful—too grateful—for any little help rendered to him in the way of research. Even a trifling scrap of information would result in the receipt of a post card bearing the words: 'Many, many thanks. You deserve £1,000 a year!'

Some of the expressions in his letters were very amusing. Once he wrote, in reference to an overlooked Mendelssohn matter: 'Blind beast that I have been never to notice it!' In the expectation of meeting a child: 'Give Miss W—— my best regards, and tell her I hope to make her acquaintance on Saturday. An old man with a wooden leg she must look for.' In reference to the paper on 'A few words on the successive editions of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony,' which Sir George read before the Musical Association on February 12, 1895, he wrote: 'Come on Feb. 12. Manns is coming. Dashes and dots will be mentioned. Beethoven was especially particular in discriminating them.'

A Beethoven-Mendelssohn matter always caused his enthusiasm temperature—which was never in the 32° region—to rise to a warm point. Here is a specimen letter seeking aid in a cause very close to his heart:—

Royal College of Music,
5 September, 1894.

Dear E——,

There is a report or tradition that Mendelssohn played the 9th Symphony on the pianoforte to a select number of musicians in Leipzig before it had been heard there in the orchestra—probably about the end of 1823. It is mentioned in Nohl's Life of Beethoven; but I had heard it before I saw it there, as I have mentioned it in my life of Mendelssohn in the Dictionary (ii. 257*a*). I think that the Duke of Meiningen (who was at Leipzig University, and knew Mendelssohn) was my informant. The tradition further says that Spontini was one of the audience on the occasion, and was very wrath at Mendelssohn's having forestalled the orchestral performance. I have written to Mrs. Wach [Mendelssohn's younger daughter] and she knows nothing about it, but she will ask Klengel and Reinecke. Can you throw any light upon it? If you can I shall be very much obliged to you.

Yours very sincerely,
G. Grove.

A little research at the British Museum—always most pleasurable in such a case — furnished the desired information. This, which was duly sent to him and which ultimately appeared on p. 391 of his 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies,' brought in acknowledgment the subjoined post card, which we give in fac-simile—

Bravo, Dictionary!!

The following extracts speak for themselves. 'To have helped anyone on in the world is surely one of the greatest pleasures there is.' In response to an appreciation of his Crystal Palace programme annotations — the most important of which he subsequently issued in book form with the title of 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies'—he wrote: 'That is a thing to make one proud. And I hope that the new book will carry the same power into yet further circles. I know its imperfections—nobody more so—but I also think that there is a certain life and reality about it which may take it into the hearts of the people.' As to his reputed musicianship:

'People will insist on thinking of me as a musician, which I really am not in the very least degree. I took quite as much interest in my investigations into the natural features and the little towns of Palestine which I did for Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," or for Arthur Stanley's "Sinai and Palestine," as I did for Beethoven and Mendelssohn, indeed perhaps more so.' But music had a specially warm corner in Sir George's heart. His fame will go down to posterity in connection with music—first, as the initiator and editor of the invaluable 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' so closely associated with his name, and secondly, as the author of 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies.' In conclusion, we may quote one other specially characteristic extract from a large number of his brightly written letters and post cards: 'Never hesitate to ask me when you think I can do anything. I shan't be here much longer I dare say; and while I live nothing gives me greater pleasure than to work for music!' Such was the man whose memory will long be treasured and revered by those who had the privilege of his friendship—'the truest friend of music and musicians,' who bore the honoured name of George Grove.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Last month witnessed the thirtieth anniversary of the death of Charles Dickens. 'But what in the world has the death of Charles Dickens to do with the Handel Festival?' the reader may naturally ask. This interrogation may be answered by another. Was not Dickens, like Handel, buried in Westminster Abbey? And do not the great novelist and the great composer sleep their last sleep, side by side, in Poet's Corner? Still further, an old Abbey verger once told the present writer that when Dickens's resting-place was being prepared, the grave-diggers came upon Handel's coffin, 'covered with red velvet.' Plain deal for plain people answers every purpose in those circumstances; but is there not just a touch of regality in that external of red velvet? And, be it observed, the covering had kept its colour for eleven years more than a century! This interesting incident is not without its obvious lesson; and it is in the red velvet spirit that one should take his place at that feast of 'solemn musick' known as the Handel Festival.

The actual doings of the Festival have been written upon so much that the record in The Musical Times may be preluded with a few historical references. In view of the centenary of the death of the composer—commemorated in 1859—the now defunct Sacred Harmonic Society, in co-operation with the Crystal Palace authorities, initiated a preliminary Handel Festival in 1857, three years after the great glass house had been opened at Sydenham upon its removal from Hyde Park. This 'grand' or 'great' Festival was conducted by Mr. (afterwards Sir Michael) Costa. 'The band,' records the programme-book, 'will consist of 150 violins, 50 violas, and 50 double-basses, with nearly 100 wind instruments, and a large organ erected expressly for this Festival. . . . The chorus will number upwards of 2,000 voices. The entire Orchestra will form a grand musical congress [!] of nearly two thousand five hundred performers.' At that time the great Handel orchestra was not boarded over as it is now. Its only covering was the glass roof, which, with the light direct from the blue, must have added greatly to the effect of the coup d'œil. Amongst a pile of odds and ends we have discovered a printed document of instructions issued to the performers on that 1857 occasion. In regard to the subject of habiliments, this circular somewhat grandmotherly states:—

> Dress.—For the sake of a better effect in the appearance of so large an assemblage of persons in the Orchestra, it is hoped that the Ladies will generally wear white or light-coloured dresses, and the Gentlemen white waistcoats, and either white or black cravats. It is also recommended to the Gentlemen to dispense with overcoats, and for a head covering, to adopt folding hats, or caps.

Overcoats in June! The sheep of the volunteer performers were separated from the goats of the paid hands, thus:—

> Paid Performers.—Those from the Country are requested at the close of the last day's performance to retain their seats until the Superintendents shall have given them in exchange for the Orchestra ticket the amount agreed to be paid to them.

Again:—

> Medal.—A Bronze Medal commemorative of the Festival will be presented to each Performer, with the name of the person to whom it is presented inscribed thereon.

This Festival of 1857 was a three days' function, which, as at present, began with 'The Messiah' and ended with 'Israel in Egypt.' The intermediate performance was, however, entirely devoted to 'Judas Maccabæus.' On that 'Judas' occasion—June 17, 1857—the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice, and Prince Alfred were present, together with Prince Frederick William of Prussia (afterwards the Emperor Frederick) with his betrothed, our own Princess Royal. At the request of the Queen, 'See the conquering hero comes' was repeated, and, also by her desire, 'the proceedings concluded with the Old Hundredth Psalm, Her Majesty and the whole audience standing while it was sung.'

It may not be generally known that, probably with a view to keeping their hand in, and as a further preliminary to the great centenary music-making of 1859, a 'Grand choral demonstration by the great Handel Festival choir, with full orchestral and military bands,' was given by the Sacred Harmonic people at the Crystal Palace in the intervening year—viz., on July 2, 1858. We have before us a copy of 'The whole of the music,' as the publication, issued by Alfred Novello, is entitled. From this we learn that the programme opened with the 'Old Hundredth Psalm,' which was followed by the Venite, exultemus Domino ('O come, let us sing unto the Lord'), sung to Tallis's single chant in F! To think of Costa's conducting the Venite, chanted by 2,000 singers! Further details are furnished in the following announcement:—

> The band will include the Members of the Bands of the Sacred Harmonic Society, the Royal Italian Opera, the Amateur Musical Society, the Crystal Palace, &c., &c., together with the Crystal Palace Wind Band, and the full bands of the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards. The Chorus will be composed of the Fourteen Hundred Members of the London Amateur division of the great Handel Festival Choir (comprising within its ranks the chorus of The Sacred Harmonic Society, and including selections from all the other Metropolitan Choral Societies), the leading professional Chorus Singers, the Two Hundred Yorkshire Choralists, including the celebrated Bradford Choir, with Deputations from many of the leading Provincial Choral Societies, the Cathedrals, and various Continental Choral and Part-Song Choirs, thus forming a total of two thousand five hundred performers, fully occupying the Great Orchestra built for the Handel Festival, and presenting an ensemble of Musical Talent equalling, if not surpassing in effectiveness, the memorable opening of the Palace in 1854, and the great Handel Festival of 1857.

So much for the babyhood of the great Festival that is well on the way towards the attainment of its jubilee. The meeting of 1859—the centenary year of Handel's death—was a triumphant success. Like that of 1857, it was conducted by Costa, who held the baton—a veritable Field Marshal's baton, musically speaking—at nine Festivals. In 1883 Mr. Manns came on the scene as commander-in-chief at very short notice. He has most ably conducted every Festival since, and, with the present function, he runs Costa very close with having conducted seven Festivals. With the exception of an exchange of 1885 for 1886—in order to celebrate the bi-centenary of Handel's birth—the Festivals have been held triennially since 1859.

It is now time to turn to the present Festival, held on the 19th, 21st, and 23rd ult., with a full rehearsal, to which the public were admitted, on the 16th. A change has been made in regard to the days of the week on which the performances took place. Hitherto they have been given on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. This year the days were changed to Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday—the intermediate performance being the 'Selection day,' thus maintaining a custom dating from 1859. The band of this year's Festival included no less than sixty-eight lady performers, as against eight in 1891, when they first made their appearance. (Costa, it need hardly be said, would have none of them.) This fair force is made up thus: violins, 51; violas, 10; violoncellos, 5; and clarinets, 2. The male altos—'bearded altos,' as Mendelssohn called them—show a distinct falling off in regard to numbers in the present chorus compared with that of 1859—418 in 1859 against 73 in 1900. In 1859 there were forty-five boy altos in the chorus, including such now well-known names as Masters A. Cellier, H. Keeton, E. Lloyd (the eminent tenor), and J. F. Meen.

The choir this year was not only capitally balanced, but it was a splendid body of vocalists of whom we ought nationally to be very proud. The tenors were especially good, the basses as resonant as heretofore—one good bass from Sheffield has sung at every Festival, all honour to him—the altos rich in quality, and the sopranos—except the common fault of most choirs in not knowing how properly to attack their high notes—were very fit for their work, considering the absurdly high and un-Handelian pitch at which they had to sing. In spite of an all-round excellence, there were evidences of the inherent shortcomings of the rank and file of chorus singers—failure of good enunciation of the words necessary to bring out their full meaning, and neglect of final consonants. This latter defect was very noticeable in 'Gird on thy sword,' which injunction reached one as if the command was to buckle on a tool not unknown to a carpenter. The orchestra did not seem to be so toneful as on former occasions, especially as compared with its attainment in this respect thirty years ago. The violins lacked their needful sonority, and there were too few of that essentially Handelian characteristic, the double-bass. The recollection of the effect of those sixteen double-basses in Exeter Hall under Costa in the palmy days of the Sacred Harmonic Society will not soon be forgotten. There were forty double-basses against sixty-two violoncellos at the recent Festival.

The general rehearsal, which took place on Saturday, the 16th ult., was by no means a make believe affair, although it was largely attended by the public. Real hard work was the order of the day, and the veteran conductor did not hesitate to stop his forces and correct them when he thought it necessary to do so. Some extra solos, not included in the Festival proper, sung on that rehearsal occasion, deserve to be recorded. They were 'Angels, ever bright and fair' ('Jephtha') and 'Mio caro bene' ('Rodalinde'), sung by Madame Albani; 'Lascia ch' io pianga' ('Rinaldo') and 'What tho' I trace each herb and flower' ('Solomon'), sung by Miss Ada Crossley; and 'Sorge Infausta' ('Orlando'), sung by Mr. Andrew Black.

Concerning 'The Messiah,' on the opening day of the Festival, the 19th ult., little need be added to an oft-told tale. The principal vocalists were Madame Albani, Miss Clara Butt—who, as a bride-elect, received a special ovation upon her appearance—Mr. Edward Lloyd—his tenth Festival; and Mr. Santley—who first appeared thirty-five years ago and who has sung on every occasion since. With such a typical quartet of excellent singers it may be assumed that the solos received their full measure of artistic interpretation. As of yore, the glories of the day fell to the huge choir. The highest praise of their wonderful achievement is their just due. The unanimity with which they kept together in that vast space was really quite astonishing. The result again bears ample testimony to the innate intelligence and musical feeling of those hundreds of singers gathered from various parts of the country, and once more proves that our glorious heritage of choral singing is in no danger of becoming decadent. It seems almost invidious to single out any chorus for special commendation, but the old 'Hallelujah' was magnificently sung.

The Selection Day, on the 21st ult., brought with it a programme that was too long. It opened with Parts II. and III. of 'Judas Maccabæus,' given 'In celebration of the victories of the British Army in South Africa.' In this martial work Madame Albani, Mr. Edward Lloyd (especially in 'Sound an alarm'), and Mr. Santley (who gave a masterly rendering of 'The Lord worketh wonders') repeated their successes of 'The Messiah' day. Miss Lillian Blauvelt and Miss Marie Brema also rendered useful aid, especially the former in 'So shall the lute.' Of the choruses, 'Fall'n is the foe' and 'Sing unto God,' went especially well, and 'See the conquering hero comes' roused the enthusiasm of the audience to Mafeking point.

The second part of the programme was of a more or less familiar nature, there being only 'two new things' in the selection. For the sake of easy reference we give the scheme as below, though not in the actual order in which the pieces were sung:—

PART II.

Samson.
Overture	Orchestra.
Honour and arms	Mr. Andrew Black.
Let the bright seraphim (Trumpet obbligato—Mr. Walter Morrow.)	Miss Ella Russell.
Let their celestial concerts	Chorus.
Acis and Galatea.
Love in her eyes	Mr. Edward Lloyd.
O ruddier than the cherry	Mr. Santley.
Hush, ye pretty warbling choir	Miss Ella Russell.
Wretched lovers / Galatea, dry thy tears	Choruses.
Semele.
*O sleep, why dost thou leave me?	Madame Albani.
Where'er you walk	Mr. Ben Davies.
Now Love, that everlasting boy	Chorus.
Jephtha.
Deeper and deeper still / Waft her, Angels	Mr. Ben Davies.
How dark, O Lord	Chorus.
Berenice.
*Si tra i Ceppi	Mr. Andrew Black.
Minuet	Orchestra.
Sweet bird (L'Allegro) (Flute obbligato—Mr. E. R. Hudson.)	Miss Lillian Blauvelt.
Verdi prati (Alcina)	Miss Marie Brema.
Ye tutelar gods (Belshazzar)	Chorus.
Bourrée (Water Music)	Orchestra.

* For the first time at a Handel Festival.

The outstanding features of the above were 'Love in her eyes'—the air in which Mr. Lloyd first made his mark, as the junior tenor, at the Festival of 1874; 'O ruddier than the cherry,' wherein Mr. Santley created a veritable furore, fully merited by his dramatic and artistic singing; 'Deeper and deeper still' and 'Waft her, angels,' very sympathetically interpreted by Mr. Ben Davies; Mr. Andrew Black's 'Si tra i Ceppi,' Madame Albani by her tender rendering of 'O sleep, why dost thou leave me,' Miss Lillian Blauvelt in the familiar air 'Sweet bird,' and Miss Ella Russell in 'Let the bright seraphim.' A word of praise is due to the orchestra for their contributions to the afternoon's enjoyment—except that the 'additional accompaniments' were far too assertive in 'Judas'—and as the chorus fully maintained the reputation they had made on the preceding Tuesday, what more need be said on that score?

'Israel in Egypt'—performed on the 23rd ult.—worthily set its seal upon the feast of 'solemn musick.' If for no other reason, this noble oratorio fully justifies the existence and continuance of the Festival. As one after another peak of that Alpine-like range of choruses revealed itself, the greatness of Handel was once more made manifest. There was, perhaps, less apparent sonority in the tone of the chorus than on the previous days. This was probably due to the necessary double-choir seating arrangement; but in regard to intonation and quality of vocal tone there was nothing to complain of. There were moments when one wished that every choralist had been inoculated with that rhythmic-mixed tone-colour made in Sheffield; but hypercriticism would be unjust with the knowledge that the opportunities for rehearsal are so limited—the only wonder is that, considering all the circumstances, the work went as well as it did. The soloists were Miss Ella Russell, Miss Clara Samuell, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Andrew Black. It should be recorded that the Hailstone Chorus was encored, and that Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, as throughout the Festival, presided at the organ. Some of the additional accompaniments were more or less disturbing, and for what reason were Handel's original trombone parts not used? Attention to their significance was drawn by Professor Prout in an article he contributed to these columns in May, 1884, on 'Handel's Orchestration,' wherein he said: 'The most important point of the orchestration of this oratorio ['Israel in Egypt'] is the use of the trombones.' It is to be hoped that Handel's own trombone parts will be restored at the next Festival.

The National Anthem (Costa's version) preluded each performance except the last, when, at the conclusion of 'Israel,' it was sung and vociferously cheered with warm feelings of loyalty towards the venerable and venerated Monarch who graced the first Handel Festival with her presence forty-three years ago. A special ovation to Mr. Manns brought to a close the Handel Festival of 1900, which was attended by 80,204 persons.

In conclusion, a special tribute of praise must be paid to Mr. Manns, as is his just due, for the skilful and resourceful manner in which he again engineered—so to speak—the musical side of the Festival. It is difficult to realise that he is now in his seventy-sixth year! But—with apologies to Burns—'A. Manns A. Manns for a' that'—that is to say, he retains all the alertness and vigour of his youth, and, moreover, in such abundance, that many a man half his age might envy his wonderful storage of nervous force. His conducting achievement can best be commended in the simple words—Well done!

A NEW VIOLINIST—JOHANN KUBELIK.

A NEW fiddler! Such was the novelty—a real live novelty in the full sense of the term—at the Richter concert on the 18th ult. 'A find of Richter's' was the natural conclusion formed upon seeing the announcement, 'His first appearance in England.' It should be stated, however, that the stranger-violinist came unheralded by the puff preliminary. He appeared on his own merits, though with the best possible advantages under Dr. Richter, and gave conclusive proof that those merits are of a very high order, especially for one so young, in the matter of technique. Anticipating such enquiries: 'Who is Kubelik? Where does he come from? and so on, we give the following particulars concerning the young artist:—

Johann Kubelik, the son of a market gardener, was born in 1880 at Michle, near Prague. As is usually the case in Bohemia, the 'land of fiddlers,' his father was an amateur musician. What more natural, therefore, than that the market gardener of Michle should give the boy his first lesson on the fiddle, and thus sow the seed which has already fructified so richly? At the early age of twelve, Master Johann entered the Prague Conservatoire. He has recently had the greatest possible successes in concerts at which he played in Austria-Hungary, where no doubt Dr. Richter 'picked him up.' The youthful virtuoso made his first appearance in Berlin on February 1 last, at the concert given with the Philharmonic orchestra at the Singakademie, when the audience accorded him a great ovation. While wishing him all success in his future career we gladly introduce him to our readers in these few words biographical, and in person through the medium of a photograph.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

A chiel's amang ye takin' notes,
And, faith, he'll prent it.

MR. MILES FARROW, organist and choirmaster of Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, has returned to his native heath after having made an extended and observant tour amongst English Cathedrals. Mr. Farrow took intelligent notes of the various impressions he received in listening to cathedral church choirs in the old country. We select the following extracts :—

I visited seventeen of the English cathedrals and heard sixty choral services during my trip, and among all these choirs there is, as may be imagined, a wonderful difference as regards the quality and excellence of the music. One would suppose that in England, the 'home of the boy choir,' there would be some considerable uniformity in training the boy voice, but there is, to my mind, a deplorable lack of it, and the really satisfactory and finished renditions that one naturally is led to look for over the country, are found in comparatively few of the choirs. In some of the cathedrals the men singers are on what is called the 'foundation,' and have grown old in the service, and their voices are no longer either pleasant to listen to or useful, and yet they are retained in the choir. Consequently the music suffers. As regards the boys, there seems to be as much diversity of opinion in the matter of voice production as there is here in our own country, and the merits of 'chest' and 'head' tones are warmly argued and discussed, each system having its ardent supporters.

Without doubt the finest choir in England to-day is that at Magdalen College, Oxford. And in the same breath one must also mention St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and Kings College, Cambridge. These three afford the best examples in the world of the possibilities, the beauty, the perfection of vested choirs of men and boys.

Two London church choirs received commendation from our American friend in these words :—

At Holy Trinity, Sloane Square, where Mr. W. G. Alcock is organist, there is a very large and excellent choir, there being forty boys and fourteen men. The boys sing with 'head' tones entirely, as also at St. Margaret's, Westminster, where Mr. Edwin Lemare is the organist and choirmaster. He is unquestionably the greatest organist in England, possessing a technique that is amazing.

Contrasting the supply of chorister boys in England with that in America, Mr. Farrow concludes his survey with the following observations :—

The supply of boys' voices in England is apparently inexhaustible, and there are great numbers of solo boys, besides hundreds of boys with fair and useful voices, so that choirmasters are able to pick and choose, whereas in America the supply is small, the choir schools are few. Until they are more generally established in this country, it will be an uphill fight for American choirmasters. Many people, especially clergymen and vestries, think that a boy choir is a cheap and inexpensive method of rendering the church service; but let them be undeceived—it is the most expensive form of choir in existence.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

A VAST congregation of about two thousand people attended a special oratorio service on Ascension Day, in Canterbury Cathedral. On this commemorative occasion the greater part of Gounod's 'Redemption' was admirably rendered by a large chorus, who were supported by an orchestra composed of strings, horns, trumpets, trombones, and drums, in addition to the organ. Two trumpets were placed on the triforium and two on the screen with an effect that was very thrilling. The soprano solos were shared by Masters Newman, Garrett, and Marsh, the Narrators were Messrs. Pearson and Coleman, and the part of the Saviour was sung by Mr. Higgins, all being members of the Cathedral staff. The performance was excellent in every respect, and it reflected great credit on Mr. H. C. Perrin, organist of the Cathedral, who conducted. All such efforts to give adequate interpretation to oratorio music in its true home, the Church, deserve full acknowledgment and every encouragement; and it is very gratifying, as in this instance, to find that the younger generation of Cathedral organists are alive to these responsibilities, and are so efficiently fulfilling their important trusts in this respect.

The thirtieth anniversary Festival service of the London Gregorian Choral Association was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 7th ult., with its wonted impressiveness. Its chief feature was an anthem specially composed for the occasion by Dr. Warwick Jordan, and set to the words of Hymn No. 241, in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern'—'Hosanna to the living Lord.' This effective work, by the organist of the Festival, was well rendered by the choir of nearly 800 voices, conducted by Mr. W. H. Cummings. The Rev. William Russell, a former Precentor of St. Paul's, preached from Psalm cxxxvii. 3, 'Sing us one of the songs of Zion.' There was, as usual, a large congregation.

A Festival of South London Choirs was held in St. Saviour's Collegiate Church, Southwark, on May 31, when Dr. Madeley Richardson conducted the choral force, which consisted of 450 singers, representing the choirs of twelve churches. The service included Barnby's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat and Sullivan's anthem 'Sing, O heavens.' With one exception, the chants and hymn tunes were all composed by Dr. Richardson. An organ recital, given by Mr. H. Wharton Wells, preceded the service, and Mr. Herbert Prior accompanied throughout.

The recent Choral Festival in Norwich Cathedral is referred to by 'Our own Correspondent,' on p. 482, and that in Salisbury Cathedral on p. 486.

CHURCH music seems to be flourishing in South Lincolnshire. At Boston Parish Church, on the 14th ult., the second 'special service of praise,' with a stringed orchestra of twelve performers, organ, and augmented choir of eighty voices, was held under the skilful direction of Mr. G. H. Gregory, organist of the church, and attracted a large congregation. Mr. Gregory gives a monthly organ recital; on a recent occasion he played Schubert's Grand March in D (Op. 40) and the same composer's 'Unfinished' Symphony.

MR. ALFRED HOLLINS—who, since his residence in Edinburgh, is rapidly and deservedly becoming known as an organ inaugurator par excellence—recently (on May 28) opened a new organ in Hamilton Free Church, Port Glasgow. The following selection was given on that occasion. It will be noticed that Mr. Hollins reverted to a custom which seems latterly to have dropped into disuse—viz., to include a Handel chorus 'arrangement' in his programme. 'Sing unto God' was by no means an inappropriate message for the new instrument to deliver to the worthy Free Kirkers in Port Glasgow; and who will question its suitability as an organ solo wherein dignity, musicianship, and attractiveness are happily combined?

1. Chorus, 'Sing unto God' (Judas Maccabæus) .. Handel.
2. Andante in F sharp minor .. .. .. S. S. Wesley.

MR. J. R. TOMS, organist of Wellington (Somerset) Parish Church, has recently been the gratifying recipient of a testimonial from the congregation in celebration and acknowledgment of his long and faithful services as organist of the church for a period of fifty years. We should be glad to hear of other instances of fifty years' service amongst living organists. In this respect the veteran Dr. Henry Edmund Ford would probably beat the record, as he has held the organistship of Carlisle Cathedral since 1842—a period of fifty-eight years! But there are instances of a longer span of service even than that to which Dr. Ford can lay claim.

MR. CLARENCE EDDY, the distinguished American organist, has recently returned from a tour (said to be the longest on record) of 101 organ concerts in the United States. From September, 1899, to May, 1900, he travelled no less than 37,000 miles! It is gratifying to know that Mr. Eddy shows more than a cousinly interest in the organ compositions of British composers—he plays them.

TALLIS v. GIBBONS.—AN ORGAN BLOWER'S RETORT.

AN old manuscript book on organs and organ building, written about 1825, and entitled 'Organographia,' contains the following incident which is recorded under the head of Salisbury Cathedral. If the story is not altogether new, it will bear re-telling in its 'Sarum use':—

The Te Deum and Jubilate being set to music by different composers and in different styles, it happens that they are of unequal lengths. This circumstance induced a former blower to amuse himself by counting the number of times he used to put down the bellows-handle in each service, from which practice he at length could tell exactly how many pumps were necessary. One morning, having heard the boy, who usually came to put up the service, mention Tallis (one of the shortest, which, however, was changed by the organist for one that happened to be longer), he left off blowing when he had completed the usual number of pumps. Consequently, a verse or two before the Te Deum came to a conclusion, the organ suddenly stopped for want of breath. On this the organist ran out to abuse the blower for his carelessness, when the blower, without seeming to think himself at all to blame, simply asked if Tallis's service was not put up? 'Tallis!' said the organist, 'it was Gibbons that I played.' 'Why there now,' replied the blower, 'I knew it wasn't my fault. It is all owing to your having played Gibbons, while I blowed Tallis!'

ORGAN RECITALS.

FROM a budget of programmes recently received we select the following:—

Trinity College Chapel, Cambridge, by Mr. Walter Alcock (who played Widor's Sixth Symphony) and Dr. Alan Gray (who played his own MS. Fantasia in G minor and Smart's Air and Variations in A); Beeston Parish Church, Nottinghamshire, by Mr. N. F. Byng Johnson; Winchester Cathedral, by Mr. A. E. Floyd, assistant-organist; Polytechnic Institute, Battersea, on the new organ presented by the late Sir Henry Tate, by Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Huntley, and Mr. E. H. Lemare; St. Lawrence Church, Thanet, dedication of the organ, by Dr. Froggatt; St. Paul's, Onslow Square, after the re-building of the organ by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, by Mr. John W. Ivimey; Christ Church, Newgate Street, by Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne; Bishopwearmouth Parish Church, by Mr. James Bevan (who played Widor's Marche Pontificale); Esher Baptist Chapel, opening of new organ by Mr. W. C. Webb; College Street Chapel, Northampton, by Mr. R. W. Strickland (who played Handel's Overture to 'Pharamond'); St. Mary's, Bletchingly, by Mr. Frederic W. Goodrich (who played Lux's Fantasia on the Sicilian Mariner's Hymn); Holy Trinity, Coventry, by Mr. C. H. Moody (who played Rheinberger's 'Evening rest') and Dr. Madeley Richardson (who played Rheinberger's Sonata in B minor); St. Clement Danes, Strand, by Mr. George T. Pinches (who played Mr. Cutler's Intermezzo); Holy Trinity, Wandsworth, by Mr. Henry W. Weston (who played Krebs's Concert Fugue in G).

ORGANIST APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Wallace S. Hughes, St. Mary's Parish Church, Chester.
Mr. A. H. Robinson, Buxton Parish Church.
Mr. George T. Patman, Hessle Parish Church.
Mr. W. R. B. Tann, St. Saviour's Church, Paddington.
Mr. T. Emberton, Castle Church, Stafford.
Mr. Alexander H. Griffin, St. Luke's Church, Kingston-on-Thames.

REVIEWS.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Requiem. For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. By Joseph C. Bridge. [G. Ricordi and Co.]

SPECIAL interest is attached to this 'Requiem' as it has been composed expressly for the forthcoming Chester Musical Festival. To the thoughtful minded it may appear strange that English organists should have such a predilection for setting the mass for the dead emanating from another Church, especially as the opportunities for the public performance are rare. Probably, however, the reason is to be found in the emotionalism of the subject, which naturally appeals to musicians. The chief feature of Dr. Bridge's setting is the directness, and what may be termed manly straightforwardness of expression. Sensationalism and theatrical effects are carefully avoided, and impressiveness is sought by simple means rather than by subtlety or complexity. This is indicated by the opening number, which includes a quartet supplementary to the four-part chorus. The Dies Iræ is tersely and vigorously treated. The two subsequent sections, Tuba Mirum and Recordare, both include a quartet upon which the composer has manifestly bestowed much earnest thought. The Lacrymosa is set as a duet for contralto and bass, supported by a chorus in four parts, and the strains reverently echo the spirit of the text. The music of Domine Jesu is, however, still happier in its unaffected and devotional spirit, and is perhaps the finest portion of the work. The Sanctus contains a fugue built up with a vigorous subject, not exhaustively developed, but terminating with a stirring climax. The last two numbers are designed for solo quartet and chorus and deepen the favourable impression made by what has gone before. The performance of the work at Chester will be anticipated with interest.

Blow up the trumpet in the new moon; I will magnify Thee, O God, my King; Thou that sittest between the Cherubims. Composed by Frederick Iliffe.

Come unto Me, all ye that labour. Composed by George J. Elvey.

Behold, God is my Salvation. Composed by F. Cunningham Woods.

(Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 632 to 636.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Each of the first three anthems in the above list, composed by Dr. Frederick Iliffe, is described as 'A short and easy anthem for parish choirs'; but although they make small demands on executive skill, they are by no means destitute of musical interest. The first contains a section for tenors and basses in unison, which provides an effective contrast to the opening and closing choruses. The second has a portion which might be sung as a quartet, and a similar procedure could be pursued in the third, which also comprises a recitative passage for tenors or trebles.

Sir George Elvey's anthem is for tenor solo and chorus, and is an excellent example of English Church music, combining melodiousness, dignity, and directness of expression with remarkable felicity. The present edition has been carefully edited by Dr. Keeton, of Peterborough Cathedral, an old Windsor boy.

Mr. Cunningham Woods's anthem was written for the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Demonstration, held at the Albert Hall in June of last year. It is laid out on what may be termed festival lines, and is jubilant in character; but it is by no means difficult, being written in traditional solid Church style, the harmonic scheme being diatonic and the intervals in the part-writing easy to read.

MUSICAL LITERATURE, &c.

Outlines of Musical Bibliography. Part I. By Andrew Deakin. [Birmingham: Andrew Deakin.]

This work is the outcome of an attempt—and an exceedingly good one too—by the veteran Birmingham musician, to bring together a list of all the music and musical works, printed or otherwise, produced in the British Isles before the year 1800. A bold attempt, and one involving long and patient research! A glance at this first part shows at once what an invaluable record of the progress in England of scientific and practical music it will be when completed. The author does not claim perfection for his work, and it is of course quite possible that some book, pamphlet, or piece of music may escape his notice; but if the remaining sections are compiled with the same care as this first part, there will be little, if any, cause for complaint.

In a few introductory remarks concerning early music and musical works in manuscript, our author refers to John Dunstable of famous memory, and to the knowledge we have gained concerning this composer through the efforts of Mr. W. Barclay Squire, who in making research abroad was hampered by various vexatious restrictions. Not only does Mr. Deakin give titles and names which in themselves would prove exceedingly useful, but in many cases sound criticism or valuable comment of some kind is added. The printed works commence with 'The Mirrour of the World,' printed by William Caxton in 1481. An interesting 'Collection of Twenty Songs' is named, printed by Wynken-de-Worde in 1530, and it shows the first known use of a five-lined stave; it is, moreover, one of the first, if not the first book in which the notes of secular music were printed in England. In 'A new Way of making foure parts in Counterpoint, by a most familiar and infallible Rule,' by Thomas Campion, that author remarks in his preface that 'If I should discover no more than is already deciphered, might I be my own Judge, I had effected more in Counterpoint, than any man before me hath attempted, but yet I will proceed a little further.' Some authors now-a-days may have the same good opinion of themselves, though they do not give expression to it quite so frankly. The 'Speculum Musicæ' of John de Muris (c. 1350) is mentioned; but seeing that he is accounted by some authorities an Englishman, it is strange that no copy of that work is extant in England.

Many an interesting, or, as the case may be, amusing extract might be made from these pages; but we must be content to say of this Part I. that it is full of valuable information, and just to show the author that we have looked carefully through his pages we may say that the remarks concerning the 'Quatuor Principalia,' under Tunstede and Hanboys or Hamboys (pp. 8 and 10), would bear revision, for it is by no means certain that that treatise was written by either of those musicians. Then again the famous 'Mulliner' MS. book having been in the hands of Mr. Deakin, more information than he has given might have been extracted from it.

Tschaikovsky, his life and works, with extracts from his writings, and the diary of his tour abroad in 1888. By Rosa Newmarch. [Grant Richards.]

Mrs. Newmarch, the authoress of this welcome book, is known as a conscientious, well informed, and accurate writer on the important subject of Russian music. Therefore, any product of her pen is entitled to respectful consideration. This, her latest volume, on Tschaikovsky, as she elects to spell the name of the great Russian composer, is of a three-fold nature. Its first, and strictly biographical section, originally appeared in the defunct Musician in 1897, but the subject-matter has been rewritten and amplified. To this succeed several extracts, translated from 'The collected writings of Tschaikovsky,' which appeared in an English version in the Musical Standard two years ago. The third and last part of the book, which is quite new, contains the diary—or, more probably, a portion thereof — written by the composer during his journeyings in 1888. Within the limitations of her available material Mrs. Newmarch has discharged her task with commendable fidelity and meritorious success. It is true that we do not seem to get into touch with the real personality—the inner man—of Tschaikovsky, because, for one reason, his present biographer has not had access to the letters—said to be numbered by thousands—which will be sure to form a no inconsiderable portion of the authorised biography, and, as every biographer knows, are a fine index to a man's personality. But this book furnishes an interesting and valuable resumé of the somewhat mysterious, and, so far as we at present know, rather uneventful life of a remarkable musician. Not the least interesting section of the book is that which records Tschaikovsky's opinions on certain great composers —Mozart was his master of masters; he was not exactly a Grove-like worshipper of Beethoven; nor was he altogether an out and out admirer of Wagner and Brahms; he spoke of Bach's great choral works as 'real classical bores,' and Handel he found to be intolerable. It is a pity that the 'Diary of 1888' does not include the experiences of his visit to England in that year. Has that portion of it been withheld for any reason? It would be quite easy to quote many interesting extracts from Mrs. Newmarch's readable volume, but we must be content with commending it to the notice of all, and there should be many such, who take an interest in the development of Russian music and in the life and life-work of one of its most illustrious creative artists. A portrait of Tschaikovsky, a fac-simile of the first page of the autograph score of the 'Overture, 1812,' and a list of works add to the attractiveness and usefulness of the volume. As a book of reference, however, it has a very serious and unpardonable shortcoming—there is no index and not even a table of contents. To issue a book of this kind without an index should constitute a punishable offence. The dedication of the volume to Mr. Henry J. Wood is most appropriate.

VOCAL DUETS.

Five Duets. For Soprano and Contralto (Second set). Composed by Frederic H. Cowen.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Cowen is always happy in his songs. Whichever class of singer he writes for, and he manifestly seeks to please all and sundry, he rarely fails to meet their requirements. In the second set of Duets, now before us, he has addressed himself to cultured and well-trained vocalists, and by such we have no hesitation in saying these songs will be widely welcomed. The poems set are: Longfellow's 'Curfew,' Mrs. Hemans's 'The Summer's call,' Adelaide Procter's 'To-day,' Herrick's 'To Daffodils,' and Howitt's 'Birds.' Of these we prefer the first, a really beautiful composition, which seems to breathe forth the peace 'of evening's close.' The following duet, 'The Summer's call,' forms a delightful contrast, and is as vivacious and delicate as a fairies' dance. There is a dignity in the music of 'To-day' which notably increases the significance of the text. The setting of 'To Daffodils' is as charming as the flower, and the music of the 'Birds' is as light-hearted and gay as are the feathered songsters.

ORGAN MUSIC.

The Village Organist. Edited by J. Stainer and F. Cunningham Woods. Books 22, 23, and 24.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This last instalment of 'The Village Organist' series comprises three books, which are quite up to the level of their forerunners. First, in surveying the original matter, we have a Marcietta in F by M. Th. Dubois, which has the double merit of being melodious and free from difficulty. The same distinguished French organist contributes a scarcely less attractive 'Sortie-Marche' in G. A 'Pax Vobiscum,' by Mr. H. Elliot Button, fully justifies its title. Dr. Sweeting, in his Andante grazioso in G, evidently has a good opinion of the pedal prowess of the village organist; but his well-written movement is one that will repay study; moreover, it is slow and not really difficult. A Solemn March, by Mr. Edmondstoune Duncan, furnishes a useful concluding voluntary, and it goes without saying that an Andantino in C, by Dr. Gladstone, fulfils all the requirements of cultured musicianship. A pleasant little Minuet and Trio, by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, one of the Editors of the work; a 'Te decet Hymnus' from the experienced pen of Mr. John E. West, and an Andante religioso by Mr. J. W. Elliott will each be sure of a welcome. Amongst other English composers who are represented in these three books we find the names of Mr. E. H. Thorne, Mr. G. F. Blatch, and Dr. John W. Reynolds. The Arrangements are from works by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Hubert Parry, Handel (the Bourrée in G), Tschaïkowsky, and Henry Smart, in addition to the ever-popular Gloria from the Twelfth Mass, which was in all probability not composed by Mozart. No one can, therefore, complain of want of variety in this latest instalment of a publication which bears upon it the stamp of its own usefulness and practicability.

Overture to Ruy Blas. Mendelssohn.
Melodie in E. Rachmaninoff.
Triumphal March. Edward Elgar.
Chant sans paroles, and Romance in F minor. Tschaïkowsky.
(The Recital Series of Transcriptions for the Organ. By Edwin H. Lemare. Nos. 5 to 9.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

There is no need to pass judgment upon the compositions as such which appear at the head of this notice. They have been tested in the fire of artistic opinion, and in the process thereof they have not been consumed. It is only necessary to say that of the two selected orchestral pieces which Mr. Lemare has so ably transcribed, Mr. Elgar's brilliant march is from his 'Caractacus,' and that the overture by the composer of 'Elijah' lends itself very favourably to organ treatment. The remaining three arrangements are those of well-known pianoforte works which 'need no bush.' As we have remarked in former notices of this series, Mr. Lemare does not overload his transcriptions. He prefers clearness to handfuls, and he wisely studies the capabilities of the average executant in preference to the high jinks of the mere technician.

JUBILEE OF THE COLOGNE CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

The Cologne Conservatory of Music, founded in 1850 by the late Dr. Ferdinand von Hiller, aided by the munificence of the art-loving burghers of this ancient city, celebrated the first Jubilee of its existence on May 10 and the four following days. Based upon similar lines to those followed by Mendelssohn on his founding the Leipzig Conservatory, it started in a very modest way with seventeen pupils and a staff of eight professors, of whom Hiller was the chief. Like the city of Cologne, which is said to be now six times as large as it was in 1850, the Conservatory, which, since the retirement of Hiller in 1884, Dr. Franz Wüllner has directed with consummate ability and enthusiam, has greatly enlarged its borders, and now numbers 500 pupils and a teaching staff of forty professors.

From a concise history of its career to the present date, compiled by Dr. Otto Klauwell, and issued under the title of 'Festschrift' by M. Dumont Schauberg, of Cologne—a book which all old students will gladly hail—we learn that no less than 2,837 students have passed through its ranks, and that a large proportion of them have attained eminence as composers, executants, or teachers.

Apart from sundry convivial meetings, which, in spite of the importance of the many speeches delivered, need not be specified, this Jubilee celebration comprised a 'Festakt' and four concerts. This so-called 'Festakt,' which opened the proceedings, commenced with the performance of a Fest-Ouverture by Hiller—a very lively, festive, and melodious work of long ago. It was immediately succeeded by a very lucid and much to the point speech by Herr Nasse, President of the Rhine Province, who, as representative of the Imperial Government, brought with him a number of royal orders and documents giving titles of distinction, which he distributed among the professors and managing committee of the Conservatory. He wound up with a 'Hoch' for the Kaiser, which was responded to by cheers and a performance of the National Anthem, the music of which is identical with our 'God save the Queen.' Dr. Wüllner, in response, followed with an excellent speech, in which he paid a warm tribute to Hiller's memory, and gave a succinct account of the past working of the Conservatory.

The local papers in their preliminary notices of this Jubilee had spoken of it as a 'family affair.' As it turned out, they were quite wrong in their prognostications, for it was attended from far and near by numerous deputations from kindred institutions, musical societies, &c., who brought with them wreaths and garlands, as well as more substantial offerings, by way of congratulation. Each delegate delivered a short speech, and the proceedings were brought to a close by a performance of the Introduction and concluding Fugal chorus of Franz Wüllner's imposing Te Deum. A banquet followed, at which there was more speechifying. In the evening of the same day a concert was given by the professors of the Conservatory, who, in a very laudable manner, exhibited themselves either as composers or executants—viz., eight as composers and twenty as executants, exclusive of orchestra and choir.

As the programmes of the four commemorative concerts included no less than forty-five different items, and as twenty-four composers and sixty-five executants were represented, it seems, except with a great expenditure of space, impossible to chronicle them all. Nor does this seem imperative, for in drawing up the several schemes it was doubtless Dr. Wüllner's aim to give prominence, within a limited space, to the greatest number of composers and executants who had received their education at the Conservatory. This led to the presentation of a large number of fragmentary items instead of complete works. Regarding the several programmes from an artistic and homogeneous point of view, this was to be regretted, but, under the circumstances, could hardly have been avoided. All were of undue length, and the first (by the professors), which lasted well nigh upon four hours, was the longest.

The Introduction and first movement of Handel's Organ Concerto in G minor served to display Professor F. W. Franke's digital skill, and also the blatant, brassy character of the organ, which seemed to be suffering from an over-pressure of wind. In the second and third movements of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat, Professor Seiss furnished an exemplary lesson of the manner in which Mozart should be treated. Among the other instrumental pieces which should not be passed over in silence, and to which ample justice was done by their several exponents, may be specified: Bach's Chaconne for violin (Professor Willy Hess); Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2, in A major (Herr M. van de Sandt); Max Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei' (Herr F. Grützmacher); and the Andante and Finale from Chr. Sinding's Violin Concerto (Herr Willy Seibert). Exhausted as I was by three hours' heavy listening, I am unable to speak in detail of a Concertstück for pianoforte by E. Heuser; sundry songs by E. Wolff and A. Kleffel; an Andante for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, and orchestra, by J. Rietz; and the first movement from a Symphony in F by E. Straesser. Of the vocal pieces, which included a Motet for double-chorus and solo quartet by F. Bölsche; a 'Ballade und Liebesduett' from an unperformed opera, 'Die nächtlichen Richter,' by O. Klauwell; 'Neuer Frühling,' for tenor solo, by A. von Othegraven; two songs for baritone and orchestra by H. Möskes, I am inclined, without disparaging the others, to award the palm to Dr. Otto Klauwell, whose work, above specified, is replete with romantic and dramatic feeling. The orchestration, somewhat on Wagner's lines, is no less commendable.

The second concert was devoted principally to compositions and performances by present students, who as soloists, both vocal and instrumental, and as orchestralists, made a very good show indeed. Among the instrumental soloists who distinguished themselves may be mentioned Herr W. Paffendorf in Bach's Toccata in C for organ; Herr L. Wassenhoven, in the first movement of Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2, in B flat; Herr E. Hoffzimmer, in the first movement of Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 1, in E minor; and especially Miss Dorothy Bridson, in the first and second movements of Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor. This young lady, a daughter of the late well-known English vocalist of the same name, has for four years studied under the direction of Professor Willy Hess, and on her return to England in July should certainly be welcomed as a second Maud MacCarthy. Like her she must certainly have been born with a violin in her arms. In settings of Psalm i. for eight-part chorus, by A. Sittard, and of Goethe's 'Das Göttliche,' for tenor solo, eight-part chorus, orchestra, and organ, it was interesting and satisfactory to note that so much attention is given to the study of eight-part vocal contrapuntal writing. Surely this is, or should be, the foundation of all music of the better class. Unfortunately, the tendency of the present day is to sacrifice everything to instrumentation. I noticed that this was the case with several vocal pieces with orchestral accompaniment that I listened to. The orchestral accompaniment seemed to be the primary factor and the cantilena was left to take care of itself. To young composers of such tendencies, listening to Wagner's Preislied from 'Die Meistersinger' (adequately rendered at a subsequent concert) must or should have furnished an excellent lesson; for here the cantilena and the accompaniment are of exquisite beauty and adequate to each other. This concert was brought to a most satisfactory termination by a fine performance of Beethoven's 'Choral Fantasia,' in which the pianoforte part was well maintained by Fräulein Elly Ney.

The third concert was devoted to chamber music, and included compositions and performances by former students. Among the instrumental works brought forward were a Pianoforte Quartet by Peter Fassbaender; a String Sextet by Bernhard Köhler; and Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, in their original form for two pianofortes. Among the instrumental soloists the first place is unquestionably due to Fräulein Renée Andriesse for her fine performance of Corelli's 'Folies d'Espagne,' which, consisting as it does of a series of serious variations, must have been the progenitor of Bach's 'Chaconne,' and is a work to be warmly commended to all violinists. Unaccompanied choral songs by Gustav Lazarus and Julius Spengel, vocal pieces by August Bungert, Schumann, P. E. Lange-Müller, Brahms, Schubert, and C. Löwe completed the scheme. The last four songs alluded to were rendered by Herr J. Meschaert in a manner which evoked the warmest ovation of the whole festival.

The concluding orchestral concert again included compositions and performances by former students. It opened with a symphonic poem, 'Es waren zwei Königskinder,' by Fritz Volbach. This is founded upon an old German folk-song, which was probably deemed so generally familiar that no explanation of its poetic intent was given in the programme. This did not matter, as it turned out to be an excellent example of 'programme music,' which one could listen to as music pure and simple without reference to its poetic meaning. Pianoforte concertos by G. Buths and D. Schäfer, with their composers as exponents, proved to be brilliantly tuneful works. Thanks to the excellent teaching of Professor Willy Hess, the Conservatory seems to be especially rich in violinists, as, besides others, he boasts of having no less than nine English pupils there. Fräulein Josephine Gerwing, the third lady violinist I have had to mention, did capital service in two movements from H. Vieuxtemps's Violin Concerto, No. 4, in D minor. Among the vocal pieces brought forward attention is specially due to E. H. Seyffardt's 'Thusnelda,' a very dramatic scene for alto solo and orchestra, which, melodious withal, was powerfully declaimed by Fräulein Therese Behr. J. Frischen's 'Athenischer Frühlingsreigen,' for soprano solo, female chorus, and orchestra, was a very lively and acceptable dance-song, to which liberal use of the tambourine seemed to impart a consistent and appropriate local colour. Herr E. Humperdinck, a former pupil of the Conservatory, who was present in spirit but not in the flesh, contributed a setting of Heine's remarkable poem, 'Die Wallfahrt nach Kevlaar,' for soli, chorus, and orchestra. Suggestively dramatic as it is, one cannot but feel regret that its insincere and anti-Catholic character should have inspired a composer to clothe it in music—good though that may be. 'Beatrice,' a scene for soprano solo and orchestra (J. Clauver), though otherwise good, seemed too overladen by the accompaniment. 'Der späte Winter,' a short cantata of a jubilant character, for chorus and orchestra, by C. J. Brambach, brought the musical proceedings to a jubilant end.

These were supplemented, on the evening of May 14, by a convivial meeting in the Grand Hall of the 'Philharmonie,' to which all past and present students of the Conservatory were freely invited, to partake of a cold collation, washed down with Rhine wine ad lib. The seriousness of the past four days was now relaxed. There was some amusing speechifying and, inter alia, an excellent performance of Romberg's 'Toy Symphony,' conducted by one of the professors in old German costume.

Some may now ask why should I have thought it worth the trouble to go to Cologne to listen to so much new music, as partially detailed above, composed and for the most part performed by artists unknown to fame, at least in England! Dear reader, it was part of the 'family affair.' If I may be allowed to obtrude my personality, I must say that when, on having taken my B.A. at Cambridge, I wanted to extend my musical studies in Germany, I was advised, by the late Sterndale Bennett, G. A. Macfarren, and my old master, Professor Walmisley, that I could not do better than place myself under the tuition of the late Dr. Ferd. von Hiller. Hence, in 1854, I entered myself as a student of what was then modestly called the 'Rheinische Musikschule,' but has since taken to itself the more lofty title of 'Conservatorium der Musik'—a distinction without a difference, except on the grounds that now instruction is provided in every possible branch of a musical education. I have always regarded the two years I spent at Cologne under Hiller, the ablest and most genial of teachers, as among the happiest of my life. As circumstances permitted, and as I felt in need of a spring outing to wash off the cobwebs of a long winter, I readily accepted the invitation I received to attend the Jubilee performances of what has now become one of the most important musical institutions of Germany. Except on the ground of having to listen to such a plethora of new music, I have nothing to regret. Everything went most smoothly. As a travelling companion I had the good fortune to have my old friend J. B. Boucher, who was the first English pupil of the Music School, in 1851. I was the second, in 1854. What most astonished us was the enormous progress which has been made of late years. This is principally due to the strenuous efforts of the present director, Dr. Franz Wüllner, who succeeded Hiller in 1884. A pedagogue, in the best sense of the term, at sixty-eight he is a man of extraordinary physique and relentless will. Broad-minded withal, as busts and scores of Wagner in his room lying side by side with portraits of the older masters sufficiently testified, he has brought his long experience as conductor in Munich and Dresden, &c., and as director of more than one educational musical institution, to bear upon the work he has now on hand in the most satisfactory and remarkable manner possible.

The performances all took place in the beautiful Gothic Hall of the Gürzenich, which, since its restoration some twenty years ago, for its beauty of appearance, and, what is more important, its acoustical excellence, may now probably be regarded as without a rival. On each occasion the concerts were attended by a very numerous and responsive audience. Almost every piece gave rise to a veritable ovation. I regretted nothing but the inordinate length of the programmes—an artistic shortcoming for which I have already accounted as unavoidable.

I think I picked up one or two wrinkles from which we might profit at home. (1.) As to the disposition of the orchestra and chorus. Here the band of about eighty performers extended from top to bottom, and occupied the middle block of the platform, with the choir of about 250 singers similarly arranged in blocks on each side of it. The result was that the choir had not to sing through or over the band, as but too often happens with us, when the band is in front and the choir behind. (2.) The conductor's rostrum was an unusually spacious and lofty one. At his left hand lay the score upon a desk illuminated by a shaded electric light. Thus his beat was never obscured, as but too often happens when the score lies on a desk between the conductor and his band. (3.) The programmes were printed upon the flimsiest of paper, and thus all rustling in turning over the leaves at a set moment was obviously avoided. Want of space forbids another word except—Floreat Colonia! C. A. B.

THE GREEK PLAY AT BRADFIELD COLLEGE.

In celebration of the Jubilee of the College, the first of five representations of the 'Agamemnon' of Æschylus took place on the afternoon of the 19th ult.

The Greek play at Bradfield has now become quite an institution of permanent interest, not only to scholars, but to the general public, as may be judged from the large crowd of distinguished and fashionable people who listened with evident pleasure to the performance. The open-air theatre, built of wood for acoustic purposes, is constructed on the model of those existing in the best times of the Attic drama, and is situated just outside the College grounds, in what was formerly a disused chalk-pit. The tiers of seats comprising the auditorium are cut out of the solid chalk and surmounted by masses of overhanging trees, creepers, and flowers, adding the charm of wild beauty to the scene.

The first open-air Greek play at Bradfield was the 'Antigone' of Sophocles, produced in 1890, under conditions identical with those of ancient times, the players and chorus all being either Bradfield masters or boys. The performers on the present occasion were restricted to boys now at the College, excepting the employment of a conductor, Hegemon, rendered necessary by the more modern character of the music. The result has been wonderfully successful, considering the enormous difficulties presented by what is perhaps the greatest of the plays of Æschylus. The acting of the boys was good and even throughout, the articulation of the words being clear and distinct. The chorus, flutes, and lyres performed admirably under the able leadership of Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams, the composer of the music of the choric songs, and who is responsible for the entire training and management of the musicians.

Mr. Abdy Williams is to be congratulated on the success of his efforts, though it is questionable whether the departure from the severity of the old Greek modes for the purposes of the Bradfield Theatre is altogether a wise proceeding. The modern major and minor modes have been substituted, and, to mitigate the monotony of a perpetual unison, two-part harmony is employed in places. The lyres are increased in compass and are six in number, three being made to play an octave higher than the rest by 'Magadisation,' an ancient device of placing the bridge in the middle instead of at the end of the strings. The auloi play throughout in two, three, or even four parts. A Leitmotive— representing Agamemnon is made use of when possible With resources so limited very little in the way of modern effects can be attempted. Monotony is unavoidable, and the choruses are very long, with no treble voices or treble instruments to brighten the effect. Modulation is almost impossible. The lyres are tuned to the scale of D major, the four auloi have a compass together of the lesser perfect system of the Greeks—

This is the scale given by the most complete of the four auloi found at Pompeii; but the ancient instrument contains all the semitones by means of a device for covering the holes which it would be impossible for schoolboys to learn to use.

The lyres were in the hands of members of the College orchestra, and were excellently handled. The auloi were entrusted to players of keyed instruments. The difficulty of keeping the pitch in singing is very great, though this was successfully maintained throughout the performance.

THE ROYAL OPERA.

Of all the happenings at Covent Garden since our last issue, the first Cycle of the 'Ring des Nibelungen' has been so much the most important that it seems but natural to depart from strict chronological order and discuss it first. A considerable departure was made from the arrangement tried in 1898, of fixing the hour of commencement so as to allow an interval for dinner of about an hour and a half. This year the performance began so as to allow only of intervals of twenty to twenty-five minutes. In the case of the 'Götterdämmerung,' the curtain rose at 6.30 and finally fell at midnight. Opinions seemed very much divided as to the comparative merits of the two schemes; and it may be worth while suggesting that when the next Cycle is undertaken, a plébiscite of subscribers be held to discover what the majority prefer. It is more than a merely external matter, for it is quite open to question whether performers or listeners can possibly do justice to such music—played in its entirety—without more than short intervals for four days in one week. Certainly Wagner did not intend that such a task should be set any artists—least of all an orchestra. And he would have laughed out of court the suggestion that, besides doing this, an orchestra should play two other operas during the week and rehearse daily, in order that spare time might not hang too heavily on their hands. And that the task is too heavy, in the circumstances, for any conductor, was almost conclusively proved. Herr Mottl cannot fairly be said to have answered all expectations—expectations based, not on hearsay, but on previous achievement. His comparative shortcomings were, however, in all probability, due more to untoward circumstances than to any deterioration in himself. Moreover, a conductor who is used to things as they are in Germany cannot but feel to some extent dispirited at having to cope with Covent Garden and its vagaries of stage management.

The Cycle began, on the 5th ult., with the 'Rheingold,' which was played without a break. It was a very good performance, in which Herr van Rooy, as Wotan, towered physically no less than vocally and dramatically above his colleagues. He, and Frau Schumann-Heink, who appeared as Erda, and Miss Susan Strong, to whom was allotted the small part of Freia, were able to prove that Wagner can be sung. Herr Friedrichs, as Alberich, was dramatically beyond praise, but sang—or, rather, did not sing—in true German fashion. The same may be said of Herr Breuer, as Mime. The three Rhine Maidens—Madame Sobrino, Fräulein Hieser, and Frau Schumann-Heink—were good, and the management allowed them to swim gracefully. On the following evening Herr van Rooy's magnificent singing and impressive acting would alone have sufficed to make the performance of 'The Walküre' memorable. Fräulein Ternina as Brünnhilde, though not so unquestionably great as in the two later music-dramas, was admirable. Her singing was musically beautiful and never failed in expressiveness, while her acting was superb. The only possible criticism is that she slightly over emphasised the merely womanly aspects of the character. Frau Gadski's Sieglinde is another superb picture of passion and suffering, both vocally and dramatically, and wholly satisfying to all save those who think (wrongly, in our opinion) that Sieglinde should be quite passive in the great duet with Siegmund. In the last act, where her part is short but all important, she rose to great heights. Herr Ernest Kraus, as Siegmund, showed himself possessed of a good stage presence and a fine voice—which he does not always use judiciously—and of plenty of energy as an actor. But he lacks the indescribable gift of charm. Herr Mottl's dragging of the tempi was too marked—especially in the most familiar passages—to allow the marvellous orchestral music to make its full effect. Nor did the playing have the saving virtue that the climaxes were thereby made broader, grander, more overpowering. Indeed, they more than once lacked passion. The eight Walküre sang very well. In 'Siegfried,' on the 7th ult., Herr Dippel appeared in the title-part, and his intelligence and zeal, together with his good voice, went far to make up for his lack of what, for want of a better word, may be termed authority in the rendering of the part. Nor did he seem quite to realise the poetry of the 'Waldweben' music, in which Fräulein Scheff sang admirably. Herr Breuer as Mime, though at moments too farcical, acted admirably and sang not at all. Frau Schumann-Heink sang ideally as Erda, and Herr van Rooy was magnificent once more as the Wanderer; but Fräulein Ternina's rendering of her share in the final duet was the one memorable point in the whole. In the 'Götterdämmerung,' on the 9th ult., Herr Kraus was again able and alert, but just missed great distinction as Siegfried. But it must be recorded, in fairness, that he had to call out directions to the scene shifters from the stage, which is not conducive to a poetic rendering of a difficult part. It is impossible to do justice in a few lines to the nobility, the artistic restraint, the power, and the poetry of Fräulein Ternina's Brünnhilde. It is difficult to know whether the intensity of her passion in the second act, or the dignity of her death song, showed the greater genius. In both her singing was flawless. Herr Blass was an adequate Hagen, and Herr Mühlmann an excellent Günther. Frau Reuss-Belce was a Teutonic Gutrune, and the Norns and Rhine Maidens were satisfactory. There were times when the orchestra played very finely. But still the faults of slowness and lack of grip were very marked. How far this is due to want of rehearsal—which can be remedied in the interval between the first and second Cycles—will be known before these lines are in print.

'Romeo and Juliet' was played on May 26, with M. Saléza and Madame Melba; and, on the 12th ult., for the rentrée of M. Jean de Reszke, who, though out of voice, still proved himself the greatest of living tenors in virtue of his indescribable charm of phrasing and powers of expression, combined with absolute beauty of vocalization.

Two performances of 'Tannhäuser' also deserve record. One was on May 30, when M. Plançon sang the part of the Landgrave. This was the first time, we believe, of his singing here in German. He was unapproachable as always and his German diction is admirable. Fräulein Ternina was also unapproachable as Elizabeth, and Herr Slezak was an earnest and sincere, if slightly unpolished, Tannhäuser. The other performance was on the 16th ult., when Herr Kraus took the title-part, and after not rising above mediocrity in the first two acts, gave a rendering of the Narrative in the last act which almost entitles him to be called a great artist. Herr van Rooy was Wolfram and acted with a dignity and sense of poetry which were a delight and sang superbly. Herr Mottl conducted on both nights and again his tempi were open to criticism.

M. Edouard de Reszke made his rentrée on the 18th ult. in the 'Huguenots,' as Marcel, and was not in his best voice; but he had great moments. The cast included M. Saleza, M. Plançon, Miss Edyth Walker, Madame Lucile Hill, and Mdlle. Miranda.

'Don Giovanni' was played on the 20th ult. Signor Scotti is a good Don, though hardly grand seigneur enough; and apart from a tendency to be too good natured, M. Edouard de Reszke is great as Leporello, and his art as a singer stood out quite by itself. M. Journet's impressive singing as the Commendatore deserves a word of praise. Signor de Lucia, Fräulein Scheff, Miss Macintyre, and Miss Susan Strong were the other artists.

It remains only to mention the performance of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' on the 14th ult., in which Frau Gadski was very successful as Santuzza. She sang admirably and gave a thoroughly convincing and consistently powerful rendering of the character. She slightly idealises the peasant girl, but that is not altogether a fault. Herr Dippel was satisfactory as Turiddu.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Lovers of Mozart were somewhat disappointed at the sixth concert of the season, on the 14th ult., when the great master's Pianoforte Concerto in A was performed. No one can question the wonderful capabilities of Herr Moriz Rosenthal as a pianist of the highest attainment; but virtuosity and phenomenal technique are by no means the only qualifications necessary to become a true interpreter of Mozart. In the first and last movements Herr Rosenthal allowed his facility of finger to literally run away with the music, with the result that those old-world passages were deprived of much of their dignified grace and Mozartian charm. Moreover, the phrasing—a feature of great import in the music of the master-melodist—was not above reproach, and additions were made to the text which were unwarranted. The distinguished pianist was more in his element later on in the evening, when he gave a stupendous rendering of Liszt's 'Don Juan' Fantasia. He wisely declined an encore.

The concert opened with Mr. W. H. Thorley's well-written and interesting 'Macbeth' symphonic poem—an excellent work which was well received, as was also its composer at the close of a capital performance. Other contributions to the concert were Wagner's 'Meistersinger' Overture and the air 'Nel rimirar,' from 'Tannhäuser,' sung by Signor Mario Ancona. The predominant key of the evening's music was A, even if its entire execution was not absolutely A1. Beethoven's mighty creation in that key (of A) was, however, splendidly played, under Mr. Cowen's spirited and ever alertful conductorship. The interpretation of the final section quite merited the late Sir George Grove's definition, 'literally prodigious,' even if it did not altogether remind one, as it did the genial knight, of Carlyle's hero Ram Dass, who 'had fire enough in his belly to burn up the whole world.' By the way, it was hardly just to the memory of Sir George Grove to reprint, from an old Crystal Palace book, his analysis of the Beethoven symphony in an unrevised form.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

A wonderful young violinist, Johann Kubelik by name, made his first appearance in England at St. James's Hall, on the 18th ult., at the last of the three concerts constituting Dr. Richter's short season. Fine orchestral playing and superb interpretations of the classics are very well in their way, but what can they avail with a London audience against a fiddler with a phenomenally developed technique, a dead-sure intonation, a beautiful tone, and an uncanny way of playing the most wonderful difficulties? Johann Kubelik was a great success, and deservedly so. We do not blame him for not playing one of the four classical 'test' concertos by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Bruch, or Brahms. At present he revels in surmounting seemingly impossible technical difficulties. As he grows older he may, and we hope will, revel equally in unravelling the beauties and depths that lie hidden in the aforesaid masters' works. The Concerto in D by Paganini (Op. 6), as arranged by Professor Wilhelmj, furnishes almost a supreme test of an executant's technique, and Kubelik's easy mastery over its difficulties was simply wonderful. His 'clean' playing of some rapid scale passages in tenths especially excited the admiration of the violinists present.

With the exception of Tschaïkowsky's Fourth Symphony, already made familiar here by Mr. Henry J. Wood, and Berlioz's 'Rob Roy' Overture, lately produced by Mr. Manns at the Crystal Palace, the master-conductor contented himself with well-beloved favourites, including Beethoven's Sixth and Seventh and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphonies. To criticise the performances is unnecessary. When Dr. Richter becomes the inspired interpreter of a great master's inspirations he does give us the real, great Beethoven. And then we say to ourselves once more: There is only one Beethoven, and Richter is his Prophet!

YSAYE CONCERT.

The extraordinary distinctiveness of M. Ysaye's violin playing has of late so frequently been described and commented upon in these columns that notice of the concluding concert of the series, which took place on May 31, at Queen's Hall, would be unnecessary were it not that two works of artistic character were heard on this occasion for the first time in London. These were a symphonic poem for orchestra, entitled 'Viviane,' by the late Ernest Chausson, and M. Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Fantaisie Russe' for solo violin and orchestra. The former has for its poetic basis the legend of 'Vivien and Merlin.' The composer has frankly written on the score the incidents he set himself to illustrate, and the music unpretentiously follows the programme with a clearness that makes it easily comprehended. The themes are pretty, the orchestration dainty, and the work in its entirety is decidedly pleasing; but 'only that and nothing more.' The musical interest of 'Fantaisie Russe' lies in its use of national folk-songs, which are attractively treated, and with more refinement than is commonly met with in the writings of M. Rimsky-Korsakoff. Both works undoubtedly suffered from being preceded by Bach's rarely-heard Fourth Concerto in G for violin solo, two flutes, and strings, a magnificent specimen of what genius can accomplish by simple means.

HERR ERNST VON DOHNÁNYI.

On May 28 Herr Ernst von Dohnányi gave a pianoforte recital, at St. James's Hall, with a very solid programme. He began with Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 110, in which he showed no undue leanings to modernity, but a keen appreciation of Beethoven's music. Completely imbued with the modern spirit, on the other hand, was his rendering of Liszt's B minor Sonata in one movement. It is, perhaps, the most interesting of Liszt's pianoforte works, and contains music full of passion and beauty, though some may object that it is grandiose rather than great. Playing like that of Herr von Dohnányi makes one incline to the latter view. In Schubert's A minor Sonata he showed admirable restraint and reverence and a great sense of beauty, while his playing of Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Handel was superb. Altogether the gifted young pianist is rapidly approaching artistic maturity by the right path, and resisting the temptations which beset an artist whose immense technical powers would enable him to earn easy popular successes at the expense of true musicianship.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Considerable talent and technical skill were shown by the pupils at their orchestral concert on the 21st ult., at the Queen's Hall. Florence Reeves played with musical touch and nice taste in Hiller's Pianoforte Concerto in F sharp minor, and Winifred Christie showed great promise in her share in two movements from Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat. Spencer Dyke, who attacked the solo violin part of Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor, began nervously, but greatly improved with progress in the work. The most successful of the vocalists were Kate Holbrook and W. R. Maxwell, the voice and style of the latter being particularly pleasing. A scene for recitation, chorus, and orchestra, entitled 'The Burial in the Forest,' in which Kate Holbrook and Wilton Cole were the speakers, was a specially meritorious feature of the evening, the music, by Adam von Ahn Carse (Macfarren Scholar), being particularly good. Another very creditable student composition was a 'Hunting' Overture, by Neville Flux. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

An orchestral concert was given by the students on the 22nd ult. The programme opened with Schubert's Funeral March (appropriately chosen in memory of the first Director of the College, the late Sir George Grove), followed by Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture (No. 1); and the Symphony was that of Glazounow (No. 6) in C minor. These were all admirably played under the direction of Professor Villiers Stanford. Brahms's Violin and Violoncello Concerto in A minor (Op. 102), the solo parts played by Philip Lewis and R. Purcell Jones, received an excellent interpretation, resulting in a double recall for the soloists. The vocal contributions were 'Abscheulicher! wo eilst du hin,' from 'Fidelio,' by Cicely Gleeson-White, and a Romance, ''Neath the almond blossom,' from Weber's 'Euryanthe,' by Walter Hyde, the first-named singing very sympathetically.

'ATHALIE.'

The first performance in England of Racine's 'Athalie' in a dramatic form, with Mendelssohn's music, took place at St. George's Hall on the 20th ult. The event is one that demands record in these columns, although the production is more dramatically than musically interesting. The version used was that of the late William Bartholomew, familiar to concert-goers; but with certain alterations and additions taken from the English translation by Mr. R. Bruce Boswell. These amendments and interpolations decidedly increased the dramatic interest, notably the scene between Mathan, the high priest of Baal, and his friend Nabal. Mendelssohn's music was completed between 1843 and 1845, and produced at Potsdam, December 1, 1845. It was first performed in England, with the original French text, at Windsor Castle, on New Year's Day, 1847. Two years later, on March 12, 1849, it was given for the first time in England (Bartholomew's version) by the Philharmonic Society. Although highly effective in the concert-room, 'Athalie' is still more so when performed as intended by the composer, especially when so excellently interpreted as it was on this occasion by the pupils and orchestra of the London Organ School, under the direction of Dr. Yorke Trotter, the War March of the Priests in particular profiting by connection with spectacle. The chief solo parts were admirably rendered by Miss Daisy Campbell and Miss May Coleman, the singing of the first-named being remarkably good. Dramatically the chief exponents merit great praise. Mr. Charles Fry's embodiment of Joad was instinct with impressiveness and individuality, and the tableaux and completeness of the performance showed him to be a stage manager of exceptional ability. No less convincing were the impersonations of Miss Olive Kennett (who gave an intensely powerful impersonation of the Queen), Miss Elsie Fogerty, and Messrs. Edwin Webster and Arthur Fayne (whose Mathan was intensely dramatic). The dresses, specially designed, were most picturesque and remarkable for their historical accuracy. A second performance was given on the 22nd ult.

We much regret that in our report of the Feis Ceoil proceedings (p. 402 of our last issue) the names of two ladies who played in the string quartet which won the first prize were inadvertently given as 'the Misses Butt,' instead of 'the Misses Brett.' Honour to whom honour is due!

LONDON CONCERTS.

Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, on the 13th ult., at St. James's Hall, gave another of his instructive and interesting concert-lectures on 'Chamber music of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries.' As on previous occasions, there was exhibited a very fine collection of now obsolete instruments. Their peculiarities of construction were explained, and, whenever opportunity occurred, their merits were described with loving minuteness and a zeal which did not shrink from favourable comparison with their modern successors. Mr. Dolmetsch and his company have now acquired a command of these old instruments that invests the performances of the music of the same period with considerable musical value, for undoubtedly it is only under the conditions provided by Mr. Dolmetsch that a just estimation of the music of our forefathers can be gained. When once the ear has become accustomed to the comparatively feeble tone of these instruments, there is something very soothing in their low sweet voices, which fully accounts for the epithet of the 'scolding violin' being applied to the successors of the viols. The most interesting pieces played were a 'Fantazie' and 'Allmaine' for six viols by Martin Pierson, a 'Pavan' and 'Galliard' for the virginals by William Byrd, and a 'Jigg' for three viols and a cithren by Dr. Charles Coleman, the last-named instrument being described as the banjo of the seventeenth century! Pieces of later date by Christopher Simpson, Henry Purcell, Scarlatti, Handel, and Bach were included in an admirable selection, which was attractively varied by songs accompanied on the lute.

A miscellaneous concert was given by Mr. Vivian Bennetts (principal tenor of St. Andrew's, Wells Street), at St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 12th ult. Mr. Bennetts, who was in excellent voice, gave very fine renderings of the 'Miserere' scene in 'Il Trovatore' (Miss Ethel Pender Cudlip singing the part of Leonora and an excellent choir of male voices assisting) and of 'Salve dimora' ('Faust'). The concert-giver had also secured the services of Miss Ailsa Landells, Miss Emily Rasey, Mr. Tom Daniell, and Mr. W. Llewellyn (vocalists); Miss Dorothea Walenn (violin), Miss May Mukle (violoncello), Miss Miriam Timothy (harp), Miss Russell (pianoforte), and Mr. C. W. Wreford (reciter). Miss Olive Kennett and Mr. Charles Fry gave two duologues, the last-named artist also contributing an interesting item in Murger's 'La Ballade du désespéré,' with Bemberg's music.

The Church Sunday School Choir annual festival at the Crystal Palace, on May 26, brought together representatives of about a hundred metropolitan and suburban schools. At the afternoon concert, anthems, part-songs, and hymns, including Maunder's Magnificat, Costa's Morning Prayer, Muller's 'All ye nations,' and Mackenzie's 'The Newquay Fisherman's Song,' were sung with spirit and precision, under the direction of Mr. Harry Morgan and Mr. R. J. Mines (assistant-conductor). Mr. F. W. Belchamber was at the organ. In a preceding competition of choirs, that of St. George's, Battersea, proved the victor; whilst Holy Trinity, Blackheath Hill, and St. Matthew's, Fulham, took second and third places respectively.

A series of Chamber concerts, two of which took place on the 7th and 19th ult. (the third being announced for the 30th ult.), have been given by Miss Katharine Goodson (pianoforte), Miss Maud Powell (violin), and Signor Rubio (violoncello). The programmes, which are of considerable interest, included Beethoven's Trio in B flat, Schütt's Suite for pianoforte and violin (Op. 44), Handel's Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violoncello, Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99), Tschaïkowsky's Trio in A minor (Op. 50), and Schubert's Fantasia in C for pianoforte and violin. Each of the artists named appeared in turn as soloists on their respective instruments, one at each concert.

The Kensington Amateur Harmonic Society provided an interesting programme at its concert given on May 29, at the Philbeach Hall. It included Bach's cantata 'Jesu, priceless treasure' (given with string and organ accompaniment), Stanford's 'Revenge,' 'Sumer is icumen in,' Tomkins's madrigal 'See the Shepherd's Queen,' and Stanford's 'Corydon, arise.' Miss Ethel Barns (violin) and Mr. Arthur Williams (violoncello) were the solo instrumentalists, and Mr. Cyril Miller, who conducted, is to be warmly commended for the admirable manner in which he had trained the choir.

The South Hampstead Orchestra marked its fifteenth annual concert by an excellent selection at St. James's Hall, on May 29. As conductor, Mrs. Julian Marshall had reason to be proud of her force, largely consisting of young ladies. The spirit of Brahms's first Symphony in C minor was admirably caught, and the performance of Tschaïkowsky's graceful Suite in G (No. 3) was throughout instinct with taste and effect. Sullivan's imposing Overture to 'Macbeth' was also included in the programme. Vocal pieces were acceptably contributed by Miss Beatrice Spencer.

A very successful concert was given by Miss Emma d'Egremont, at the Salle Erard, on the 13th ult., when she gave a dramatic interpretation of Schubert's "Erl-König" and sang a "Spanisches Lied," by Eckert, with remarkable charm of expression. Her introduction of a new patriotic song, 'A Soldier's Wife,' by Willem Coenen, accompanied by the composer, was also received with much favour. Mr. Coenen played with his usual skill solos by Scarlatti and Rubinstein, and valuable assistance was given by Mr. Jack Robertson, Miss Maud Powell, and Mrs. Brown Potter.

Mr. Landon Ronald, at his concert on the 18th ult., at St. James's Hall, introduced several new songs which attested to his skill and artistic aims. Those entitled 'Dew on the rose and lily' and 'An April birthday' are very charming, the latter in particular being a fascinating example of vivacious and delicate musicianship. Another, also new, entitled 'The Hag,' is a vigorous ditty concerning a traditional personage given to careering on a broomstick, which, as set forth by Mr. David Bispham, acquired dramatic significance.

The excellent results to be obtained from mixed amateur orchestras were well shown by the concert given by Mr. Joseph Ivimey, at St. James's Hall, on May 31. On that occasion commendable interpretations were secured of several familiar orchestral works, and of a pleasing new overture, in the somewhat unusual form of a prelude and fugue, entitled 'Lever de Rideau' (Op. 4), by Mr. John W. Ivimey.

Miss Leonora Ellerton gave a concert at Steinway Hall, on the 13th ult., when she sang a song from Gounod's 'Reine de Saba' and Schira's 'Sognai' with much taste. The concert-giver was assisted by Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Griffiths Percy, Mr. Percival Garratt (pianoforte), Mr. Rohan Clensy (violin), and Miss Rosalie Notrelle, who was particularly successful in her monologue, 'A Frenchwoman's story.'

CHAMBER CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

The Herbert Sharpe Trio began the second Chamber concert of its third series at Queen's (Small) Hall, on May 29, with the first performance in England of a Pianoforte Trio in C (Op. 59) by Signor Giuseppe Martucci, one of the very few Italian composers who devote their talents to serious music for the concert-room. The trio has four movements, in all of which command of contrapuntal resource is very notable. The themes lack distinction but are cleverly developed, and the music is well knit. The most pleasing number is the Scherzo, after which, in point of attractiveness, may be placed the subsequent Andante. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Sharpe, Ferdinand Weist Hill, and Tennyson Werg.

The first of a series of three Chamber concerts given by Miss Muriel Elliot took place on the 13th ult., at the Salle Erard, and clearly demonstrated that this talented young English pianist is making most satisfactory progress in her art. This was chiefly shown in her interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 110), the romantic passages in which were rendered with notable delicacy. Her abilities were further displayed in the same composer's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello in C (Op. 102, No. 1) and in the Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 1), the string parts in the latter work being admirably played by Signor Simonetti and Mr. Whitehouse.

Mr. B. Hollander, the Dutch violinist, gave, on the 13th ult., at the Salle Erard, a Chamber concert entirely consisting of his own compositions. The instrumental works submitted were a string quartet (Op. 20), a pianoforte trio (Op. 27), and a septet for pianoforte, strings, and two horns (Op. 28). Of these productions the last-named proved the most pleasing, the part-writing being skilfully planned and the style clear and unpretentious. Four well written songs, severally named 'Rest,' 'Summum Bonum,' and 'Good night,' were charmingly rendered by Miss Edith Clegg, a young vocalist of exceptional promise.

An interesting vocal recital was given by Mr. Charles Tree, at St. James's Hall, on the 15th ult. Mr. Tree possesses a powerful baritone voice of pleasant quality. His programme included songs by Schubert, Brahms, Schumann, and several modern composers, his most successful efforts perhaps being in Four Songs by Frances Allitsen. Miss Adèle Verne assisted as solo pianist.

The Baronesse von Codelli, who gave her first violin recital on May 30, at the Steinway Hall, is an executant of whom we shall probably hear more in London concert rooms. Her style reminds one of that of Señor Sarasate, the tone of the upper notes being remarkably pure and silvery in quality, and her execution being clear and brilliant.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, May 17.

THE CINCINNATI FESTIVAL.

The musical season of 1899-1900 in New York having come to an end, your correspondent attended the fourteenth triennial May Festival at Cincinnati, which filled the days from the 8th to the 12th inclusive. Seven concerts were given, five in the evening and two on the afternoons of Thursday and Saturday, all under the direction of Mr. Theodore Thomas, who has directed the artistic fortunes of these affairs ever since their beginning in 1873. The pre-eminence of the Cincinnati festivals among the musical meetings of America is pretty generally understood in England, I believe. They are not modelled on the English plan, nor did the incentive for their creation come from the English gatherings. When he conceived the first, Mr. Thomas's plan was something like that of the festivals of the German men's choruses, 'The Sängerfest,' which have been held periodically in various cities of the country since 1849, Cincinnati being their birthplace. For the Sängerfest of 1869 a large wooden hall had been built, which the merchants of the city preserved for exposition purposes. Aided by a local committee of public spirited citizens, Mr. Thomas, who at the time was visiting the principal cities of the country with his New York orchestra, planned a meeting of the singing societies of Cincinnati and the West. The first festival, in 1873, had a choir thus constituted of 1,000 voices, and proved so successful that preparations for a second festival, in 1875, were at once begun. This meeting aroused still greater enthusiasm, and, the initiative coming from Reuben Springer (a retired merchant who contributed a large sum to the object), a large and ornate music hall, built of brick and stone, took the place of the temporary wooden structure. Then a Festival Association was incorporated, and under its auspices a festival has been given biennially ever since, the year 1878 being substituted for 1877 to make the building of the hall possible. The festival of 1880, however, was the last in which the services of singing societies from other cities than Cincinnati were enlisted.

Encouraged (and, I fear, misled) by the tremendous financial success which attended the first festival given in the new hall, the management organised a permanent festival choir of local singers. This was done in obedience to Mr. Thomas's wishes, who hoped thus to better the choral work at the meetings. He argued, correctly enough, that five hundred chosen choristers, who would devote several months of the intermediate as well as festival year to the study of the festal compositions, would accomplish better things than would a choir made up of separate societies brought together for a few days before the festival. From 1880 to 1886, indeed, the plan produced notable results, but thereafter it grew to be more and more difficult to secure good voices and keep up the interest of the singers. The fact is, the affair had become too exclusively local. Save in their social aspect, an aspect that plays a large and somewhat amusing rôle even to-day, the festivals were merely a series of concerts by a foreign orchestra and foreign solo singers, with assistance from a local choir. The interest in them of the cities, towns, and villages of Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky dwindled away, and the treasurer has never, since 1880, contemplated more than a small fraction of the balance of $32,000 which he found in his exchequer after the festival of 1880.

As a rule, the meetings have been profitable, but there have also been deficits. This was the case with that just ended, though the receipts were probably in the neighbourhood of $45,000. Mr. Thomas is an expensive concert-giver. His orchestra consisted of his Chicago band, augmented to over one hundred, and he ignored the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, which is maintained at a great sacrifice by an association of music-lovers, who believe that an annual series of Symphony concerts given fortnightly during the season is more likely to advance musical culture than a week of mixed concerts every two years. But that is a local quarrel with which my readers can have no concern. It is more to the purpose to note that the policy which reduced the interest of the outside communities to a minimum, also worked serious impairment to the choral element of the festivals. After 1886 the efficiency of the choir grew less year after year, until the festival chorus was no better than a number of the larger singing societies of the East. The falling off was chiefly in the men's voices, the tenor contingent in the choir of 1894 and 1896 numbering less than forty in a chorus of nearly 400. Energetic efforts were made to remedy this state of affairs two years ago and continued again this year, resort being had to the device, which, I fear, is not unknown on the other side of the Atlantic, of paying for the needed voices. In consequence of this, and a great deal of zealous labour on the part of Mr. Thomas and his choirmaster, Mr. Glover, the choir sang better this year than it had done for fourteen years, and Mr. Thomas's unaccountably rapid tempi being forgiven (he seemed possessed of the demon of haste all through the week), the choral features of the festival may be set down as notably successful.

The works sung were Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' Villiers Stanford's Ode 'East to West,' Brahms's 'A German Requiem,' the Finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Berlioz's Te Deum, and the last scene from Wagner's 'Parsifal.' This last number had been set down as the closing number of the festival scheme, but at the last it appeared a little too lugubrious for a finale, and the 'Judex crederis' and instrumental march from the Te Deum were repeated. It was a meretricious ending, but it added to the hilarity of the week, and it is a spirit of hilarity rather than of serious musical enjoyment which the pleasure-loving people of Cincinnati cultivate during festival week. Dr. Stanford's Ode had its first American performance on this occasion, though originally designed for the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893.

The principal solo singers at the festival were Madame Sembrich, Madame Schumann-Heink, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Bispham. Mr. Davies sang for the fourth time at a Cincinnati festival, and was acclaimed with great enthusiasm, which his work deserved. I have never heard him sing better in any single number than he sang in all the music allotted to him in the scheme. So long as he is willing to answer the call of the directors there is not likely to be a change in his department at Cincinnati. Mesdames Sembrich and Schumann-Heink also won their way to the hearts of the people, though most of their music was outside the proper repertory of a choral festival. The former sang the soprano solo in Brahms's masterpiece with great dignity and finish, and struggled bravely with her fellows in the Beethoven Symphony; but the duty for which she had been engaged was to put glittering moments into the miscellaneous programmes of the two afternoon concerts. With Mr. Davies she sang on the following Monday at the first concert of a three days' festival at Louisville, Kentucky. This festival was one of a series whose initiation was due to the enterprise of George Stewart, of Boston, who carries an orchestra and a number of solo singers through the States, South and West, every Spring, and is proving to be a potent factor in creating a love for high-class music.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Music has now left the concert-room for the parks, courts, and alleys, and while the larger public is being catered for there is nothing demanding notice here.

On May 30 there was a grand oratorio at the Oratory in Hagley Road, Edgbaston, in honour of the Feast of St. Philip Neri. The subject of the oratorio was 'The House of God,' and music from Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Gounod, Cherubini, and Rossini was utilised in the compilation. Three Motets by Mr. William Sewell, the Oratory organist, were also performed.

On Sunday, the 17th ult., a new Mass for voices, organ, and strings was produced at the Church of St. Dunstan, King's Heath. It was the composition of Mr. J. W. Hayden, organist of the church.

On Saturday, the 9th ult., the Musical matinées at the Society of Artists were brought to a close. Mr. Oscar Pollack, the musical director, has again brought forward a number of young local performers, and the programmes have been very good. The terminal concerts at the Midland Institute School of Music were held during the week commencing on the 11th ult. Some excellent performances of chamber music were given, and a number of violinists and vocalists displayed their powers before their friends. Mr. Granville Bantock, conductor of the concerts at New Brighton Tower, has been offered and has accepted the post of principal of the school, and will enter upon his duties in September.

The unexpected and lamented death of Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, on the 11th ult., to which reference is made in another column, is nothing less than a calamity to the city. The rehearsals for the festival had been progressing since April 6, and Dr. Heap had conducted every one of them up to the 1st ult. The festival committee in their difficulty approached Mr. Stockley, who, having occupied the post for forty years, retired from the conductorship of the Festival Choral Society in 1895. Mr. Stockley at once responded to the wishes of the committee, who are now relieved from a position of no slight embarrassment.

The latest Sullivan opera, 'The Rose of Persia,' was introduced to the Birmingham public at the Prince of Wales Theatre on the 18th ult. The D'Oyly Carte Company is a fairly good one, a Birmingham young lady, Miss Ada Davies, filling the title-part. The performance was good and the work was well received, but it is not likely to attain the success reached by its predecessors.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

During the academical year just concluded, Dr. Mann and his choir have given 'The Messiah' and 'Judas Maccabæus,' the latter at their 'Festival Service,' in King's Chapel, on the 7th ult.

The University Musical Society has given its usual series of six Wednesday Popular concerts. The artists appearing have been the Gompertz, Arbos, and Willy Hess quartets, Herr Dohnányi, Messrs. Leonard Borwick and Plunket Greene, Miss Fillunger, and Miss Louise Phillips. The Society has also given three choral and orchestral concerts, of which the first two were devoted to 'St. Paul,' in December, and the 'May Queen,' with an amateur orchestra, in March.

The Cambridge University Musical Society gave its annual May term concert, before a respectably large audience, on the 5th ult. The concert opened with Brahms's Symphony in D (No. 2). Coleridge-Taylor's excellent cantata 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' followed, and a good performance was secured. The tenor solo, 'Onaway! awake, beloved!' was well sung by Mr. Gregory Hast, who also contributed 'O vision entrancing,' from Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda.' The programme concluded with a good performance of Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, in which Mr. T. H. Moore was the pianist.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

No more delightful concert has been given in Dublin than the song recital, on the 1st ult., by Mr. Denis O'Sullivan. Signor Esposito played two brilliant pianoforte solos, Beethoven's Sonata and Liszt's Rhapsodie, both in C sharp minor, and the rest of the programme was composed of songs of all descriptions sung by Mr. O'Sullivan. It would be difficult to say whether Mr. O'Sullivan sang best the operatic selections of Boïto and Ambroise Thomas, the Lieder of Brahms, Schumann, and Cornelius, the dramatic ballads of Löwe, or the folk-songs of Ireland. The versatility of Mr. O'Sullivan's expression is something quite unique, and the dramatic and cantabile styles of singing seem to be equally congenial to him.

A benefit concert to Signor Papini was given in the last week of May, at which the violinist played, with a reminiscence of his former style, Mendelssohn's Concerto and two solo pieces. The old charm of tone and phrasing was there. He is an artist to the last, and can give points to the many violinists who compete for popular favour in Dublin at present. His ill health is much to be regretted.

The June concert by the pupils of the Royal Irish Academy of Music was, as usual, a great success. Of the performances we would commend the singing of Miss Lucy Brady (a Feis Ceoil gold medalist, by the way), a very young lady who possesses a more than usually beautiful voice, and Miss Annie Lord, whose fine performance of Liszt's Fantasia on Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' was quite out of the common order of pupils' performances. The school of pianoforte playing at the Academy has never had a finer exponent than Miss Lord, whose technique is equal to many of the best solo pianists of the day.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The fourth triennial Festival of the Diocesan Church Choral Association attracted a large congregation to Norwich Cathedral on May 30, when nearly 1,000 voices were gathered from all parts of the diocese. Dr. S. S. Wesley's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F and Sullivan's anthem, 'Hearken unto Me, My people,' were sung by the choirs with excellent effect. At the close of the service proper came Part I. of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' in which the voices were admirably supported by an orchestra of about forty performers. This ambitious attempt was not only fully justified, but when it is said that half the choirs present took part in the choral numbers with marked success, it will be seen that musical knowledge and intelligence is more prominent in our agricultural district than has been generally supposed. The solos were sung by Masters Hollis, Steward, Taylor, and Suggars, Mr. S. Hemmings, and Mr. Daines. Mr. Sawford Dye, Mr. J. H. Brockbank, Mr. H. J. Brooks, and Mr. H. Thouless assisted in several of the concerted numbers. The greatest credit is due to Dr. Bates, organist of the Cathedral, who conducted, for the skilful way in which he had trained the choirs. Mr. A. J. Robinson was an efficient organist.

An attractive programme was submitted by the Wymondham Musical Society to its patrons on May 23, Cowen's cantata 'St. John's Eve' being the principal feature. Miss Mildred Rix, Mrs. R. V. Regner, Mr. H. J. Sawford Dye, and Mr. Broughton Black were the soloists. Mr. A. S. Wilde conducted, and Miss Corkett and Mr. J. T. Gowen presided at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The only musical event to be chronicled in this month's letter is the excellent rendering of 'Elijah' by the combined Cathedral choirs, under Mr. Collinson's direction, in St. Mary's Cathedral, on May 31. The choruses went with abundant spirit and Mr. Gledhill sang the tenor solos in his usual quiet and refined style. A very good orchestra did more than average justice to the accompaniments, and the large congregation gave unmistakable if silent proof that they appreciated the privilege of such a rendering in such suitable surroundings.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THIS is the great term for College concerts here as a rule, but this year, as a large number of Oxford men are away fighting on the African veldt, and as the 'casualty list' for this University city has proved an unusually heavy one, there has not been so much activity in matters musical as in the corresponding term of former years.

To begin with the music during the 'Eights Week': On May 27 Balliol gave an orchestral concert, excellent in every way, the conductor on this occasion being Mr. Alfred Gibson, in the absence of Mr. Farmer, who is still unwell. The next concert was given by Exeter two days later, and it seemed a pity that the chief features of the programme—namely, Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony—should have been precisely the same as at Balliol. We know it was an accident, but still such accidents should be avoided.

Next, on the 1st ult., came Queen's, with a concert on a large scale, commencing with Beethoven's Second Symphony, conducted by Dr. Iliffe, and, amongst other things, two new cantatas for male-voice choir—'Trafalgar,' by Mr. Gerard F. Cobb, of Cambridge, the writer of many popular works, and 'The Druids,' by Mr. W. Claxton. These were conducted by their respective composers, and their marked difference in style afforded pleasant contrast, that of Mr. Cobb being notable for a singular tunefulness and charm, while that of Mr. Claxton aimed more at solidity and dignity, quite in consonance with the old-world flavour of the libretto. Both cantatas included tenor and bass solos, capitally given by Mr. J. Reed, of Cambridge, and Mr. A. F. Ferguson, of Oxford. A lull in matters musical then occurred till the 21st ult., when Keble gave a thoroughly good concert, conducted by Dr. Harwood, the principal pieces being Gade's 'Erl-King's Daughter' and Professor Sir Hubert Parry's Ode 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

The Professor of Music, Sir Hubert Parry, delivered his terminal lecture in the Sheldonian, on the afternoon of the 13th ult., on 'The conditions of the development of the style of pure choral music.' Owing to there being several garden parties on the same afternoon the attendance was not so large as it should have been. This is to be regretted, as the lecture was one of great interest.

Before closing this brief notice, two other concerts, given in the Town Hall, should be mentioned. First, that given under the auspices of the 'Musical Club' as a public concert, on May 9, and second, that by the English Ladies' Orchestral Society, on the 9th ult. The former, devoted to Chamber music, had for its chief features Brahms's String Quintet in G (Op. 111) and Mozart's String Quintet in E flat (No. 5), the exponents being Herr J. Kruse and Messrs. Schilsky, Ferir, Tomlinson, and Walenn. Two works more representative of their composers could hardly have been chosen, while their interpretation was in every respect admirable. Herr Kruse also contributed a violin solo, the ever-welcome Chaconne of Bach.

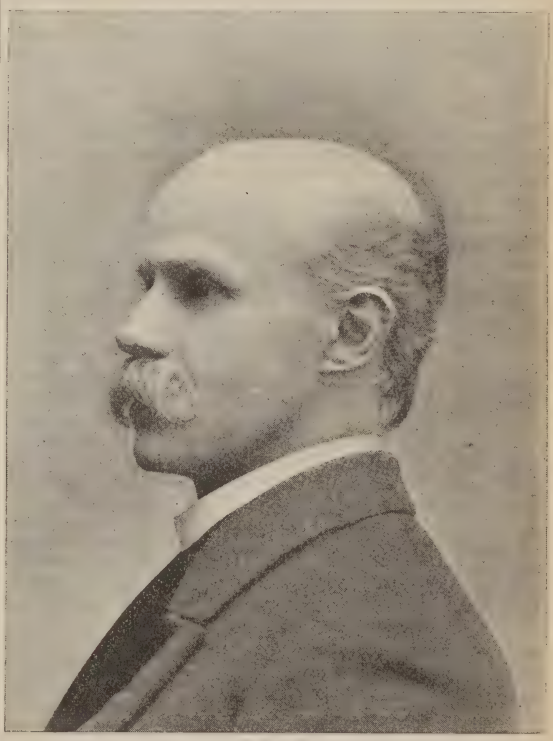
The English Ladies' Orchestral Society—which, it is interesting to note, has now grown to a very large and important one—gave a capital rendering of Sir Hubert Parry's English Symphony—in fact, in such a manner that it is no wonder that the genial composer, who conducted the performance, appeared to be highly pleased with the interpretation of his work. Handel's Concerto in G minor for hautboy and strings was also given, Miss Leila Bull playing the solo part with great neatness and accuracy. Several songs in various styles were kindly contributed by the Countess Valda Gleichen. It is now seven years since this Society was formed; it has given many concerts in various parts of the country, of which the proceeds (after paying expenses), amounting to £1,052, have been given to various charities, and more especially hospitals. Mr. J. S. Liddle, the conductor, may justly be proud of his forces, for they are capable of thoroughly effective work.

THE 162nd anniversary festival dinner of the Royal Society of Musicians took place, on the 15th ult., at the Hôtel Métropole, under the presidency of the Hon. Alban Gibbs, M.P. During the evening contributions to the amount of £700 were announced by the Treasurer, Mr. W. H. Cummings.

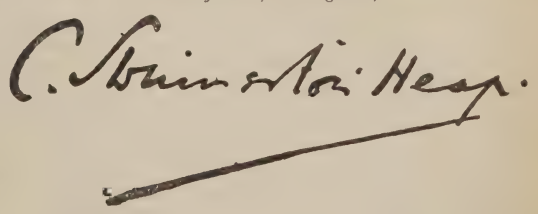
OBITUARY.

DR. SWINNERTON HEAP.

WE much regret to record the death of CHARLES SWINNERTON HEAP, chorus-master of the Birmingham Festival, which took place at his residence, 22, Clarendon Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham, on the 11th ult. A native of Birmingham, where he was born on April 10, 1847, Dr. Heap sang as a soprano in the chorus of the Festival of 1858. He became organist of Queen's College, Birmingham, when he was twelve years old, and was subsequently articled for three years to the late Dr. E. G. Monk, organist of York Minster. But before his term with Dr. Monk had expired, young Heap entered for the Mendelssohn Scholarship, with the result that he succeeded in obtaining this much coveted prize, of which, by the way, he was the second holder, Sir Arthur Sullivan having been the first scholar. Under the auspices of the Scholarship be entered the Leipzig Conservatorium, where he studied under Moscheles, Reinecke, Hauptmann, and E. F. Richter. Several of his compositions were performed during his studentship. Upon his return to England he became an organ pupil of the late W. T. Best. He graduated as a Bachelor of Music at Cambridge in 1870, and was allowed to proceed to the Doctor's degree in the following year—a rare mark of distinction.



(From a Photograph by Mr. H. Roland White, Moseley Road, Birmingham.)



Having settled in his native city, Dr. Heap became one of the busiest musicians in Birmingham. He conducted choral societies at Walsall, Stone, Stafford, and Stoke; in 1881 he succeeded Mr. Stockley as conductor of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society, and conducted the Wolverhampton Festivals of 1883 and 1886; he had much to do with establishing the North Staffordshire Musical Festival, and held its conductorship from the initial celebration in 1888 to the Festival held in October last, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' was produced; in 1895 he was elected conductor of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and in 1897 chorus-master of the Birmingham Festival. He was hard at work preparing the chorus for the meeting to be held in October when the hand of death suddenly came upon him in the fifty-fourth year of his age.

From 1869 to 1878 he held various organ appointments in and around Birmingham. He was an examiner for musical degrees at Cambridge in 1884. As a composer he is best known by his cantatas 'Fair Rosamund' and 'The Maid of Astolat.' Dr. Heap, who was an excellent pianist, had quite a genius for conducting—in fact, he was a good all-round man, who was successful in everything that he put his hand to in furthering the cause of music. Birmingham is the poorer to-day for the loss of one of her most gifted sons.

A VETERAN EDINBURGH MUSICIAN.

The death of Mr. EDMUND EDMUNDS, on the 15th ult., removes a once well known figure from the musical world of Edinburgh. For some years Mr. Edmunds, who passed away at the advanced age of ninety-one, had not been engaged in any active professional work; but it does not seem a long period since his venerable and kindly face was familiar in the streets and public meetings. Mr. Edmunds was born at Worcester in 1809, the same year as Mendelssohn. At the age of twelve he became a pupil of the famous Tom Cooke, and later he studied under Liverati. His first public appearance, as long ago as 1822, was on the Drury Lane boards, where he struck up acquaintances and friendships with Kean, Braham, Moore (who got him to sing some of his Irish Melodies), and the Prince Regent, who graciously became one of his patrons. In 1830 he made his début as an operatic tenor, singing in 'Il Barbiere,' 'Der Freischütz,' 'Don Giovanni,' &c., on their first performances in Scotland. The following year he was associated with Paganini in the great violinist's successful tour through England. A few years later he married the famous prima donna Miss Cawse, and, leaving the boards, he settled in Edinburgh as a teacher of singing. For half-a-century he held a deservedly high position in the musical profession, and numbered amongst his pupils such men as the late David Kennedy. In his capacity as Director and Professor of Singing in the Charlotte Square Institution, Mr. Edmunds did an enormous amount of hard work in the service of music. He was the first President of the Edinburgh Society of Musicians.

The death is announced of EDWARD LAWRANCE, a well-known professor of music at Merthyr, which took place there on the 10th ult. Born at Weymouth, March 28, 1836, Mr. Lawrance received his musical education at the Leipzig Conservatorium. After holding an organistship at Sidmouth, he was appointed organist of St. David's Church, Merthyr, in 1860, which office he held for thirty-one years. Since 1891 he had discharged, till recently, the duties of honorary organist of Christ Church, Cyfarthfa. Mr. Lawrance did excellent work for the art of music in the town of Merthyr, where his memory will long be cherished by those who came under the artistic and kind-hearted influences which animated his useful life.

MR. CYRIL B. ROOTHAM has passed the final examination for the degree of Bachelor in Music under the New Regulations at the University of Cambridge.

AN Exhibition of the value of £20, the gift of a friend of the Royal Academy of Music who desires to remain anonymous, will be awarded by the Committee of Management to the best candidate for admission as a student (of either sex) in Organ Playing at the Entrance Examination to be held on September 21 next. Full particulars may be obtained of the Secretary of the Academy, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

FOREIGN NOTES.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—The Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine, which took place from the 3rd to the 5th ult., attracted the usual numerous concourse of music-lovers from all parts of Germany and from abroad. The meeting was throughout a highly successful one, the performances including Liszt's oratorio 'Christus,' Bach's double chorus 'Nun ist das Heil,' Haydn's 'The Seasons,' the symphonic poem 'Zarathustra,' and other works by Richard Strauss, Berlioz's Symphony 'Roméo et Juliette,' excerpts from Cornelius's opera 'Cid' and Wagner's 'Siegfried,' and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

ALBANY (U.S.).—Owing to the indefatigable exertions of Mr. Frank Damrosch, the well-known orchestral conductor and founder of the Music-Teaching Institute for working men, a grand hall devoted to music is about to be erected, containing practice-rooms, a library, a museum, and a vast concert-room, accommodating some 8,000 persons. All the leading citizens have subscribed to this excellent scheme, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the well-known millionaire, having accepted the patronage.

ALTENBURG.—Under the direction of Capellmeister Sitt, an effective and highly appreciated performance was given last month, by the Singakademie, of F. Hegar's oratorio 'Manasse,' with Fräulein Münch, and Herren Pinks, Hungar, and Van Eweyk in the solo parts.

BERLIN.—The famous Gilbert-Sullivan operetta, 'The Mikado,' was produced in a German version, for the first time, at the Royal Theatre, on the 10th ult., under the composer's direction, when it met with an enthusiastic reception. After the performance, Sir Arthur was received in audience by the Emperor, who expressed the great pleasure he had derived from the performance.——Johann Strauss, jun., made his first appearance in Berlin at the head of his orchestra, last month, at the Philharmonic, and was received with every mark of favour.

BREMEN.—The musical performances in connection with the meeting of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-Verein, held from May 24 to 27, consisted of three orchestral and choral concerts and two of chamber music, the principal conductor being Herr Carl Panzner, of Bremen. The works produced included two sections of the oratorio 'Christ, the Prophet,' forming part of the 'mysterium,' entitled 'Christus,' by Felix Draeseke, which was heard for the first time and produced a very favourable impression. Amongst other new works included in the performances were two symphonies, by Felix Weingartner and Wilhelm Berger respectively, an orchestral fantasia by Philipp Scharwenka, and a string quartet by J. Suk, all of them being considered valuable additions to classes to which they appertain.

CARLSRUHE.—Lortzing's posthumous opera 'Regina' was produced, for the first time, at the Court Theatre, on May 20, and received with great applause at the conclusion of every act.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—Two highly successful performances of the 'Antigone' of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, took place recently at the Odéon Theatre, in the presence of a numerous audience. The performers were all of Greek nationality; the orchestra, under the direction of M. Nava, as well as the choir, being composed for the greater part of amateurs.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.—A scenic representation of Liszt's 'St. Elizabeth' was given, last month, at the Stadt-Theater, for the first time, with a very efficient cast, the opera chorus having been reinforced by the members of the 'Concordia' Choral Society. The performance, under Capellmeister Wolfram's direction, was an excellent one, and elicited the specially expressed thanks of Liszt's daughter, Frau Cosima Wagner.

GMÜNDEN.—Carl Goldmark, who has taken up his annual summer residence here, was the recipient of numerous congratulatory messages and other tokens of esteem on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, on May 18. Amongst the gifts presented to him by his admirers was a gold medal commemorative of the event, while a sum of two thousand florins, subscribed for in excess of the amount required, has been added to the Goldmark stipendium fund at the Viennese Conservatorium.

GUBEN.—An interesting discovery has lately been made amongst the music appertaining to the Parish Church of Guben, consisting of several hitherto unknown compositions by Heinrich Schütz, the precursor of J. S. Bach. They are eight-part settings of Psalms cx. and cxix. and a Magnificat.

LEIPZIG.—The remains of Johann Sebastian Bach, which were discovered during the rebuilding of the Church of St. John, in 1894, will shortly be placed in that sacred edifice, enshrined in a sarcophagus designed by Professor Licht. At the same time the monument erected to the great Cantor in front of the church will be unveiled.

MANNHEIM.—A complete success was scored by Eugene d'Albert's one-act music-drama 'Cain' and the musical comedy 'Die Abreise,' given on the same evening, at the Hof-Theater, last month. The composer, who was present, received a flattering ovation from the numerous audience.

MILWAUKEE (U.S.).—The German Musical Society recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation, by a monster concert performance in which some 600 executants took part, and on which occasion 4,000 persons formed the audience.

MONTREUX.—In connection with the annual floral festival known as the 'Fête des Narcisses,' recently held in this city, a ballet written for the occasion, with some charming music from the pen of Professor Henri Kling, of the Geneva Conservatoire, was performed by some 400 children, with immense success. The orchestra was that of the Cursaal, under the direction of M. Jüttner.

MUNICH.—A Goethe recital has been given by Herren E. von Possart, Eugen Gura, and Heinrich Schwarz, the musical portion of the programme being devoted chiefly to settings of Goethe's poems by Schubert, Loewe, Wolf, and Levi, and also including the 'Erl-King' Fantasia of Schubert-Liszt. The recital met with extraordinary success, and was repeated a few days later.——Herr Hermann Zumpe, of the Schwerin Opera, has been appointed General Musik-Director at the Royal Opera.

NAPLES.—In connection with the opening of the Hygienic Exhibition last month, a cantata, 'Inno a Igea,' written for the occasion by the young composer Daniele Napoletano, was produced with good success.

PARIS.—Humperdinck's fairy opera, 'Hänsel und Gretel,' was produced, for the first time in the French capital, on May 30, at the Opéra Comique, when the composer was present and received a perfect ovation. The performance was a brilliant success, the principal parts being ably rendered by Mesdames de Craponne, Rioton, and Delna.——The first official concert of the Exhibition took place on May 31, at the Salle des Fêtes of the Trocadero, when the programme included Saint-Saëns's new composition 'Le Céleste,' a setting of a poem by Armand Silvestre, celebrating the benefits conferred by electricity. The interpretation, by Mdlle. Ackté, M. Leitner, and 250 executants, was a very impressive one, and created much enthusiasm.

ROME.—A new opera, entitled 'Corrado,' by A. Marracino, the libretto of which is founded on Byron's 'The Corsair,' was brought out recently at the Teatro Adriano with good success.

VIENNA.—A short season of Italian opera, recently held at the Imperial Theatre, included a brilliant first performance of Giordano's 'Fedora,' with Signora Bellincioni and Signor De Lucia in the leading parts.——The first operatic performance at the new Emperor Franz Joseph Jubilee Theatre took place, on May 23, with Lortzing's ever-popular 'Der Waffenschmied,' in the presence of a very numerous and enthusiastic audience.——With a view to the forthcoming centenary of the death of Cimarosa, a collection of autographs and other relics of the composer of 'Il Matrimonio Segreto' is being made, to be forwarded to his native town of Aversa, in Italy, where an exhibition is to be held on the occasion. Cimarosa was for many years capellmeister at the Austrian Court.——A commemorative tablet has been placed at the house in the Ingelstrasse in which Johann Strauss lived from 1878 to his death; the street being now named after him.

WEIMAR.—Herr Louis Boesendorfer, of Vienna, has been elected a member of committee of the Liszt Society, in the room of the late Nicolas Dumba. The Boesendorfer circle, in which he was a constant visitor when in Vienna, was one of the few houses where the pianist-composer was in the habit of sitting down to the pianoforte unasked. At the instance of the executive committee of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-Verein, special efforts are now being made to obtain further contributions, in the form of autographs, rare portraits, and other personalia, for the Liszt Museum, founded in Weimar by Princess Hohenlohe, in order to render that institution as representative and complete as possible.

WIESBADEN.—The performance of Weber's 'Oberon,' in the new version prepared at the instance of the German Emperor, was the principal event in the annual festival performances held last month at the Royal Theatre. The revision involves a complete overhauling of Planché's libretto, new scenic arrangements, and musical amplification. The last-named, skilfully and reverently supplied by Herr Joseph Schlar, from Weberian motives, consist chiefly in melodramatic accompaniments of the spoken dialogue, connecting it more logically with the vocal numbers, and one or two incidental orchestral pieces. The performance, under Capellmeister Schlar's direction, was a highly satisfactory one, with Frl. Plaichinger and Herren Reiss and Gross in the principal parts. The work, in its present form, is shortly to be produced also in Berlin, and the right of performance of the new version has been granted to all other German and Austrian operatic establishments. In memory of the occasion, the Emperor caused a laurel wreath to be placed on Weber's grave in Dresden.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MUSIC IN WORCESTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I read with much interest the account which appeared in this month's MUSICAL TIMES as to three concerts which recently took place in Worcester. But your correspondent omitted to say that two other concerts had been given there in the previous week, making five concerts within the space of a few days. I think that in justice to Worcester this fact should be stated. One concert was given by the Worcester Musical Society, an institution which has done much for music among the young men and young women engaged in business in the city, and which is ably conducted by the well-known tenor singer at the Cathedral, Mr. W. Mann Dyson. The other concert was that given by the Worcestershire Musical Union, a Society which for twenty-one years has given high-class concerts, and which has drawn its members from all parts of the county. Among the works performed by this Society may be mentioned Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas'; Mozart's 'Requiem'; Beethoven's Mass in C; Handel's 'Saul'; Spohr's 'Jessonda'; Schubert's 'Song of Miriam'; Weber's 'Oberon,' &c.

Sir Walter Parratt, Mr. Hugh Blair (late organist of the Cathedral), Mr. P. V. Mendelssohn Benecke, and Mr. Edward Elgar have taken part in the concerts of this Society, and the last-named gentleman has informed me that the Worcestershire Musical Union was the first Society to give his earlier works a hearing. I trust to your sense of fairness to insert these few lines in your next number.

E. VINE HALL,
For twenty-one years Conductor of the Worcestershire Musical Union.

[While we gladly insert the above letter from the Rev. E. Vine Hall, we venture to point out to him that our special correspondent (from London) could not report on concerts at which he was not present, and of which we had no foreknowledge. We regret to learn that the Society which the Rev. E. Vine Hall has so zealously conducted for twenty-one years has now ceased to exist. At the final concert, on April 23, a very handsome testimonial, consisting of four silver candlesticks and two silver bon-bon dishes, was presented to the conductor in appropriate terms by Lord Cobham on behalf of nearly ninety members of the Society. Presentations were also made to Miss Fitton, the honorary secretary, and to Mrs. Fitton, who for twenty-one years has acted as accompanist to the Society. Thus the farewell was fittingly accompanied by appreciative utterances as well as by tangible proofs of the esteem in which Mr. Hall and his able co-workers are held, and in acknowledgment of their work in the cause of music in Worcester.—ED., M.T.]

A MISSING BOOK.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—Dr. Rimbault, on p. 63 of his 'The Pianoforte: its Origin, Progress, and Construction' (1860), states that shortly after the publication (in 1611) of the well-known collection of Virginal music 'Parthenia, or the Maydenhead of the First Musicke that ever was printed for the Virginals,' there appeared an undated work, entitled

'Parthenia In-violata, | or | Mayden Musicke for the Virginalls and Bass Viol, | Selected out of the Compositions of the most famous in that arte, | By Robert Hole, | And consecrated to all true Lovers and Practisers thereof | . . . | Printed at London for John Pyper, and are to be sould at his Shopp at Paul's Gate, next unto Cheapside at the | Cross Keies. Cum privilegio.' |

In another reference to the book in his 'Musical Illustrations of Bishop Percy's Reliques' (1850), p. 6, Dr. Rimbault adds the size of the book—viz., small quarto. As I am anxious to know what has become of this work, a copy of which I have never seen, I shall be extremely obliged if any of your readers who may know where it is to be found will communicate with me. I may add that the book apparently did not belong to Rimbault, as it does not occur in the sale catalogue of his library.

I remain, yours obediently,

Wm. Barclay Squire.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Bedford.—On the 12th ult. a musical festival was held at Bedford, under the direction of Mr. H. T. Tiltman. In the afternoon an orchestral concert was given—for this Mr. Albert Fransella's 'Select Orchestra' of forty performers was engaged, Miss Helene Valma and Mr. Andrew Black being the vocalists. The programme was a most attractive one, including Overture 'Leonora,' No. 3 (Beethoven), a selection from 'The Meistersingers,' and Tschaïkowsky's 'Symphonie Pathétique,' the latter especially being very finely played. The evening concert consisted of Coleridge-Taylor's scenes from 'Hiawatha.' The principal soloists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Fransella's orchestra assisted. The choir of 150 performers was made up of contingents from Bedford, Luton, Biggleswade, St. Neots, and Sandy, and the choruses were sung with excellent precision, reflecting every credit on the conductor (Mr. Tiltman), who is to be heartily congratulated on the whole performance.

Cambridge.—A recital of sacred music was given in Pembroke College Chapel, on May 21, on which occasion an effective setting of Psalm 150, composed by Mr. Felix W. Morley, the organist of the Chapel, was sung. The Psalm is for tenor solo (sung by Mr. P. Stanley), chorus, orchestra, and organ. The music was well interpreted by the combined choirs of Pembroke and St. Catherine's, numbering about sixty voices, and a small orchestra, under the direction of the Rev. L. Borrisow, Precentor of Trinity College, and Mr. Morley was at the organ.

Chelmsford.—The thirty-fourth annual service of the Association of Church Choirs was held on the 19th ult., at the Parish Church, Chelmsford, in which 300 voices took part in a manner that was characterised by steady, tuneful, intelligent singing, under the conductorship of Mr. F. R. Frye, organist of the church. The sermon was by the Dean of Norwich, and Dr. Huntley, organist of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, was at the organ.

Durban (Natal).—The Durban Orchestral Society opened its second season by a concert on May 17, under the baton of its conductor, Mr. J. Frank Proudman. The chief feature was Mendelssohn's First Pianoforte Concerto, played by Mr. Moray Maclean with the orchestra. Other numbers were 'Le Philtre' Overture (Auber) and 'Krakowiak' (Moszkowski).

Gravesend.—Mr. R. Feaver Clarke, the honorary secretary and moving spirit of the Gravesend and Milton Choral Association, has just resigned the office which he has held with much distinction and success during twenty-two years. The resignation has been received with profound regret, and a hearty vote of thanks has been accorded to Mr. Clarke for the very valuable services he has rendered to the Society.

Hampton Hill.—A very successful concert took place on the 11th ult., when the Walton Lodge Choral Society performed the cantatas 'Young Lochinvar' (Ethel M. Boyce) and 'The Forsaken Merman' (Arthur Somervell). The fresh and original work of Miss Boyce was very brightly rendered. It would be hard to imagine music that better expressed the wonderful charm of Matthew Arnold's words than Mr. Somervell's beautiful setting, and its performance was marked by vigour and freshness. This is the first concert that has been given by this Society, which began its existence last October. The young conductor, Miss Geraldine Cooke, is much to be congratulated on the excellent work she has done.

Quorn (Leicester).—A successful concert was given by the Musical Society, in the Village Hall, on May 30, when, thanks to the enthusiasm of the conductor, Mr. V. Dearden, an opportunity was given to the residents of the locality of hearing Coleridge-Taylor's beautiful cantata, 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.' The singing of the choir indicated the careful training they had received from Mr. Dearden, the clear enunciation of the words being specially praiseworthy. The tenor air was well sung by Mr. Alfred Page. There was a small orchestra, which was fully efficient in the cantata, and was also heard with effect in Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture. Herr Johannessen (who led the orchestra) gave some excellent violin solos, and Miss Beatrice Pratt sang.

Salisbury.—An exceptionally successful festival was held in Salisbury Cathedral on May 31, by the Diocesan Choral Association. There were upwards of 2,000 singers, and the organ was reinforced by the full band of the Royal Marines (bandmaster, Lieutenant G. Miller), augmented by extra string players. During the entry of the main body of surpliced singers the band played Marche Solennelle (Tschaïkowsky), which was followed by an organ voluntary, Fantasia in F minor (Hesse). The service was prefaced by the National Anthem, in commemoration of recent victories in South Africa, which was sung with the utmost heartiness by choir and congregation. The familiar Old Hundredth followed. A noticeable feature of the service was the admirable rendering of the Psalms—the alternation of 1,200 trebles with 800 tenors and basses in occasional verses, and the skilful introduction of the band here and there and in the Glorias, was very striking. The service to the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, with orchestral accompaniment, had been specially composed for the occasion by Mr. B. Luard Selby. The anthem was Mozart's 'Splendente Te, Deus,' and the Finale from the 'Jupiter' Symphony was played as an introduction. The service concluded with Gounod's 'Unfold, ye portals everlasting.' The recessional hymn was followed by the War March from 'Athalie.' All the choral parts of the service were conducted by the Precentor, Canon Carpenter, and the orchestral pieces by Lieutenant Miller. Mr. C. F. South presided at the organ.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Harmonic.—Riding a bicycle would not cause any stiffness to the hand other than that of a temporary nature, and this would be more than compensated for by the tonic which the nervous system generally would receive in the exercise of bicycling.

Rossian.—(1) As quickly as you can, so long as evenness and clearness are maintained in the playing thereof. (2) Raff's Fugue in E minor (from the Suite, Op. 72) may be played at crotchet = 176.

E. M. B.—It would undoubtedly add to the attractiveness of your recitals if you could obtain the assistance of a competent instrumentalist. Yes, a programme is desirable. One hour would probably be long enough.

L. R. A. M.—In regard to Mrs. Needham's song, 'The Fairies' Lullaby,' the word 'Katydid' is the popular name of a well-known American insect of the locust family, so-called in imitation of the sound it makes. The difficulty in the pronunciation of the word 'Balow' arises from the temptation to make both syllables rhyme in each word, halo and balow. It is bālow—Italian A—the last syllable alone forming the rhyme. This word has apparently come from the Scotch, and is differently spelled balow, baloo, and balou—this last form was used by Burns. It is a term used by a nurse when lulling her child—a lullaby. An English nurse would say 'By-by' or 'Bye-bye, baby.' The 'Land of Balow' is therefore another term for 'dream-land.'

H. E. H.—Messrs. Norman and Beard, of Norwich, would supply pedals to your pianoforte without injuring the instrument. They would furnish you with the cost upon application.

G. M.—The melody of 'Cast thy burden' ('Elijah') is taken from an old German chorale, 'O Gott, du frommer Gott,' which appeared in the Meiningisches Gesangbuch in 1693. The composer is unknown.

B. F. S.—We have not heard of the dates of any special lectures to be given in connection with the Crystal Palace Musical Instrument Exhibition. They will be notified in these columns.

ETUDIANT.—For theoretical works on harmony and counterpoint consult those by Professor Prout, Sir F. Bridge, and Dr. Sawyer.

ESPERANZA.—Chopin's Prelude in D minor (Op. 28, No. 24) may be played at minim = 50 and Schumann's 'Grillen' (Op. 12) at dotted minim = 100.

J. B.—The subject of the Fugue from Rheinberger's Organ Sonata in A flat may be phrased thus:—

IMPORTANT to TEACHERS. — Kindergarten Series of Elementary Musical Instruction Books. By CYRIL FAIRFIELD. Mandoline (two parts), Violin (two parts), Banjo.

PIANOFORTE.

Part 1. Duets for Teacher and Pupil; pupils' part, Treble clef.
" 2. " " " Bass.
" 3. Little pieces for both hands, moving differently.
(Part 3 is easier than the ordinary tutor.)

It is well known that all tutors are much too difficult, not sufficiently progressive, and that teachers have the greatest difficulty in teaching from them. This series of instruction books is intended to precede these. A specimen copy sent free of charge on receipt of post card.

UNISON CHANTS

FOR THE PSALTER

A COLLECTION OF SINGLE CHANTS

EDITED BY

EDWIN GEORGE MONK

MUS. DOC., OXON., ORGANIST AND MASTER OF THE CHOIR, YORK MINSTER, 1859-83.

THE VOICE PART—Price Eightpence. ORGAN HARMONIES—Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Not only have small and moderately qualified Choirs been kept in view, but also particularly the Voice of the great Congregation. In order to secure this much to be desired end—Chanting of the Daily Psalms by Choir and Congregation combined—the following means are proposed:—

I. Singing in Unison (strictly speaking, Octave-singing).

II. Employment of Chants of Restricted Compass only; especially as to all Reciting-Notes.

No note lower than or higher than is employed for Recitations; these extremes being avoided as far as possible; the former occurring mostly when a subdued, the latter when a jubilant note is required. The Melodies never extend below or above such outside limits being very occasionally used, and then only for short Psalms, or portions of Psalms.

III. Provision for Change of Chant at every fresh Psalm; and also whenever, in the course of any of the longer Psalms, such change could be made to follow the significance of the Sacred Text, conduce to its clearer understanding, or enforce its teaching

IV. Suggestion for occasional Change of Instrumental Harmony as a further mode (often of much value and potency) of heightening the desired expression; or of calling attention to important divisions, and changes of subject or utterance, in cases when actual change of the voice-part seemed undesirable.

A COURSE OF HARMONY

BY

FREDERICK BRIDGE, MUS.D., OXON.

(Gresham Professor of Music)

AND

FRANK J. SAWYER, MUS.D., OXON.

(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ

AND

JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE	(1st Position)	2s. od.
2A.	DITTO	(1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.
3A.	DITTO	(1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A.	DITTO	.. .. ..
5A.	DITTO	.. .. ..
6A.	DITTO	.. .. ..

Books 1A, 2A, and 3A now ready.

1B.	STUDIES	(1st Position)	2s. od.
2B.	DITTO	(1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ..	2s. 6d.
3B.	DITTO	(1st to 5th Position)
4B.		.. ..
5B.		.. ..
6B.		.. ..

Books 1B and 2B now ready. Book 3B (in the Press)

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

FIVE-PART HARMONY

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

PREFACE.

THIS little book is intended for those who, having already gained a competent knowledge of four-part harmony, desire to write with confidence in five parts.

Five-part writing is compulsory for the degree of Bachelor of Music at the principal Universities; yet even the best text-books furnish candidates with little help in respect of five-part writing.

The plan of this work is arranged in such a manner that anyone who is already well instructed in harmony may advance without the aid of a teacher.

In each Chapter a problem is proposed, and its solution is given in the Appendix (p. 28 et seq.).

The conscientious student will first deal with the problem, shutting his eyes to the solution until he has worked the thing out for himself.

He will then find it profitable to compare his result with that of the author.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive, but it contains a more complete discussion of the subject than the author has met with elsewhere.

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

SIR GEORGE GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC & MUSICIANS

(1) Is now offered to the public at a price which should bring it within the reach of many who have long desired this valuable possession.
(2) Is now published, for the first time, in solid serviceable leather bindings; specially suitable for heavy books of reference, so constantly and quickly consulted.
(3) Has been recognised, since its first appearance, as a Standard Book of Reference on all topics connected with the Art and History of Music and the Lives of Musicians.
(4) Treats of Musical Terms, Musical Works, Musical Instruments, Musical Societies, Musical Publications, Musicians, Performers, and Patrons of Music.
(5) Is the work of nearly one hundred and twenty eminent Contributors, both English and Foreign.
(6) Fills more than three thousand pages.
(7) Represents the zealous and unceasing labour of ten years.
(8) Contains a copious Index by Mrs. Edmond Wodehouse, a complete List of Contributors, and a valuable Catalogue of Articles contributed by each Writer.
(9) Is edited by Sir George Grove, with the assistance of J. A. Fuller Maitland, Esq.
(10) Has been written for a large public; appeals alike to the Amateur and the Professional; is based on original Research, and is thoroughly readable throughout.

Copies of the book may be seen at the offices of Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 1, Berners Street, Oxford Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C. An explanatory pamphlet, giving a full description of Contents, a List of Contributors, and a Catalogue of the Articles contributed by each writer, with specimen pages and illustrations, and an order form will be sent Post-free on application.

[AN ORDER FORM WILL BE FOUND IN THIS PAPER.

C. BECHSTEIN

PIANOFORTE MANUFACTURER

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.M. THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY,
H.M. THE CZAR OF RUSSIA,
H.M. THE KING OF SPAIN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE,
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA,
ETC. ETC.

The World's Greatest Pianists prefer the Bechstein Piano to any other.

LISZT writes:..... "For twenty-eight years I have now used your Pianos, and they have maintained their superiority. Your Instruments are perfect."

RUBINSTEIN writes: ..... "At my Concerts I use BECHSTEIN'S Pianos almost exclusively. C. BECHSTEIN has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making."

VON BÜLOW writes: ..... "C. BECHSTEIN'S Instruments are distinguished by their superior quality in every branch of Pianoforte manufacture."

CARL TAUSIG writes: ..... "I play in public everywhere only on Mr. BECHSTEIN'S Pianofortes, because I regard them as the very best Instruments I know."

LESCHETIZKY writes:..... "The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist."

MOSZKOWSKI writes: ..... "By BECHSTEIN the last word in Pianoforte manufacture has been said."

EUGEN D'ALBERT writes: "My best teachers and dearest friends are the BECHSTEIN Grands."

SOPHIE MENTER writes: "BECHSTEIN, the King of all Pianoforte Manufacturers."

STAVENHAGEN writes: ... "I do not know of any other Pianoforte besides yours which, in tone and touch, affords the player facilities so exquisite and ideal."

JOSEF HOFMANN writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano possesses greater poetry of tone, and resembles the human voice more than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a Piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN writes: "To me it is the height of joy to play on these Instruments, then alone can I become one with the Piano and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a 'BECHSTEIN' Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius String Quartet."

BUSONI writes: ..... "Your Pianos are as regards beauty of tone and evenness, precision and delicacy of touch the acme of what can be produced in this art."

MISS BERTHA SALTER
(CONTRALTO)
Of London Philharmonic, Monday Popular (St. James's Hall), London Ballad (Queen's Hall), Crystal Palace (Saturday Afternoon), Scottish Orchestra (Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee), Bradford and Huddersfield Subscription, Hallé (Manchester), Leeds and Edinburgh Choral Union Concerts, &c.
"Miss Bertha Salter has a remarkably fine contralto voice of great compass."—Morning Post.
Miss Bertha Salter is gifted with a genuine contralto voice of exceptional compa s and evenness."—Standard.
"Miss Bertha Salter possesses a contralto voice of exceptional power, perfectly under control, and her singing of Beethoven's 'In questa tomba,' in contradistinction to her charming, dainty singing of Chaminade's 'L'anneau d'argent,' was indeed a revelation."—Musical News.
EDINBURGH CHORAL UNION.—"ELIJAH."—Miss Bertha Salter gave an entirely satisfactory account of the solo work that fell to her share. The mistress of contralto tones, rich and telling, and of a style direct and unaffected, she made a decided impression by her reading of 'O rest in the Lord.'"—The Scotsman.
"Miss Bertha Salter had a gratifying reception in 'O rest in the Lord.' Her rendering of 'Woe unto them' was characterised by telling effect."—Edinburgh Evening Dispatch.
LEEDS CHORAL UNION.—"ELIJAH."—"The contralto, Miss Bertha Salter, created a very favourable impression. Her voice is of particularly good quality in the lower register, and her singing of 'O rest in the Lord' was altogether a fine effort, and would in itself have been a notable performance."—Yorkshire Post.
WEST HARTLEPOOL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—"THE MESSIAH."—"With Miss Bertha Salter we have no fault to find. Her clear rich contralto was one of the most pleasing voices we have heard for some time. It was delightfully rich and even thrilling, especially when that familiar but pathetically beautiful air fell from her lips, 'He was despised.' It was thrilling, as we said; it was impressive, too much so for words. 'He shall feed His flock' was indeed a treat."—Northern Guardian.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
AUGUST 1, 1900.

Three Extra Supplements are presented gratis with this number. A View of the Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, from a Photograph taken by Mrs. Farquhar Glennie; an Anthem for Harvest, entitled 'There shall be an heap of corn in the earth,' composed by Cuthbert Harris; and Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, and Vesper Hymn, composed by Bruce Steane.

THE ROYAL MILITARY SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

TWO VISITS TO KNELLER HALL.

THERE was a time when the Bandmasters of the British Army were made in Germany. Now, however, thanks to the foresight of H.R.H. The Duke of Cambridge, the chief military musicians of this country are made—and very well made—at Kneller Hall, situate between Twickenham and Hounslow, where also many bandsmen receive an excellent training in the art of playing upon instruments.

The visitor to Twickenham treads on ground made historic by Alexander Pope and Horace Walpole. But if he be on military-music bent he must leave the lovely Thames-side haunts of those great men of letters and set his face Hounslow-wards. A walk of a mile from Twickenham station, through a region of market-gardens and orchards, will bring the wayfarer to the village of Whitton and some lodge gates, against which is a stone bearing the significant letters 'W. D.,' separated by the Government broad arrow.

Here is the approach to the noble building called Kneller Hall, but officially known as the Royal Military School of Music, the prefix 'Royal' dating from the Queen's Jubilee of 1887. It derives its location-name from the fact that on this site there once stood the country house of Sir Godfrey Kneller, Bart. (1648-1723), the great portrait-painter of his day. Both Sir Godfrey and his Lady are buried in the grounds, though there is no stone to mark the whereabouts of their resting-place.

With the exception of Kneller's stables, which still stand, the Hall has been entirely rebuilt and added to by successive owners. In 1846 the building and its park-like grounds of fifty acres were purchased by the Government. The object of that acquirement was to provide a place where schoolmasters, under the Committee of Council for Education, could be trained for the instruction of pauper children on the Pestalozzian system. The total cost of the building, land, fittings, &c., is set forth in an old Parliamentary paper with a 'tuppenny-hapenny' species of red-tapeism, thus:—

The first Principal of this College was the Reverend Frederick Temple, now Archbishop of Canterbury. The tradition is that the young Principal (as the future Metropolitan was then) created so strong an ecclesiastical atmosphere about the place that he drove all the embryo schoolmasters into the Church! At all events, the scheme was not a success, and after being in operation for a few years the College was closed.

THE INITIATION OF THE SCHOOL.

Then came the Crimean War. During that memorable campaign, H.R.H. the Duke of

THE COMMANDANT,
COLONEL FARQUHAR GLENNIE.
(From a Photograph by Mrs. Farquhar Glennie.)

Cambridge was greatly struck with the difference between the bandmasters, and probably the bands, of the French and British armies. Upon his return to England, and within a few weeks of his appointment to the post of Commander-in-Chief, His Royal Highness sent a circular letter to the commanding officer of every regiment in the army. This important document—dated 'Horse Guards, 25 September, 1856'—began thus:—

consequent upon the necessity of employing professional musicians, civilians, as masters of bands, has it in contemplation to recommend the establishment of a large musical class as part of the education of boys sent to the Royal Military Asylum, and for the instruction of persons sent from regiments to qualify for bugle-majors, trumpet-majors, and bandmasters, whose training would require special time and attention.

The Duke estimated the initial outlay at £500 or £600, and that £1,000 a year would be necessary for the maintenance of the place. This he proposed to raise by a subscription of £5 or £8 per annum from each regiment; 'the result would be a saving of expense to regiments and would tend to the permanent efficiency of regimental bands.' All the commanding officers agreed to this proposal, with the result that Kneller Hall was opened as a Military School of Music—maintained by the officers, be it observed—on March 3, 1857. In 1872 the Government gave its first grant to the Institution. Now it entirely maintains the establishment, at the modest cost of £2,200 a year; the grant appearing as a separate vote in the Army Estimates. The questions, Is the money well spent? and, What does the country get in return for the outlay? may find satisfactory answers in the perusal of the following remarks, the outcome of personal observation.

THE ADJUTANT,

CAPTAIN F. H. MAHONY.

(From a Photograph, taken specially for this article, by Messrs. Gunn and Stuart, Richmond.)

THE STAFF.

First, in regard to the officers, of whom there are three—Commandant, Adjutant, and Director of Music. The Commandant, who holds the appointment for seven years, is at the present time Colonel Farquhar Glennie. In addition to having a record of distinguished military service in South Africa (1877-9), the Colonel is an excellent violinist and the fortunate possessor of two Strads. The important post of Adjutant is held by Captain F. H. Mahony, who for the past thirteen years has, under successive Commandants, practically engineered the great establishment in which he takes so keen an interest. A genial, warm-hearted Irishman, Captain Mahony has seen active service. He took part in the battles of El-Teb and Tamaai and in the relief of Tokar during the first Soudan war. He then obtained his Captaincy, a medal with clasp, the bronze star (Egypt), and was mentioned in the despatches. The Adjutant is also an excellent musician and a capital man of business, two qualifications which make him the right man in the right place at Kneller Hall. Lieutenant Arthur J. Stretton, late bandmaster of the 2nd Battalion Cheshire Regiment, is Director of Music—that is to say, he is responsible, under the Commandant, for the technical efficiency of the Institution. In addition to subordinate members of the Staff (one being an army schoolmaster) ten professors—or 'instructors,' as they are officially termed—from London are 'engaged in instructing in the several instruments.' These outside professors are men of mark in their respective spheres, and their fees for the year appear in the Estimates to the amount of £760. One of the earliest professors at Kneller Hall, it should be recorded, was the late Mr. Thomas Sullivan, father of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

STUDENTS.

Kneller Hall opens its doors to two classes of musicians—(1) students and (2) pupils. The term 'Student' is applied to those band serjeants and other non-commissioned officers who have been sent by their respective regiments to Kneller Hall to qualify for the position of bandmaster. Before he can enter, a candidate must have had seven years' service as a musician, must pass an examination in the elements of music, elementary harmony and instrumentation; advanced harmony and simple counterpoint, though optional subjects, are important factors in the examination, 'showing as it will an earnest desire on their [the candidates'] part to thoroughly fit themselves for the high position to which they aspire.' The recently issued 'Army Order 145 of 1900,' however, makes the conditions of this entrance examination more stringent as from July 1, 1901. Here they are, taken from the Queen's Regulations :—

Royal Military School of Music—Entrance Examination. The following will be substituted for the six subjects of instruction mentioned in paragraph 988 of the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, 1899 :—

1. Elements of Music.
2. Harmony.
3. Counterpoint (combined).
4. Instrumentation.
5. Musical biography.

The course of instruction in music for students is officially stated to consist of—

(a) A thorough training on all instruments constituting a military and string band, on at least one of which they must be skilled performers.
(b) Instruction in harmony.
(c) ,, ,, counterpoint.
(d) ,, ,, musical form.
(e) ,, ,, church music, choral and instrumental.
(f) ,, ,, military and orchestral instrumentation.
(g) ,, ,, arranging for military band and orchestra.
(h) ,, ,, musical dictation.
(i) ,, ,, conducting.
(j) ,, ,, management and tuning of bands, &c.

But mere musicianship is not everything. The Queen's Regulations very properly state :—

Marked stability of character, exemplary conduct, manners, appearance, general education, and military bearing, being equally as indispensable for a bandmaster as superior musical knowledge and musical talent, great care should therefore be exercised by Commanding Officers in recommending Non-Commissioned Officers as candidates for admission to Kneller Hall to be trained for the high position of Bandmaster and Warrant Officer.

The post of bandmaster in the army may be obtained by any good military musician, not under the rank of a non-commissioned officer, but he must qualify at Kneller Hall before he can be appointed to any regiment.

The length of time occupied in preparing and passing students through the periodical examinations held by the Director of Music, until they are finally passed by the War Office Examiners to the first, or 'qualified form,' for bandmaster, depends of course very considerably on the knowledge they possess on entering Kneller Hall, and the attention and application they give to their several studies. But from two to three years may be accepted as the period within which a student of average qualifications and natural ability works his way from class to class before taking a place on the 'qualified form.'

Examinations of candidates for the first or 'qualified form' for the position of bandmaster are held twice annually by independent examiners, entirely unconnected with Kneller Hall, who are chosen by the War Office. One of these examiners is Sir Frederick Bridge in theoretical work and musical biography, the other, Lieut. Sommer, bandmaster of the Royal Engineers, in the technical knowledge of military instruments, scoring for a military band and for an orchestra, &c.

A BANDMASTER'S QUALIFICATIONS.

Before being raised to the 'qualified form'—that is, for a bandmastership—a student must give satisfactory proof to his professor that he has (1) obtained 'proficiency as a performer' on at least one particular instrument, (2) that he has passed a course of practical instruction on all other instruments employed in military bands and in the orchestra, whereby he has acquired a satisfactory knowledge of the method of fingering, correct manner of blowing, bowing, &c., and (3) is qualified to give instruction on all those instruments. This certificate is signed by the professor of each instrument scheduled. It is countersigned by the Director of Music to the effect that the student has, in addition, concluded satisfactorily a course of instruction in Harmony, Counterpoint, and Instrumentation and can score for a military band and for an orchestra, and also that he possesses a good knowledge of the teaching and management of a military church choir. This Certificate of Qualification we give in fac-simile. Agreeably to the Queen's Regulations he must also have obtained a first-class certificate of education. Having passed through all these qualifying stages—which include the art of official letter-writing—the student is placed upon the rota for a vacant bandmastership. Till that opportunity presents itself he continues his studies at Kneller Hall, where he acquires further practical experience for his future duties in such matters as conducting, scoring, teaching, &c.

TEACHING THE ART OF TEACHING.

Three important features in the Kneller Hall curriculum may well claim the attention of 'the powers that be' of our great music schools. The students are taught the art of teaching. Under the supervision of their own professors they give instruction to certain pupils (of which more anon) on various subjects. We quote from the printed report: 'In addition to the instruction which pupils regularly receive from their professors and assistants to professors, each student has a small number of them (usually four or five) to each of whom he must give at least two hours' instruction per week, reporting the progress the pupil has made during the week, and the hours during which he (the student) was engaged giving such instruction, on a form issued to him for that purpose.' As the report very truly goes on to say, 'this system is of considerable importance to the student, as it teaches him the art of imparting instruction—a most essential part of his future duties as Bandmaster.' Thus these students gain within the walls of the Institution an equipment which, as so many students know to their cost, has too often to be blunderously acquired in after professional life. They are also instructed in conducting, and they have a chapel in the building where they maintain a full choral service. But these important features will be referred to later on. At the present time there are fifty students at Kneller Hall who hope to qualify for bandmasterships. The fact that for the first six months of the present year no less than nineteen bandmaster appointments have been made should be full of encouragement to those who are striving, under such splendid conditions of study, to become the chief musicians in the British Army. And here it may be mentioned that the most distinguished of the Kneller Hall alumni is Lieut. George J. Miller, Bandmaster of the Royal Marine Light Infantry (Portsmouth Division), who is also a Bachelor of Music in the University of Cambridge.

course of instruction lasts for a period of from twelve to eighteen months. In cases of exceptional talent — conduct and character permitting—the time is extended to two years, it being most desirable to develop a pupil's talent as fully as the time and opportunity will permit, not only in the interest of the Institution, but of the corps to which he belongs, and especially the pupil himself. The music curriculum for pupils consists of—

(a) The instrument, or instruments, their Commanding Officers request they may be taught.
(b) Elementary knowledge of clefs.
(c) Structure of scales.
(d) Classification of intervals.
(e) Simplest forms of chords.
(f) Elementary harmony.
(g) Elementary instrumentation.

As the pupils attain to a fixed degree of proficiency as instrumentalists, their professors so report, and they (the pupils) are then permitted to practise and play in the band of the Institution. If, however, after his arrival at Kneller Hall a pupil fails to show aptitude he is sent back to his regiment. On the other hand, if he works well he will receive a certificate, signed by the professor of the instrument he is studying, to the effect that he has attained a certain degree of proficiency as a performer. This certificate is countersigned by the Director of Music and Commandant with the additional certification that he has been through a course of elementary harmony and has acquired some knowledge of military musical instrumentation. Its concluding clause may be quoted :—

This certificate is added for the information of the Commanding Officer, in the hope that if the holder by diligence, good conduct, and usefulness in the Band should eventually become a Non-Commissioned Officer he may be recommended for return to Kneller Hall for further training with a view to his qualifying for a Bandmastership.

This document, it should be added, is not given to the pupil, whose modesty might cause him to 'stow it away,' as Captain Mahony says; but it is sent direct to the Commanding Officer of his (the pupil's) regiment, so that that officer may keep his eye upon the bandsman who has received this valuable Kneller Hall mark. The normal number of pupils at the Royal Military School of Music is 130.

THOROUGHNESS—THE DOMINANT NOTE.

By no means the least advantage that Kneller Hall offers to a bandsman is the scholastic education, as distinct from the purely musical tuition, that he receives during his sojourn within its walls. In fact, the dominant note of the Royal Military School of Music is thoroughness. The atmosphere of the place is literally charged with it. The comprehensive 'Time-table of classes for musical and general education' for the week — an ingeniously prepared document, but too elaborate to quote here — furnishes evidence of the completeness of the curriculum for the training of our bandmasters and bandsmen. For instance, from November to March, weekly concerts are held under the direction of qualified and 'first form' students. These are given with a view of educating the future bandmasters in the practice of arranging for, and in giving, regimental entertainments. Again, the Government allows the sum of £100 per annum to enable students to attend the best concerts in London, as well as the Opera, in order that they may have frequent opportunities of hearing the best music, and profiting thereby. The students, in their neat uniforms, may often be seen in London concert-rooms carefully following and marking the scores of the music performed, thus reaping all the benefits that these educational opportunities offer. Part-singing is also in the curriculum.

RECREATION, MESS, AND OTHER MATTERS.

Turning to the non-musical side of Kneller Hall life, mention may first be made that students and pupils during their periods of training remain attached to their regiments and draw their regimental pay. The pupils are temporarily transferred, so to speak, by their Commanding Officers during their pupilage. The students have a separate mess, managed by a committee selected by themselves, which works out at a cost of 7½d. per day for each man. (The married students' quarters are in a separate building.) The scale of messing for the pupils is found to be ample, although the cost to each does not exceed 3d. per day. In the summer time, weather permitting, the pupils mess in the open air, and a very jolly and contented lot of fellows they appear to be. There is a capitally managed canteen, which is not a mere beer drinking bar, but which to all intents and purposes is a general store where wholesome edibles may be purchased at very reasonable prices. Of course, all the men—students and pupils—are under military discipline. They have to attend daily parade, drills, &c., but are excused the rough work which falls to the lot of the ordinary private, which is known as 'fatigue' duty.

The physical and recreative side of Kneller Hall life receives commendable attention. Football, hockey, cricket, tennis, as out-door recreations; lectures, reading-rooms, and a Christy Minstrel troup as indoor amusements, form the lighter side of the daily round. Annual sports and a yearly pic-nic up the river in steam launches are also much enjoyed recreative features of the Institution. There is practically an absence of crime amongst the men. This is in a large measure due to the bent of their studies, their healthy surroundings, and the watchful care exercised over them by those in authority. A month's furlough is given, under certain conditions, to those who desire it, from the middle of December to the middle of January in each year. It is estimated that an education such as is given at Kneller Hall could not be obtained for less than £100 a year under ordinary conditions.' The fact that in 1884 several distinguished German Officers visited Kneller Hall, with the result that the German Government established a military school of music somewhat on the lines of the Institution, is a matter of which we may nationally be somewhat proud.

BUGLE CALLS AND 'GOD SAVE THE QUEEN.'

All the bugle calls in the British Army emanate from Kneller Hall. Each battalion has its own bugle call in addition to the usual camp and barrack calls applicable to the whole army, and as the instrument itself has only six notes, some ingenuity is required to prevent too near an approach to similarity. The bugle call 'dinner' is never mistaken. It has a magic effect even during a cricket match. 'Then they run for something else,' observes the Adjutant, 'and go in eagerly for another kind of innings—at which they score!'

The authorised army version of the National Anthem was issued from Kneller Hall. In former times every band had its own arrangement and chosen key of 'God save the Queen,' with the result that at a large station its simultaneous performance by massed bands would have tried the aural nerves of even the most unmusical Tommy Atkins. Now the Kneller Hall arrangement of the National Anthem is issued as an army order and every band must adopt it. Regiments can obtain their instruments through the Institution at a considerable reduction in price, and with a certainty that they will be of the best manufacture.

THE BAND.

It is a lovely afternoon in July. Visitors on foot and in carriages are wending their way up the leafy drive of Kneller Hall to listen to the band. On the lawn in front of the building is a large square band-stand, built in tiers like an orchestra. On it are assembled some 150 military musicians willing to discourse sweet music. It is an interesting sight. The players represent many regiments, both cavalry and infantry. Thus there is much variety and no uniformity in the uniforms—here a guardsman, there a kilted Highlander, perchance a dusky and picturesquely attired pupil from a West Indian Regiment in his Zouave jacket and turban, or a swarthy boy from the Houssa police band. Precisely at four o'clock, before a large and appreciative audience, these skilled bandsmen and embryo bandmasters, with all the seriousness of earnest-minded learners, begin to play the following selection of music :—

TEACHING THE ART OF CONDUCTING.

The programme speaks for itself. The manner in which it is performed calls for the highest praise. Wonderful precision goes hand in hand with a commendable attention to light and shade. The tone of this fine body of players is as delightful as their intonation—no out-of-tuneness of reeds, and no blare of brass. We are able to gather from the Adjutant some interesting particulars in regard to this weekly (in the summer) 'band playing out,' as it is officially called. 'As our band is so large (150 players),' he says, 'we are able to have two pedal clarinets. These instruments are an octave below the bass clarinet, and supply a fine bass. We have a quintet of Saxophones and a couple of Sarrusophons, a double reed instrument of the oboe and bassoon tribe, the combination giving a splendid tone colour to the band. Four full rehearsals are held during the week for this performance, in addition to separate rehearsals for each section of the band, and, when necessary, special instruction in difficult passages is given to individual performers. Thus there is forged a chain of efficiency and responsibility. Except on special occasions, the first piece in the programme, always a march, has to be composed by the students in turn, and is conducted by the composer. All students,' continues the Adjutant, 'receive instruction in the art of conducting—the proper movement of the arm—and, in fact, all the technicalities of beating time. But, of course, it must be borne in mind that the perfection of conducting can only, if ever, be acquired by subsequent experience. Those students on the "qualified form" conduct in public as you see by the programme.' The thought naturally arises, might not our great Schools of Music advantageously take a lesson from Kneller Hall even in this respect?

'The instruments in use,' continues Captain Mahony, 'are the property of the Institution. Each instrument is entrusted to the charge of a certain student or pupil. He is held responsible for its care, and, when it is not in use, its due return to the cases in the library, where each has its own numbered place. The time passes all too quickly at this open-air concert under such pleasant conditions. Anyone who may feel disposed after reading this to visit Kneller Hall on one of those Wednesday music-makings, will be amply rewarded. No lady need be afraid of going without her indispensable 'afternoon tea' in making the pilgrimage. She can obtain a very good cup of the beverage from the refreshment tent—a tentative branch of the well-managed canteen. A Wednesday afternoon in summer may be well and pleasantly spent at Kneller Hall.

A MILITARY CHORAL SERVICE.

'We have a band and choir of seventy at our service on Sunday mornings,' says Captain Mahony; 'and if you like to come down to it I'll be delighted to see you.' Such a cordial invitation, with the prospect of hearing a novel service well rendered, was not to be lightly disregarded. Accordingly we paid a second visit to Kneller Hall on a perfect July Sunday morning. Upon emerging from the shaded avenue which leads to the Hall, all the men and boys of the establishment were seen 'at attention' in church parade order, ready for inspection by the Commandant. 'Mighty pretty,' as old Pepys would say, did these musician-soldiers appear as they stood there in their 'Sunday best,' the varied uniforms gaining in picturesqueness and brilliancy by the full rays of the golden orb of day. The chapel is in the centre of the building and occupies the first and second floors, so to speak—the two large windows, as shown in our 'special supplement' view of the exterior. The seats on the ground floor are arranged as in a college chapel. The band and choir, with a fine Liszt organ, occupy the galleries. There is accommodation for 103 worshippers, but as the officers and men number about 75 there is obviously little available room for visitors. The order of service on this, the 8th morning of the month, is as follows:—

Voluntary	Student E. A. Barratt.
Responses	Semi-Gregorian.
Venite	6th Tone, 1st Ending.
Psalm xl.	8th Tone, 1st Ending.
Te Deum	Smart in F.
Benedictus	Parisian Tone.
Anthem—'The Lord is gracious'	Bowdler.
Litany	Tallis.
Hymn after Sermon	197 (A. & M.).
Sevenfold Amen	Stainer.
Voluntary—March from the 1st Suite	Lachner.

The band—of strings, wood-wind, brass, and kettle-drums—consists of about twenty-five performers. The official seat of the Commandant is vacant, but is not that chief-in-command playing his Strad with the rank and file fiddlers, Stradless perhaps, in the gallery? Yes, and there arises the thought that the divine art of music is as great a leveller as it is a destroyer of those human constructed fences that mark off the sects. The choir, some fifty strong, consists of boys and men under training in the Institution. The whole force of singers and players upon instruments numbers seventy performers.

Two rehearsals, of one hour each—one 'a singing practice' and the other a full rehearsal—are held every week. If these do not suffice, an extra 'run through' is held early on the Sunday morning. 'Thoroughness' again. Each student who has attained to the 'qualified form' has to take his turn in being responsible for the entire musical service. He rehearses it, conducts on Sunday, and, if any service or anthem that has been placed by the Director of Music on the service list is without band parts, the student in charge has to score it for the orchestra. Moreover, he has to compose, and of course score, a new opening voluntary. How practical it all is! Variety in the chanting is obtained by the use of Anglicans one Sunday and Gregorians the next. The service books used are 'The Cathedral Prayer Book' (Anglican) and 'The Little Directory of Plain-song' (Gregorian). It happened to be a Gregorian day on the occasion of our visit, but only one Psalm (the 40th) was sung. And here we may remark upon the excellent manner in which the vocal portion of the service is rendered. It must be remembered that no boy comes to Kneller Hall until he is at least fourteen years of age, and that he comes there and is trained as an instrumentalist, not as a vocalist. Moreover, the embouchure of some instruments—e.g., the oboe—is by no means conducive to the formation of good open vocal tone. Bearing all this in mind and that the study of vocal music is a secondary subject, it is quite remarkable that such gratifying results are obtained. The singing of that military choir would have done credit to many a more pretentious body of much rehearsed singers. And then there crescendo, after the reverently rendered prayerful section, leading up to 'Day by day,' with its full orchestra fortissimo outburst, is most impressive.

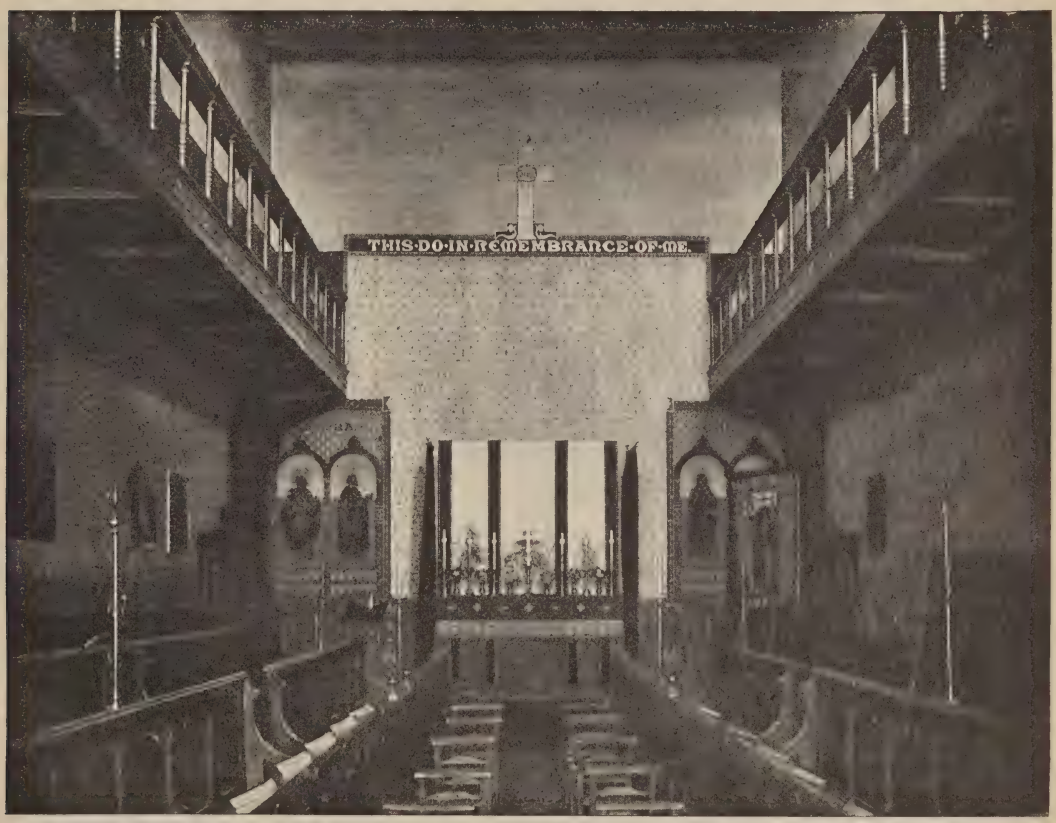
THE NATIONAL ANTHEM SUNG AS A PRAYER.

But the most affecting moment in the whole service arrives after the third collect. Instead of the rustle usually heard at that break in Morning or Evening Prayer, the entire congregation remain kneeling, when in soft and reverent tones of pure vocal harmony, the strains of 'God save the Queen' unexpectedly fall upon



THE CHAPEL OF KNELLER HALL.

(From a Photograph, taken specially for this article, by Messrs. Gunn and Stuart, Richmond.) were strong evidences of a genuine enthusiasm in their efforts—they sang as though their hearts were in their work. The same remarks are applicable to the band, and the entire service was a most delightful experience.

The Canticles and Psalm are sung antiphonally—boys one verse, men the next—and accompanied by the band in rational harmonies. Those chromatic monstrosities which are the bane of Gregorian chants are happily not 'in the regulations.' Smart's Te Deum in F, sung at the high pitch, goes splendidly. The old familiar strains gain in effectiveness by their orchestral colouring, no less than by the bright pace at which they are sung. A glorious the ear. At the words 'Send Her victorious,' there comes forth a great forte that is absolutely thrilling in the intensity of its utterance. 'Long to reign over us' is sung decrescendo, and the last phrase, 'God save the Queen,' is, like the first, rendered with all suppliant tenderness. Words fail to describe the scene and the effect of those simple yet familiar strains when sung as a prayer under the conditions of a service in the Chapel of Kneller Hall. This, however, may be said, the moving power of simplicity in music was again demonstrated.

It is now time to draw to a close. In so doing we may appropriately quote two sentences from an interesting paper on 'Military Band Organisation' read before the Royal United Service Institution, on March 25, 1892, by Colonel T. B. Shaw-Hellier, a former Commandant of Kneller Hall, who is well known in the army for his musical abilities, and who, during his six years' tenure of office at Kneller Hall, did a great deal to improve the Institution. Colonel Shaw-Hellier said: 'A Bandmastership in the British Army is a post that any gentleman might be proud to hold.' And again: 'Kneller Hall is now a most flourishing institution, and gives as good a musical education in its own particular sphere as can be had at either the Royal Academy of Music or the Royal College of Music.' These utterances of eight years ago are true to-day.

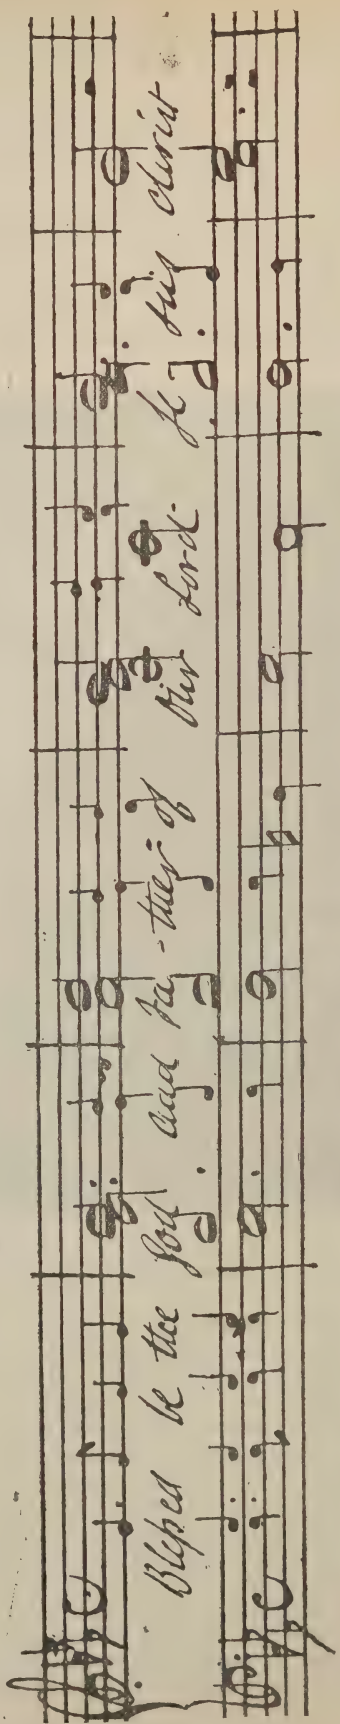
Finally, our thanks are due to the Commandant, Colonel Farquhar Glennie, for kindly giving permission for this article to be written; to Mrs. Farquhar Glennie for the reproduction of her photographs of the Commandant, the exterior of Kneller Hall, and the group of pupils, the last-named she has kindly taken specially for this article; and to the Adjutant, Captain F. H. Mahony, for affording facilities for freely placing facts and papers at our disposal, and for showing a personal interest in these remarks upon that excellent and admirably managed Institution where British Bandmasters are made, the Royal Military School of Music at Kneller Hall.

THE METAMORPHOSIS OF A WELL-KNOWN ANTHEM.

As a sequel to the biographical sketch of Dr. S. S. Wesley which has recently appeared in these columns, it may not be without interest to set forth the variants between the original and printed versions of his well-known anthem 'Blessed be the God and Father.' This we are enabled to do by the courtesy of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford, who, through the friendly offices of their organist, Dr. G. R. Sinclair, have kindly placed at our disposal a weighty tome in the music library of Hereford Cathedral. This oblong volume contains the organ part, in manuscript, of various anthems. Its earliest date (on p. 6) is 'Oct. 21, 1829'—during the organistship of Dr. Clarke-Whitfeld—which is appended to Croft's 'Sing unto God.' The handwriting of S. S. Wesley (who became organist of Hereford in 1832) first appears on p. 26 in the transcript of 'Plead Thou my cause' (Mozart). This is followed, also in Wesley's hand, by 'Give ear unto me' (Marcello). The main interest of the book, however, lies between pages 52 and 73. These contain, all in Wesley's autograph: 'The Wilderness' (dated, at the end, '1834'), 'Lord, we pray Thee' (Haydn), 'Blessed be the God and Father' and 'O God, whose nature and property' (S. S. Wesley).



FAC-SIMILE OF THE OPENING PHRASE OF 'BLESSED BE THE GOD AND FATHER,' IN THE AUTOGRAPH OF ITS COMPOSER, DR. S. S. WESLEY.
(Reproduced from a manuscript organ book at Hereford Cathedral, by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter.)

It will be remembered that the earliest printed version of 'Blessed be the God and Father' contained a foot-note to this effect:

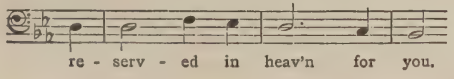
> 'This Anthem was composed, by request, for the Service on Easter-day at Hereford Cathedral, on which occasion only Trebles and a single Bass voice were available.'

There is a tradition that the 'single Bass voice,' who served in the choir on that Easter-day, was the Dean's butler! If this be so, how applicable to this ecclesiastical factotum are Milton's words: 'They also serve who only stand and wait.'

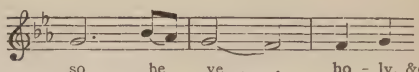
But to wait upon the anthem. Unfortunately this autograph copy of 'Blessed be the God and Father' is incomplete in regard to the accompaniment, many of the bars of which are blank. But the voice parts are entire, and thus there is ample material for making our comparison. In order to present our readers with a specimen of Wesley's bold handwriting in his twenties, and also to show the form in which he originally set the opening words of his anthem, we give in the adjoining column the initial phrase in fac-simile.

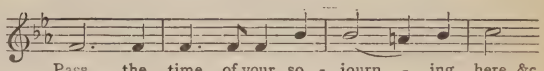
A little later on 'the butler' was given his first opportunity in the following suspension, now given to the tenors:—

The first recitative, sung as a solo at its initial performance, is practically unaltered, except at this point—



Nothing of importance occurs until the soprano solo. Here we find two variants which may be quoted—





After the word 'fear' there are only five, instead of six bars, left blank for the accompaniment.

The lovely responsive section is headed 'Duet Trebles.' There is no indication of a solo voice, and the answering phrases are given to the second trebles. The accompaniment to this movement is also blank; but the three-bar phrase—is lengthened to one of four bars by an extra bar of accompaniment. This is left blank at the first appearance of the phrase, but on its repetition the notes (melody only) of the extra bar are written thus—

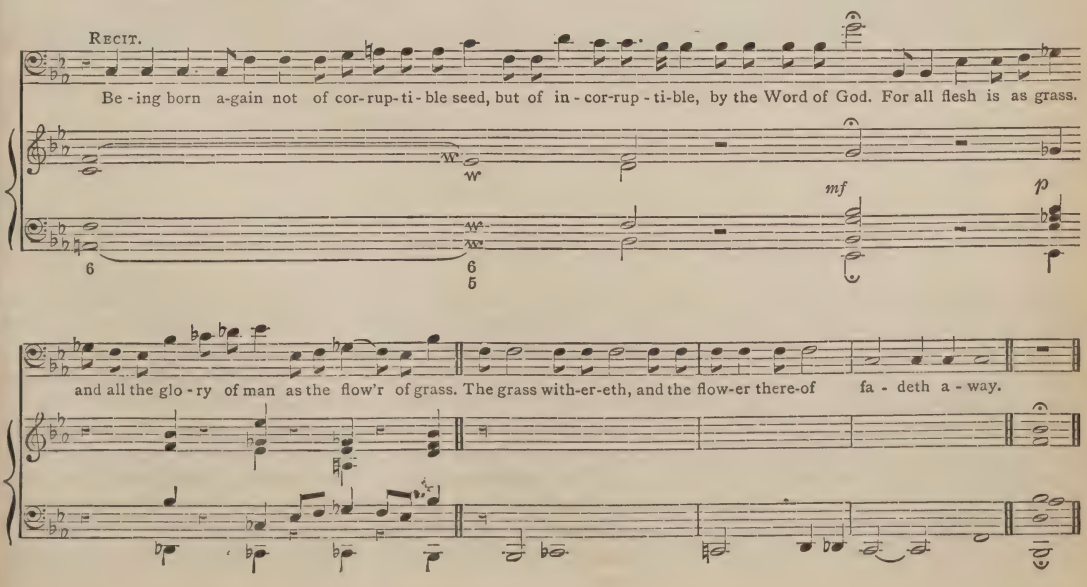
The second recitative shows such important changes that we give this in full. In so doing it will afford the reader the opportunity and pleasure of making his own comparison with the published version—



Recit.
Be - ing born a-gain not of cor-rup-ti-ble seed, but of in - cor-rup - ti-ble, by the Word of God. For all flesh is as grass.
mf
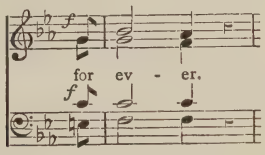
and all the glo - ry of man as the flow'r of grass. The grass with-er-eth, and the flow-er there-of fa - deth a - way.

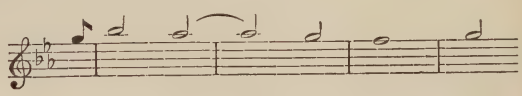
Is it possible that the high G, on the word 'God,' was a slip of Wesley's pen for E flat? It is certainly G in the manuscript. The additional low F in the voice part at the end of this recitative, which appears in the current copies, is not only absent here, but does not find a place in the first printed edition. Observe also the form of the dominant chord which furnishes such a magnificent portal to the last chord.

Last Chorus.—The last two words of the initial phrase are set thus—



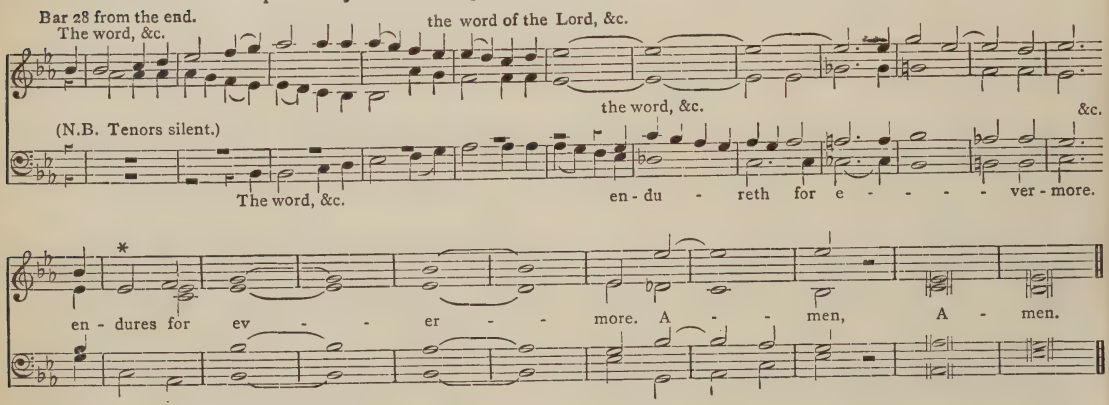
Notice the absence of the D flat (second chord of the above example) which appears in the printed version. By the way, the E natural of this chord, printed as a small note in the organ part of the published copy, does not find a place in the voice parts. Did Wesley omit to insert this E natural as a note to be sung by the second altos?

The first interlude of this final number is sketched as follows—



The final differences may be seen from the two following examples, in the first of which those characteristic horn notes (tonic and dominant) are absent in the tenor part—

Voice parts only: the accompaniment stave is blank after the first bass lead.



Bar 28 from the end.
The word, &c.
the word of the Lord, &c.
the word, &c.
&c.
(N.B. Tenors silent.)
The word, &c.
en - du - reth for e - - - - ver - more.
en - dures for ev - - er - - more. A - - men, A - men.

In regard to the last example, it might be thought that Wesley omitted to fill in the upper E flat at *; but he has written the note with an upward stem. This makes it appear very probable that the beautiful downward skip of the seventh at this point was an afterthought. The repetition of the Plagal cadence will be noticed; and few will deny that the minim rest of the original is an improvement upon the unsatisfactory vagueness, in performance, of the pause on the penultimate bar of the printed version.

Thus completes a comparison which, in addition to its interest, may prove useful as a lesson to young composers in showing them the value of afterthoughts. It may also act as a warning to them not to rush into print. During the seventeen or eighteen years that Wesley kept his anthem in manuscript, he doubtless heard it performed many times and profited thereby. The moral may not be without some application to the would-be Wesleys of our own day.

'The Wilderness,' which is no less prolific in its variants, may form the subject of a similar article upon some future occasion.

A PILGRIMAGE TO THE HOUSE OF JACOB STAINER.

A journey having a definite object is wont to be playfully termed a pilgrimage, but this journey—let this be clearly understood and accounted to me for grace—is really a pilgrimage, for, in the year A.D. 1797, in a house only a stone's throw from that in which Stainer 'lived his art' (as the quaint phraseology of the tablet on his house hath it), a picture of the Holy Virgin miraculously appeared one fine summer morning. One can imagine an immediate sequence of occurrences similar to those recorded by Mr. Hewlett in his 'Madonna of the Peach Tree'—the scared but withal delighted peasants, the pious joy not wholly untainted with more practical considerations of the parish priests, and the proprietary airs of the mayor and corporation, supposing so remote a hamlet as Absam in the Austrian Tirol to possess such dignitaries. Sufficeth for this present narrative that the house became the 'Müttergottes Haus,' the picture was removed to the church, which had only recently been degraded from the grace of its original Gothic design to its present Barn style of architecture by the lack of taste then prevailing, and pilgrims were invited to visit the shrine. Since then the invitation has been readily responded to, and a steady stream of devout Tirolese, year in and year out, treads the Via Crucis which winds through the hayfields from Breitweg, decorated with barbarously executed Stations of the Cross.

The number of violinists who, on their way to or from Ober Ammergau this year, turn aside to visit the home of 'the Father of the German fiddle' (I quote the tablet once more) is conjectural. Judging from my own experience, I should say none. And yet the journey is well worth its trouble—for that it takes some trouble (from the point of view of the hurrying tourist with an inexorable programme) cannot be denied.

We are at Innsbruck, most Italian of Austrian towns, and thence a steam tramway takes us in three-quarters of an hour to Hall-in-Tirol. From the Stadplatz a winding and precipitous street, paved with uncompromising boulders, leads up and up to the Pfarrkirche, most baroque of Tirolese churches, where the skeleton of one whole saint—St. Fortunatus—decked in unspeakable tinsel and improbable jewellery, sleeps in a glass box, and the skulls and isolated bones of a hundred other saintly persons repose behind glass in the Lady Chapel. The efficacy of these 'confused relics' (to quote Mr. Hervey) is testified by innumerable wax models of eyes, ears, noses, mouths, arms, legs, and whole babies, that hang in festoons upon every available inch of wall space. The spectacle is at once gruesome and pathetic. Climbing ever upwards past the church, we reach the dilapidated hamlet of Breitweg, where the main thoroughfares furnish a farmyard for whosoever cares to turn his livestock into them, and thence, across acres of hayfield gemmed with every conceivable flower in carpets of many tinted loveliness, we reach the outskirts of Absam, where bowers of roses compete with the tanneries which 'turn the live air sick.' Here we are at the Pfarrkirche, which is surrounded by booths for the sale of votive tablet and taper, of rosaries and manuals of devotion, the libretti, so to speak, of the miracle, and of the illustrated post card which every German tourist must despatch to his distant friends from whatever spot wherein he finds himself resting for five minutes. Past the church and some little distance up the village street, we reach the Stainer-Grasse, and, a little way up this last, we come to a well-to-do and picturesque chalet, standing in its own garden and courtyard, and half overgrown by a flourishing plum tree that springs from the South-East corner.

On the front of this house is affixed a tablet which bears the following inscription:—

In diesem Hause
lebte seiner Kunst
Jakob Stainer,
Der Vater der deutschen Geige.
Geboren zu Absam 14 Juli 1621, hier Gestorben 1683.

Search among the local archives has revealed the following facts in the history of this house. It was bought by Stainer from one Paul Holzhammer, who was his brother-in-law, on the 12th November, 1666, and after his death it was sold (on the 18th January, 1684) for seven hundred florins to another brother-in-law of Stainer, by name Blasius Kiel. The house, as shown in the accompanying view, was restored and to some extent re-constructed in 1820.

On the south side of the house, under the projecting eaves, is a balcony or loggia, on which one knows that Stainer stored and ripened his wood, even as the present proprietors store and dry their wood there for building or burning. Of relics of the great fiddle-maker the house is bereft, save that in a room on the upper storey is an ordinary substantial work-bench, which we are informed was the actual bench at which he worked—at which he 'lived his art.'

And do the natives of Absam feel a proper pride in their most celebrated compatriot? Not at all. There is not even a post card with a picture of his house on it to be had in the place. To anyone who knows the Tirol this omission expresses the insignificance of this, for us, holy spot. Did the natives but know the story of Count Trautmannsdorf and the fancy annuities that he is reported to have granted in exchange for one of Stainer's fiddles, and were these annuities but reduced to concrete expression in the hopelessly confused coinage of the district — gulden, krone, hellers, fillers, and kreutzers—one may be sure that the Stainerhaus would rank in their estimation side by side with the Müttergottes Haus, and the post card would flourish in the local shops.

I came away feeling a little sad, and also a little infected with the disease that floats in the air, for, before leaving, I sent a picture post card to Arthur Hill.

Innsbruck, June 16, 1900.

Master Frank Merrick, an exceedingly clever boy pupil of Professor Leschetizky, of Vienna, gave an exacting and comprehensive pianoforte recital at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, on June 28, which included an 'extemporization' upon a theme given by one of the audience. The future career of this gifted child of fourteen years will be watched with interest. His father, Dr. Frank Merrick, of Clifton, will doubtless take care that his son is not overforced in the process of his musical education.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

The familiar portrait of Mendelssohn, which depicts him clad in a huge cloak adorned with two prominent tassels, has often excited the incredulity of those who knew him in England. That such scepticism was well founded is furnished in a letter from the composer, dated 'Berlin, February 1, 1844,' and written in French (evidently to his French publisher), which was sold at Sotheby's during the past month. Here is the portrait extract in its translated form:—

'And then you receive in this packet also the portraits, for which you have asked me. They are said to be very like me. The head is copied from a very good picture, and everybody is pleased with it; but the engraver has introduced his own idea, and instead of doing the body simply as the painter [Hildebrand] did in his picture, he has turned it the other way about, added thereto a superb cloak, and a hand and an arm from which God preserve me! If you cover all except the head you will see what a disagreeable fault this is. Perhaps it could be remedied by re-turning the body (if you still hold to the idea of making a lithograph). Your artists will easily find, by looking at the head alone, which pose suits it,—it is exactly the contrary of this one. But it is said to be the best of all the others for the head; that is why I have sent it to you.'

There were other interesting letters of Mendelssohn—most prolific of epistlers—in the above-mentioned sale. This extract—from a letter to Aloys Fuchs, dated 'Leipzig, Dec. 2, 1836'—shows that he must have been an industrious visitor to Buckingham Palace during one of his visits to London. He says to Fuchs:—

'While in London I had the opportunity of copying a long Psalm by Handel (12-15 numbers) of which there is a unique copy in the Royal Library, and which has never been printed. I copied it at the time on the condition not to pass it on to anyone, and would now send you my copy (first having it re-copied for myself), for I am convinced you would promise me not to pass it on; the only question is whether it is of interest to you for your collection, seeing that it is not a real autograph of Handel.'

An Antigone letter, dated 'London, June 5, 1842,' to Herr F. Kistner, the well-known music publisher of Leipzig, contains an interesting reference to Sterndale Bennett. It will be remembered that Bennett made many friends during his visits to Leipzig, and that Kistner published some of the young Englishman's compositions. This will help to explain the extract from Mendelssohn's communication:—

'I gave Bennett his pin at a concert; he stuck it in, immediately conducted an overture of mine, was delighted, and all the players were mightily impressed by your beautiful gift. They said they also wanted to go to Leipzig.'

The concert referred to by Mendelssohn was that given at the Hanover Square Rooms by the late Mr. William and Miss Dorrell, on June 2, 1842, which was conducted by Bennett. The overture was the 'Midsummer Night's Dream.' Concerning its performance the Musical World recorded: 'Dr. Mendelssohn Bartholdy was present, and expressed himself highly pleased with the manner in which his overture was performed.' Miss Dorrell played Mendelssohn's

Rondo brillant in B minor and her brother performed Sterndale Bennett's second Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. In this latter connection the Musical World said: 'The selection of this concerto confers a threefold honour on Mr. W. Dorrell, since, in the first place, it is really fine and classical music; in the second, it is the composition of an Englishman, and the first English concerto that was ever performed by an Englishman, at an English concert [the italics are Mr. Davison's]; and in the third, the manner of its execution proves Mr. W. Dorrell to be one of the most skilful pianists of the day.' In these days when the music of Sterndale Bennett seems to be suffering undue neglect, the words of 'J. W. D.' may be pondered with advantage to the cause of native art.

Two amusing extracts from this fine collection of letters sold at the well known rooms in Wellington Street may be quoted. The first shows that dear old Mrs. Keeley had a firm belief in the moveable dough.

Yours very truly, up to my elbows in flour making a pie, M. A. Keeley.

The next is from Grisi, in English, undated, and to an unknown correspondent. After referring to some proposed apartments in Conduit Street as being too dear for her—'having made up my mind not to spend more than 6 or 7 guineas a week'—the great prima donna concludes her epistle thus:—

'Give my love to Lilla, kisses to the children, and a good slap to Balfe.'

The italics are Grisi's!

The final volume of the Bach-Gesellschaft contains an important résumé from the pen of Professor H. Kretzschmar of the history of the Leipzig Bach Society, also of the distinguished men who, directly or indirectly, were instrumental in bringing about the formation of that Society. This résumé has been printed separately. The interesting story is a long one, but our space is limited. A mention of one or two of the prominent men and notable events will, therefore, we hope, induce musicians who can appreciate the greatness of the undertaking to read Professor Kretzschmar's own account. As clavier and organ player, Bach's supremacy was acknowledged during his lifetime, yet it was not until the nineteenth century that his importance as a composer was fully recognised. In 1802—i.e., fifty years before the foundation of the Bach-Gesellschaft—Hoffmeister and Kühnel, of Leipzig, announced the publication of Bach's 'Œuvres complètes,' though by that they are supposed to have had in view only the instrumental works. Mention is made of the deep interest taken in Bach's music in England by Kollmann and Samuel Wesley. The statement, however, that the former prepared an edition of the Wohltemperirte Clavier in 1799 is erroneous. Kollmann, as is known from a statement in his Quarterly Musical Register of January 1, 1812, relinquished the long entertained idea of such a publication when the German editions were introduced into England. The whole matter of this Kollmann edition was carefully and conclusively stated by Dr. W. H. Cummings in The Musical Times of March, 1885, p. 131. It is unnecessary to recall the noble efforts of Mendelssohn to make known the mighty genius of Bach. In some of his letters he wrote enthusiastically about Bach; but Dr. Kretzschmar states that the most striking proofs of his admiration and zeal for the master are contained in a series of letters, as yet unpublished, addressed to Franz Hauser between the years 1830 and 1846.

The formation of the London Handel Society in 1843 caused Schumann in his paper to remind the Germans of their duty towards Bach. From among many who by word or deed furthered the movement which culminated in the establishment of the Bach-Gesellschaft, may be specially mentioned Otto Jahn, the biographer of Mozart, and Moritz Hauptmann, the Leipzig cantor. The prospectus setting forth the scheme, and signed by all the members of the committee, was dated July 28, 1850, the hundredth anniversary of the death of the master, to whom tardy justice was to be paid. The great undertaking commenced half-a-century ago has now, so far as is possible, been completed. The Bach-Gesellschaft has fulfilled its mission, and it is proposed that a new society should be formed to help to spread a knowledge of the glorious works which have been collected in the great Breitkopf and Härtel edition.

There has been some slight danger of the collapse of the unique Musical Festival held at Hovingham, in the North Riding of Yorkshire; but happily it has been averted, at least for the present, and the next meeting has been definitely arranged to take place on September 18 and 19. As Canon Pemberton, who is the originator, conductor, and prime mover of these Festivals, is leaving this district, it seems only too likely, however, that this may prove the last Hovingham Festival. Distinction will be given to the event by the presence of Dr. Joachim, an old friend of the Hovingham conductor, who, for the second time, has generously offered his help. The choral works to be given include Beethoven's Mass in C, Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night,' and Goring Thomas's 'The Swan and the Skylark,' a pleasant admixture of old and new, lively and severe. Sir William Worsley, who takes a warm interest in the Festival, again gives it a home in the curious 'Riding School' attached to Hovingham Hall, and, with so influential a supporter, it may safely be prophesied that the Festival will not be allowed to come to an end without a severe struggle, though it will be hard work to find a suitable successor to Canon Pemberton.

The Music Exhibition at the Crystal Palace has practically taken the form of a collection of ancient instruments to which the rich store of the Rev. F. W. Galpin has contributed no small quota. Those who are interested in such matters will find some curious specimens of old-time sound-producers—e.g., the Greek photinx, the German 'onion flute,' the alto 'rackett' or 'sausage bassoon,' and the 'whit horn,' which is made of a spiral twist of willow bark pinned together with hawthorn prickles. Mr. Galpin also lends a 'bible regal' and a charming little 'portative organ.' The collections of Mr. F. Erckmann and Dr. Henry Watson have also contributed to the interest of the exhibition, especially in regard to savage instruments, one of which is a curious 'throat trumpet' from Nyastaranga, in the North-West Provinces. There are, of course, many specimens of the key-board family of instruments, illustrating various periods. A special Handel department contains some personal relics of the great master from Dr. W. H. Cummings's fine collection. Not the least interesting feature of these Sydenham exhibits is the complete set of orchestral instruments, full scores, and parts used by the private orchestra maintained, in the time of Handel, by Sir Samuel Hellier, and now lent by Colonel Shaw Hellier. The Music Exhibition at the Crystal Palace is well worth a visit.

We much regret to record the death of Miss Isabel Sulivan, daughter of Admiral T. B. M. Sulivan, which took place at Dinan, France, on the 8th ult. That Miss Sulivan possessed a distinct poetic gift is evidenced in her trio of verses, entitled 'By order of the Queen.' These verses were suggested by the Queen's command that 'all ranks in Her Majesty's Irish regiments shall wear, as a distinction, a sprig of shamrock in their head-dress on St. Patrick's Day, to commemorate the gallantry of her Irish soldiers during the recent battles in South Africa.' As showing how admirably Miss Sulivan caught the spirit of the old Irish song, 'The Wearin' of the Green'—to the tune of which, as arranged by Mrs. Needham, her words are sung—we give the first verse and the refrain of the third :—

BY ORDER OF THE QUEEN.

Oh! Paddy dear, and did ye hear
The news that's going round?
Sure, ev'ry Irish regiment will Proclaim the joyful sound.
No more St. Patrick's Day we'll keep
By mourning for the 'Green,'
We're bold to wear our shamrock high—
By order of the Queen!
I thought of 'Bobs' and White,
And of many a hundred more,
Each proving Irish loyalty
In death and danger sore;
They're the finest set of fighters
That ever yet was seen,
And they're wearing high the shamrock now—
By order of the Queen.

Victoria in her people's hearts
Enshrined for aye has been:
Not least in theirs who wear the sprig—
By order of the Queen.

Miss Sulivan was a most accomplished amateur violinist, and took great pleasure in playing for charitable objects.

The degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, was conferred upon Mr. W. H. Cummings by the University of Dublin on Coronation Day. The new Doctor was introduced to the Vice-Chancellor by the Public Orator, Dr. Tyrell, in a Latin speech of which the following is a translation :—

'I now introduce to you William Hayman Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music in the City of London, the largest of our great schools of music. He is not only the composer of strains which the musician wakes to life with skilful fingers, not only does he teach those strains more persuasively than all others, except our esteemed Professor Prout, ours both by office and affection, but he has also shone in the special task of setting forth in writing the lives of those who have become famous in the realm of our national music. In applauding him, therefore, you will bestow applause and honour on them.'

On the previous Monday (June 25) Dr. Cummings was presented, at the rooms of the Royal College of Organists, with the academical gown appertaining to his degree. This 'garment of praise'—if the term may be allowed in this connection—was subscribed for by many friends and well-wishers of the doctor-elect. Sir Alexander Mackenzie presided, and the presentation was made by Dr. E. H. Turpin in appropriate terms. A silver tea service was also given to Mrs. Cummings, and, there still being a surplus over, a weather glass was purchased for Dr. Cummings. This, however, did not exhaust the Testimonial fund, so the balance of the money subscribed was handed to the Principal of the Guildhall School of Music for him to devote to any charity that he might choose. Readers of the biographical sketch of Dr. Cummings, which appeared in our issue for February, 1898, will remember how he got on by degrees, due not a little to his own perseverance and steady aims. Now he has got honour by a well-deserved degree. Congratulations sincere to him.

Dr. William Mason, the distinguished American musician, has commenced in the Century Magazine a series of papers, entitled 'Memories of a musical life,' which promise to be of great interest. From the first instalment, issued last month, we extract the following reference to Wagner, whom Mr. Mason visited in the year 1852 :—

A WAGNER AUTOGRAPH.

I did not leave Wagner's house without what many musicians, to whom I have shown it, consider one of the most interesting musical autographs ever penned. It is autographic from beginning to end, even to the lines of the staff; for when I asked Wagner for his autograph, he drew them himself on a sheet of blank paper, and then wrote what is evidently the germ of the dragon motive in 'The Ring of the Nibelung.' It is dated June 5, 1852, and it is particularly interesting that he should have written this motive at that time. From his correspondence with Liszt, it is clear that he had not yet finished the poem of the 'Walküre,' and had not yet begun the score of the cycle. He wrote the books of the 'Ring' backwards, but in the composition of the cycle he began with the 'Rheingold,' in the autumn of the year in which I met him. The dragon motive occurs in the 'Rheingold,' but in quite a different form. He began the 'Walküre' in June, 1854, two years later, completing it in 1856. In the meantime, in the autumn of 1854, he also began the music of 'Siegfried,' and it is in the first act of this music-drama, written more than two years after I had met him, that we find the dragon motive exactly as it is written in my autograph, except that it is transposed a tone lower, and that the length of the notes is changed, though their relative value is the same, dotted halves being substituted for quarters. The passage will be found on page 7 of Klindworth's piano score of 'Siegfried.' This, I believe, is the only place in the four divisions of the 'Ring' where the motive appears in this form.

Added significance and value are given to the autograph by the lines which Wagner wrote under it, and which are signed and dated: 'Wenn Sie so etwas ähnliches einmal von mir hören sollten, so denken Sie an mich!' ('If you ever hear anything of mine like this, then think of me'). Even this was characteristic of the man. 'Siegfried' was not heard until nearly a quarter of a century after he had written a passage from it in my autograph-book—but it was heard.

Signor Piccolomini, the well known song composer, is, we are sorry to learn, seriously and distressingly ill. He is sixty-six years of age and, through the misfortunes of ill-health and failing powers, he is unfortunately without means. As his wife and her three young children are totally unprovided for, a fund has been started with a view of procuring a livelihood for Madame Piccolomini and her little ones, and of providing a home for her husband should he become sufficiently restored to be able to return to it. Nine donations already received, amounting to forty-two guineas, have given the fund a good impetus, and further subscriptions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mr. Gunby Hadath, 39, Chichele Road, Cricklewood, N.W. We may add that Signor Piccolomini is, we understand, a nephew of the great Cardinal of that name and a cousin of the late Mdlle. Piccolomini, the celebrated prima donna.

KNELLER HALL.

(From a Photograph by Mrs. Farquhar Glennie.)

Mr. James Kendrick Pyne has received at the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury the degree of Doctor in Music in recognition of his quarter-of-a-century's service as organist of Manchester Cathedral. The conferment of the honour took place at Lambeth Palace on the 10th ult., when Sir George Martin and Sir Frederick Bridge (Dr. Pyne's predecessor at Manchester Cathedral) were the musical sponsors for the new Doctor. A pupil of and assistant to Dr. S. S. Wesley at Winchester and Gloucester Cathedrals, Dr. Pyne has had a varied experience at the organ keyboard for thirty-seven years, he having been appointed organist of All Saints' Church, Bath, his native city, at the early age of eleven. Since then he has successively held the following appointments:—Christ Church, St. Mark's, and St. Mary-le-Crypt, Gloucester; St. James's, Cheltenham; Aylesbury Parish Church; Christ Church, Clifton; Chichester Cathedral, and St. Mark's, Philadelphia, U.S.A. In 1875, on his return to England, he became organist of Manchester Cathedral, and subsequently organist to the Corporation of Manchester and professor of the organ at the Royal College of Music (Manchester). Congratulations hearty to Dr. Pyne—the distinguished pupil of a distinguished master, and the worthy son of a worthy father, the late Mr. James Kendrick Pyne, for fifty-three years organist of Bath Abbey Church.

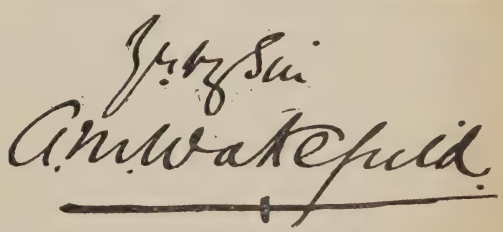
Here is a military band story. A British regimental band under a German bandmaster showed signs of insubordination. The matter was brought before the notice of the Commanding Officer, a stern disciplinarian with a keen eye to the minutiæ of 'dressing.' Said the colonel, with expletive warmth, 'I'll stop this mutiny.' He accordingly made his way to the band-room while a rehearsal was in progress. The first thing that caught his critical optic nerve was the zigzaggedness of the slides of the three trombones—alto, tenor, and bass. This total disregard of the ins and outs of military precision prompted the colonel to immediate action. 'Put those two fellows in the guard-room,' quoth he, 'the corporal is right.' As the corporal happened to be a tenor trombonist, the colonel evidently thought that a two-striped man must be pursuing the even tenor of his trombonic ways and, therefore, not a mutineer to be made an example of.

One of Sir George Grove's favourite stories was somewhat after this manner. An Englishman, wishing to say the correct thing on parting from a Frenchman, effusively uttered 'Au reservoir.' 'Tanks,' was the reply.

Dr. Croft will form the subject of a brief biographical sketch in our August number. It will be illustrated by an extra supplement portrait of this distinguished church musician, specially taken from the original painting in the Music School at Oxford. There will also be a portrait of Croft as a chorister boy, a full-sized fac-simile of the famous tune 'St. Anne's' (reputed to be by Dr. Croft) as it first appeared nearly two hundred years ago, and a fac-simile signature of the composer of 'God is gone up.' The same issue will also contain a hintful article on 'violin playing,' by Mr. Alfred Gibson, and a full report of the Chester Musical Festival (held too late last month to be chronicled in the present number), with a full-page view of the Cathedral and a portrait of the conductor, Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, organist of Chester Cathedral.

MISS WAKEFIELD.

At the fifteenth Westmorland Musical Festival, which was held in Kendal in April last, Miss Wakefield, with whose name the scheme has been associated from the beginning, announced her retirement from the conductorship. She said she was glad to be able to choose the occasion of the most successful festival of the whole series to thus submit her claim to a rest after fifteen years of arduous service. The completion of such a chapter in the life of one who has worked so ably and earnestly on behalf of musical education calls for more than passing notice. It is not too much to say that no other of her sex in this country has done so much as Miss Wakefield to stimulate and foster popular musical study.



The growth of the Westmorland festival has been phenomenal. What was at first a small local competition, that concerned merely a few score of villagers, has expanded to an undertaking interesting the whole county side and drawing into its attractive fold scores of choirs of all kinds, village orchestras, and other musical organisations, most of which were brought into being by the festival scheme. A district reputed to be unmusical has, in this way, gained an almost national reputation for its enthusiasm for musical study and ability in execution. That this proud achievement is mainly owing to the faith, inspiration, and musical skill of Miss Wakefield, her numerous and influential local coadjutors would be the first to claim.

The Westmorland festival is not merely a scheme of competitions. The competitive side is subordinate and is meant to minister to the end. No one knows better than Miss Wakefield that competitions may have a seamy side. At Kendal the prizes offered consist, with one exception only, of medals, certificates, and banners. The exception is a prize of £5, which is offered to the village most successful in several sections, junior and senior. The money incentive is, therefore, practically non-existent. The end is to develop faculty by systematic study, to establish ideals of good execution, and to provide object lessons as to how such ideals may be realised; and, further, to give as wide an acquaintance as possible with the literature of music. New music is studied every year. Adjudicators are asked to give full reasons for their decisions, and to point out the path of improvement where necessary. The eagerness to know what to do and how to do it manifested at these yearly gatherings is one of their most exhilarating features. Then the combined performance of some large works is looked upon as an absolutely essential part of the scheme. The competition of the small sections equip choralists for this supreme effort. The educative effect of this constant striving to acquire knowledge and skill was strikingly exemplified this year in the rapt attention with which the 600 choralists comprising the adult festival choir, and the immense audience followed admirable performances of the C minor Symphony and the 'Scotch' Symphony given by the Manchester band under Signor Risegari. The importance attached to the combined performance may be measured by the extraordinary efforts put forth to secure adequate rehearsal. At first the difficulties seemed insuperable, but Miss Wakefield was not to be foiled. She and her sister (now Mrs. Argles) would, during the winter months, on nearly every night in the week, drive round in all weathers to some remote village to toilsomely teach by note or by ear a Bach motet, a Mendelssohn chorus, or a modern cantata. To be drilled and talked at by Miss Wakefield was the sensation of the week to many a humble villager, who would tramp miles in slush to enjoy the stimulus.

A list recently issued gives the names of 159 pieces performed at the festivals. Amongst the list there are two of Bach's cantatas and two of Mendelssohn's Psalms, 'The Song of Miriam' (Schubert), 'Ode to St. Cecilia's Day' and 'Invocation to Music' (C. Hubert Parry), 'Orpheus' (Gluck), 'The Power of Sound' and 'Ode to the Sea' (Somervell), 'The Ruins of Athens' (Beethoven), 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar), 'Lochinvar' (Liza Lehmann), and 'The Hymn of Praise' (Mendelssohn). This year, Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' besides the two classic symphonies named above, were the chief features of the programme. For next year Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' have been chosen.

The scheme is indebted for much of its success to the fact that many residents, chiefly ladies, possessing great social influence, supported the enterprise from the first. The upper social set in the Kendal neighbourhood has numerous and influential connections in other parts of the country. The visitors' list in festival times has always included many notabilities from distant places. Many such visitors, struck with the vista opened before them of a thoroughly practicable and healthy means of contributing something to ameliorate the conditions of country life, naturally sought advice as to how in their own districts they could set going a similar scheme. Miss Wakefield, therefore, soon became greatly in demand to attend meetings designed to inaugurate local festivals. The result at present is that schemes are already at work at Carlisle, York, Malvern, Brigg, Spilsby, Northampton, Norfolk, Isle of Man, Barrow, Leyburn, and Richmond (Yorkshire), and others are proposed. Even the great competitions at Morecambe were, we believe, suggested by the Kendal example.

All Miss Wakefield's enthusiasm and practical insight would have been in vain if they had not been supplemented by her musical ability, both natural and acquired. Had she have chosen to have entered the musical profession, she would have taken high rank as a singer. Gifted with a fine full mezzo-soprano voice, which she could mould to express strong dramatic feeling, she was fortunate in being able to avail herself of the tuition of Randegger, Henschel, Blumenthal, Grieg, and Sir Herbert Oakley in gaining a general musical education. To Signor Randegger's teaching Miss Wakefield ascribes the fact that her voice, often subjected to great strain at innumerable rehearsals, has lasted so well.

In composition she has made several decided hits. The songs, 'No, sir!' and 'A bunch of cowslips,' have run through many editions. Her latest effort is a popular setting of Colonel Hay's song, 'When the boys come home.' In the literary field her pen has been constantly active. She has contributed many articles on musical subjects to well-known magazines, but her most notable essay is the handsome and useful book, 'Ruskin on Music,' in which all that the great writer said on music is culled for the benefit or obfuscation of the general reader. Her beautiful home, Nutwood, at Grange-over-Sands, overlooking Morecambe Bay, is full of mementoes of her acquaintance and friendship with well known people. She often sang to Ruskin at Brantwood, where she was a welcome guest. His acknowledgment of the service in the dedication in 'Sesame and Lilies' is worth quotation. It is as follows: 'Mary Wakefield, to whose bright and gifted nature—good—in the kindest sense, the author is thankful for some of the happiest hours of his old age.' In a fine edition of his poems, Matthew Arnold wrote: 'Mary Wakefield, with affectionate admiration and regard.' To both these tributes thousands of people, young and old, could sincerely subscribe. May Miss Wakefield live long to enjoy the fruits of her honourable and unstinted labour!

THE TRENT CODICES.*

Here we have the first instalment of Professor Guido Adler's edition of the Trent Codices. For eight or nine years these transcriptions have been impatiently awaited, for it was generally known that the Austrian Government had acquired the six manuscripts from the Trent authorities in 1891, and had placed them in capable hands to be transcribed, edited, and published. No one will wonder at the number of years that have slipped away in the preparation of this fine volume, when they note the laborious and minute care with which Professor Adler, assisted by Herr Oswald Koller, has worked at every detail and followed up any clue that might throw light on doubtful points. For comparative purposes, the great libraries of Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, England, and Austria have been ransacked to find any other existing MS. versions of these fifteenth century compositions. As Professor Adler observes, this is the first really noteworthy collection of fifteenth century part-writing, both secular and sacred, ever published. He says: 'With the exception of a few small fragments published by F. W. Arnold, H. Bellermann, and Robert Eitner, the only volume which has hitherto appeared is Stainer's "Dufay and his contemporaries" (1898), containing fifty short secular songs, dating back to the first half of the fifteenth century, selected from the Canonici Codex in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.' Although Professor Adler has examined the Canonici MS. for purposes of comparison, he thinks that readers of his publication will find 'Dufay and his contemporaries' a welcome addition to their knowledge of the music of this period, and he is good enough to make frequent references to it.

Finding it quite impossible to publish the whole of the Trent MSS., which consist of six volumes, containing more than 2,000 pages, and 1,585 liturgical and secular compositions, Professor Adler has been obliged to limit himself to what can be included in the seventh year's (1900) issue of the 'Denkmäler' series. This first volume, splendidly printed, contains the thematic catalogue of all six Codices, and a selection of compositions, both secular and sacred, chosen to illustrate the different styles of the composers. The various names mentioned in the Trent Codices are in some cases familiar as those of great masters of the period, such as Dunstable, Dufay, Binchois, Guillaume Le Grant; in others, they are less known, as Johannes Ciconia, Egidius Velut, Jacobus Vide; and yet in others, are entirely new to us, as Ludovicus de Arimino, Andreas, Ricardus Markham, Roullet, and Verbene. H. Battre, an unknown name, ten of whose compositions will be found in the Trent Codices, was probably a Netherlands composer. Two other names which here make their first appearance are those of Christopher Anthony and Ludovicus Krafft, both apparently natives of Trent.

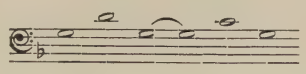
The opening compositions form a fitting introduction; they consist of songs of greeting, dedications to contemporary dignitaries of the Church, and a song to Vigilius, the patron saint of Trent, where these MSS. have been so carefully preserved; all are specially interesting as having been probably written by men living in Trent at that time. An entire Mass by Dufay is also for the first time published; other works with Latin text are by Binchois, Brasart, Dunstable, Grossim, Johannes Sarto, &c. The proportional numbers of works by each composer obviously corresponds to his reputation at that period. Dufay here easily heads the list, followed by Dunstable and the others. Of songs with French text, Binchois, who wrote some of the most graceful of his time, is represented by far the larger number of compositions; Bedingham, Caron, Heyne, Pyllois, and Isaac contribute one song each. Ten German songs lack the names of their composers.

Professor Adler in his most admirably written Preface has amassed a large amount of interesting information about the Codices. The notation is throughout in the open white notes, with black notes for proportio sesquialtera, red notes being rarely used for this purpose; in fact, with the exception of one example in Codex 87, f. 239*b*, they only appear in Codex 92, ff. 1 to 143. The clefs used are of all sorts, the G clef on the second line, the C clef on all the lines, and the F clef on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, or 5th lines. The compositions are generally written in three and four parts; the few one-part songs are merely unfinished fragments. Many masses, a few motets, and isolated secular pieces are in four parts; but compositions like Dufay's 'Se la face,' Caron's 'Helas,' Isaac's 'Le serviteur,' Heyne's 'Amours,' have obviously had the fourth part added at a later date. There are a few five and six-part pieces, but three-part compositions on the whole preponderate. Four different settings of the evidently very popular Italian song, 'O rosa bella,' are included in this volume, as well as a three-part setting by Johannes Ciconia, taken from a Vatican Codex for purposes of comparison. Two are anonymous, each in three parts; No. 1 has the first three notes in all the parts identical with Dunstable's opening, but, with the exception of an occasional phrase, the resemblance there ceases. No. 2 also has one or two phrases similar to Dunstable's; a comparison of it with a version in a Munich MS. led to the discovery that the Munich contratenor was totally different, so it is here printed below the Trent contratenor.

Hert's setting of the words in three parts, with an alternative discant added by Okeghem, has note for note the same discant as Dunstable; the first seven bars of his tenor are also identical with Dunstable's discant. All four parts, including Okeghem's discant, have the same musical phrase of five notes to the words 'O rosa bella' as Dunstable.

And now we come to what is for us the most interesting of all the settings, that of Dunstable in three parts with six optional parts added by Bedingham. It first occurs in Codex 89, pp. 119*b*-120*a*; it is followed by the words: 'Concordantiæ O rosa bella cum aliis tribus ut posuit Bedingham et sine hiis non concordant.' Three extra parts are then given, the tenor and contratenor being each marked 'Concordans.' In Codex 90, pp. 361*b*-362*a*, it again appears, but instead of Bedingham's Concordantiæ, it is followed by three other parts called respectively 'Gimel,' 'alius Gimel,' and 'Secundus contratenor, concordans cum ceteris vocibus.' The learned editor thinks that only one of these six extra parts can be combined with Dunstable's music at a time, 'Von diesen sechs hinzugefügten stimmt immer nur je eine zu der ursprünglichen Composition' (p. 289). Is it possible that a bar has been omitted in Bedingham's third part, between bars 8 and 9? For the writer has seen a transcription of the three-part composition of Dunstable with the three parts of Bedingham, in which, by repeating bar 9 of the latter's third part and by making one or two slight alterations in his second part, is obtained a very fine piece of six-part writing, most cleverly put together. Judging by the fac-simile (No. 4), many small misprints have found their way into the Dunstable music, the most serious being in bar 39, where the discant is printed a third higher than it is in the fac-simile. In bars 10, 24, 28, 34, the flat introduced into the text ought surely to have been placed above each note, as no flat is to be found in the fac-simile. This is apparently the first appearance of the word 'Gimel' in a secular composition; and though it has often been met with in sacred works such as Christopher Tye's Mass 'Euge Bone,' where Gimel is written against each of the two trebles 'Pleni sunt cœli,' its meaning still remains rather doubtful. It is a word peculiar to English MSS., and appears to designate 'twin' parts, which are always placed above several other parts; in other words, a pair of discant or treble parts; in the case of the Trent MS., one or other of the two Gimel parts are intended to be sung with Dunstable's discant, but not with each other.

Three Masses in the Trent Codices are written on 'O rosa bella,' two on Dunstable's tenor:—



and one on his discant:—

In a German composition, 'In Gotes Namen faren wir,' the theme of the German Lied is worked out in six parts, on the top of which are added two more parts with a Latin motet text. This quaint fashion of adding one or more parts to a well-known composition survived to a much later date, for in a recent volume of Henry Expert's excellent publication, entitled 'Les Maîtres Musiciens de la Renaissance française' (Paris, 1900), we are given part of 'Le Printemps,' songs by Claude Le Jeune, published in 1603. Among them will be found (p. 50) 'Le Chant de l'Alouette'; the first portion is in four parts by Jannequin, with a fifth part added by Claude Le Jeune; the second portion is entirely by Claude; and the third portion again has a fifth part added by him. Much the same thing occurs in 'Le Chant du Rossignol' (p. 92); Jannequin composed the first, second, and third portions in four parts, to each of which Claude Le Jeune added a fifth, while the latter composed the whole of the fourth and probably the whole of the fifth and sixth portions.

The different parts of the compositions in the Trent Codices are variously named, the upper part, sometimes called Discantus, is more often unnamed; occasionally a Discantus Secundus appears, and even a Tertius. In Battre's pieces, the upper part is sometimes called Motetus, more rarely Triplum. The lower parts are Tenor and Contra. Two tenor parts are called Tenor Primus and Secundus, the latter changes now and then to Tenor Bassus. The two contratenor parts are either Contra Altus and Bassus or Altus and Bassus; occasionally Subcontratenor and Concordans occur. The compass covered is exceptionally large; the Trent compositions as a whole have a compass of three-and-a-half octaves. The Doric, Phrygian, Lydian, Mixolydian, Ionic, and Eolian modes are used, the Doric most frequently. As to the texts of the compositions, it is remarkable that a great number of the Latin liturgical words, hymns, tropes, sequences, &c., are not to be found in any of the great published collections of Latin texts. A curious fact about one of the Italian songs, 'La Martinella,' by Martini, which appears in various manuscripts is that the words have never yet been found written out in full. This is similar to the case of 'L'homme armé,' the old French air, on which numberless masses have been written, and of the text of which only four short lines are known. The words of one song Professor Adler supposes to be a corrupt English text. It is as follows: 'Agwillare habeth standiff ynlauben this tale me told closs Than this zd vp xold and hosnen̄ zedith bstat.' Professor Adler believes that there was instrumental accompaniment, and that the ritornello-like introduction to some of the songs was written for instruments, as in some of the pieces with ritornelli in the 'Dufay' publication.

Modern historians are rather inclined to overrate the importance of the 'Canon' in ancient music. Though popular in the later Netherlands school, in early MSS. it does not play a more important part than in compositions of the present day. Various specimens of canons will be found in the Trent Codices, ranging from the simplest, where the second part follows the first at a certain distance, note for note, to more complicated ones, with elaborate directions as to change of time and pitch. Ten facsimiles of pages carefully selected from the Codices are included in this volume, and give a very excellent idea of the notation, signatures, and time-marks of the original.

Professor Adler offers a few words of practical advice to students of these compositions; he suggests that if the different parts are followed 'horizontally' instead of 'vertically'—that is, if a part is studied in its melodic flow, rather than the combined harmony of all the parts, the introduction of rhythmic peculiarities is at once easily observed. What we are inclined to regard as oddities and crudities of so early a period in musical history attain quite another character when looked upon as the thread of evolution which will lead up to a marvellous development of thought and expression. For these old masters had the root of the matter in them.

In conclusion, it is impossible to lay aside this work without feeling what a debt of gratitude all students of musical history owe to Professor Adler and his collaborateur for the opportunity here given them of studying part-writing of this period. Dunstable, who until now has remained for many of us merely a name, acquires form and substance, while the compositions of Markham, Benet, Bedingham, Sorbi, Leonel, and Sandley, all add to our knowledge of early English music.

AN INTERESTING BOOK.*

Books of the reminiscent species form no small part of the literary output nowadays. Many of these autobiographic concoctions are a mixture of tedious twaddle and egotistical froth. It is therefore refreshing, as in the present instance, to come across a volume of 'personal recollections' wherein the author does not vaunt himself nor puff himself up after the manner of some others. Mr. Sutherland Edwards is not only known as a prolific writer, but he is the doyen of the musical press, although Mr. Joseph Bennett runs him very closely in that honourable position. As our author has passed his three score years and ten, he naturally has the advantage of a long retrospect of recollections both of men and things. Thus we find him chatting upon the introduction of the polka, the initiation (in England) of the moustache—'He's got whiskers under his snout!' proclaimed a mob of rude little boys and girls in the country upon beholding Horace Mayhew's magnificent and well-kept hirsute ornament—the means of street locomotion, and other everyday topics of the long ago. He gives us reminiscences of Thackeray—who was paid at the rate of twelve and sixpence a page for his contributions to Fraser's Magazine—Charles Reade and his fiddle mania, Douglas Jerrold, George Cruickshank, and other celebrities, who, having had their day, have passed from life's fitful scene. Here is a retort of Douglas Jerrold's, which, if not quite new, will bear repetition. 'That is indeed a beautiful melody,' remarked someone to the witty Douglas, 'it quite carries me away.' 'Does it indeed?' exclaimed Jerrold, 'I wish someone here would whistle it.'

But it is time to turn to one or two strictly musical references in Mr. Edwards's anecdotal budget of good things. He tells some good stories of the redoubtable James William Davison, whom he first met in Paris during the time of the coup d'état. Davison, we are told, had 'an abstract reverence for copy'—anything so long as it was interesting. He was not very far wrong. Always genial and lovable, J. W. D. could make a sharp reply when the occasion called for it. 'I constantly praise your articles, Jim,' said a gentleman with an excess of familiarity not quite justified by their relations, 'and you never say a word in favour of mine.' 'When you tell me my articles are good,' replied Davison, 'you don't mean it. But when I tell you that yours are bad, I do.' Davison gave Mr. Edwards a letter to Adolphe Sax, the great musical instrument maker in Paris, which contained these words:—

*'Personal Recollections.' By H. Sutherland Edwards. (Cassell and Company, Limited.)

'Je te présente mon ami. . . . Donne lui un bifteck et des œufs sur le plat.'

'I "breakfasted" again and again with Adolphe Sax,' records Mr. Edwards, 'and always had the same fare—un bifteck et des œufs sur le plat. His friends, he said, knew what to expect, and his cook had got accustomed to these dishes and knew how to prepare them.' Adolphe Sax, the inventor of the Saxophone and other brass instruments which appropriately bear his name, used to be in his factory at six o'clock in the morning personally supervising the work of his men. After eleven he was ready to receive his friends, especially if they had come to breakfast. At these bifteck repasts Mr. Edwards met Vieuxtemps, the great violinist, and Eugene Vivier, who was not only the finest horn-player of his day, but the most charming of men, and the spoiled child of nearly every Court in Europe. Vivier—'remarkable engineer, musician, diplomatist, and professor of mystification'—once complained with facetious bitterness that Mr. Frederic Gye had not sent him a box for one of Angiolina Bosio's touching performances of 'La Traviata.' The renowned horn-player—or should it be hornist?—had written to the manager explaining that he was ready to shed tears, and that while he possessed a pocket handkerchief, he wanted something more. 'J'ai un mouchoir, mais pas de loge,' he pathetically said. Not receiving any response, Vivier sent the dirtiest crossing sweeper he could find to Mr. Gye with a letter demanding 'the return of his correspondence.' Vivier was quite a genius in the blowing of soap bubbles. 'The whole secret of his process consisted in mixing with the soap-suds a little gum.' Thus he was able 'to produce bubbles of such size and solidity that they floated in the air for an almost indefinite time, like so many small balloons.' He produced on his instrument—the horn—a chord of four notes simultaneously sounded. The fact of this achievement was certified to by Meyerbeer, Auber, Halévy, Adolphe Adam, and other musicians of eminence. As Mr. Edwards says, 'the only possible explanation of the matter is that Vivier executed a very rapid arpeggio, so that the four notes which apparently were heard together were, in fact, heard one after the other'—a rapid arpeggio having the effect of a chord.

Here is a typical Vivier cum practical joke story:—

On one occasion Vivier in an omnibus alarmed his fellow passengers by pretending to be mad. He indulged in the wildest gesticulations, and then, as if in despair, drew a pistol from his pocket. The conductor was called upon by acclamation to interfere, and Vivier was on the point of being disarmed when suddenly he broke the pistol in two, handed half to the conductor and began to eat the other half himself. It was made of chocolate!

Thus does Mr. Edwards chat pleasantly on through some 300 pages of very readable matter. His volume of 'recollections' is just the companionable book for the holiday season and deserves many readers. We notice that he gives the year of the marriage of the Princess Royal as 1857: it should be 1858.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

ATTWOOD'S GRAVE.

Thomas Attwood is buried in the Crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral, close to the gates leading to the Wellington Chapel. According to his own wish, his remains were deposited under his own organ—i.e., in a grave beneath the spot where Father Smith's organ stood for 163 years. The original lettering on the stone had become almost obliterated by the tread of passing feet, therefore the inscription has recently been re-cut. It now reads as follows:—

'Under this stone lie the mortal remains of Thomas Attwood, who was appointed organist of this Cathedral, 1796. He departed this life the 24th March, in the 73rd year of his age.

'Turn Thee again, O Lord, at the last, and be gracious unto Thy servant.'

The above text, which did not form part of the original inscription, furnished Attwood with the words of one of his most beautiful compositions—an anthem written for the solemn service held at St. Paul's Cathedral on the day of the interment (November 19, 1817), at Windsor, of the lamented Princess Charlotte. A plain Latin cross, similar to those on other graves in the crypt, has also been added to that of Mozart's pupil.

A CHOIR EXCURSION EXTRAORDINARY.

A reliable correspondent 'on the other side' sends us the following welcome information:—

It may be interesting to the many readers of The Musical Times to hear from the most noted city in the far North-West of the United States. Seattle, of Klondyke fame, harbours among its musical institutions one of the best choirs of the Union, in St. Mark's Church. The same was organised ten years ago and was under three different choirmasters and organists till 1893, when Mr. Chas. C. Englehard, the present incumbent, took charge. Church music, at that time, was very amateurish, and many difficulties had to be overcome, especially financially, to raise the standard higher. Incessant labour on the part of the choirmaster and this most faithful choir have contributed largely to the present results, as well as the perfect harmony which reigns undisturbed between rector, music committee, choirmaster, and singers. Rev. John P. Derwent Lloyd, in charge for the past three years, manifests the desire to have for the parish the best that can be procured, and being himself of most refined musical taste, objects to the trivial music which has gained much the upper hand in so many churches. The choir numbers a chorus of fifty voices and a solo quartet. There are twenty boys, twelve women, twenty-two men, who come to two weekly rehearsals. There are no written rules and regulations, however, the singers are so much in sympathy with their work and the aims of the choirmaster that the attendance continues to be the admiration of the congregation. The choirmaster makes his selection from the best Anglican compositions.

For the last two winters the choir have given once a month a Festival Evening Service, when part of some oratorio would be sung, and among their répertoire are Gounod's 'Redemption,' Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus,' Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' Handel's 'Messiah,' Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum,' Haydn's 'Creation,' Gounod's 'Gallia,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.'

In the summer months the choirmaster takes the boys for an outing. The most remarkable of these excursions has been the expedition to the summit of Mount Rainier, 14,444 feet above sea level, including a march of 140 miles through the beautiful forests of the North-West, with bag and baggage and provisions for twenty-four days.

Fortunate choir boys of Seattle.

EXETER DIOCESAN CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

The fourteenth annual Festival of the Exeter Diocesan Choral Association took place in Exeter Cathedral, on June 26. About 900 singers took part in the performance of the special music, which included processional and recessional hymns by Dr. E. H. Turpin and Mr. T. Roylands Smith, special chants by the Rev. Arnold D. Culley and Dr. D. J. Wood, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F, by the late King Hall, and Mr. John E. West's Te Deum in B flat. The anthem was a setting of 'Behold, God is my Salvation,' by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods. Dr. D. J. Wood ably accompanied throughout, and the organ was reinforced by a quartet of brass instruments. A large congregation attended the service, which was most impressively and reverently rendered. The Association, founded in 1886 by the late Dean Cowie, has done and continues to do much good work, under the skilful direction of Mr. T. Roylands Smith, who is an indefatigable worker in the cause of Church music.

Dr. Charles G. Verrinder has just received from the Council of the West London Synagogue the sum of £100, in recognition of his long and valued services as organist and choirmaster. Mr. F. D. Mocatta, the chairman, in sending the cheque to the gratified recipient thereof said that 'many appreciative references were made to the constant zeal and attention which have so conspicuously distinguished the discharge of Dr. Verrinder's duties during the past forty years, and we trust that the synagogue may continue for many more years to enjoy the benefit of his ability and devotion to its service.' Congratulations to Dr. Verrinder upon so pleasant an acknowledgment of 'something attempted, something done.'

ORGAN RECITALS.

The rise in the temperature during the past month seems to have cooled the enthusiasm of organists in the matter of organ recitals. Thus there is very little of importance to report under a heading that is very prolific during the non-tropical season of the year. A new organ, built by Messrs. Lewis and Co., has recently been opened at St. James's Church, Darlington, by Mr. R. Mack, organist of Catterick Parish Church, who played Wesley's 'Choral Song and Fugue.' Another organ inauguration is that of the Congregational Church, Wiveliscombe, when Mr. Arthur Clements, of Taunton, presided at the new instrument built by Messrs. Minns and Co., also of the latter town. And yet another, the opening of the new organ, built by Messrs. Alexander Young and Sons, Manchester, in the Congregational Church, Openshaw, when Mr. G. F. Wrigley gave an interesting programme which concluded with Smart's Festive March. The dedication of the new organ built by Messrs. Browne and Sons, of Deal, in St. Mark's Church, Bexhill, took place on the 14th ult., when Mr. H. C. Perrin, organist of Canterbury Cathedral, gave a recital, at which he played his own Festal March.

Other recitals have been given by the following organists:—

Mr. H. J. Taylor, Christ Church, Dover; Mr. W. Wolstenholme (who played his Sonata in D, in the style of Handel), the Baptist Church, Blackburn; Mr. Herbert Gresham, Holy Innocents' Church, Hammersmith; Mr. Alfred H. Allen, St. Clement's Church, Ilford; Mr. R. E. Parker (who played Mr. A. H. Brewer's 'Melody in A'), Wilmslow Parish Church; Mr. R. de la Haye (organ and violin), Lauriston Road United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh; Mr. R. W. Strickland, College Street Chapel, Northampton; and Mr. W. Granger, Kendal Parish Church.

ORGANIST AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Richard W. Handley, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, Liverpool.

Mr. G. A. Boulter, St. Thomas's Church, Southborough.

Mr. Edward Watson, St. Nicholas' Church, Blundellsands, Liverpool.

Mr. A. J. Lancashire, St. Andrew's Church, Grimsby.

Mr. R. de la Haye, Lauriston Place United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh.

Mr. Richard A. Moss, St. Mary's Parish Church, Lower Ince, Wigan.

Mr. Frank S. Styler, St. Anne's Church, Clifton, near Manchester.

Mr. W. Smith Woods, Mossley Hill Parish Church, Liverpool.

Mr. Edgar Mann Dyson (alto), to the choir of St. Saviour's Collegiate Church, Southwark.

CHURCH MUSIC FOR MEN'S VOICES.

The Versicles and Responses, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral. By J. Stainer.

Final Amen. By Edwin H. Lemare.

Why art thou so heavy, O my soul? Anthem. By F. J. Read.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, in E flat. By Ernest Ford.

Te Deum Laudamus, in D,

Benedictus, in D. By J. Stainer.

(Novello's Services, Anthems, &c., for Men's Voices. Nos. 45 to 50.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This series of service music for men's voices is a most valuable adjunct to our church repertory. The arrangement by Sir John Stainer of the 'Versicles and Responses' with harmonized Confession is commendable, but since it is used at our Metropolitan Cathedral any further comment upon its excellences would be superfluous.

Mr. Edwin Lemare's 'Final Amen' is set in the unusual key of six flats; but probably in practice its pitch will depend upon the intonation of the officiating priest, who, however, should remember that if he pitches it lower than G flat he will probably cause the second bass, to whom the composer has given the dominant note of the key below the stave, to utter an inaudible growl. The music is written in five parts, for alto and first and second tenors and basses; it is flowing and impressive in style, and is conveniently printed on a card.

Dr. F. J. Read's anthem is designed for alto solo and chorus consisting of alto, tenor, and bass parts. A little more than half of the composition, which is short, is occupied by the solo. The chorus enters in imitative fashion, and at the close the tenors and basses are divided to make five-part harmony. The organ accompaniment possesses considerable independence, but the music is very easy both to sing and play.

Mr. Ernest Ford's music to the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis demands a well trained body of altos, basses, and first and second tenors. By such the work will be found interesting, and would be impressive. Good contrasts are obtained by the occasional cessation of the organ part, which is independent and often brilliant in character. The Nunc dimittis is begun by the basses in unison, the first and second tenors entering at the words 'For mine eyes' and the altos with the full choir at 'To be a light.' The Gloria of the Magnificat is repeated.

A specially notable number is Sir John Stainer's setting of the Te Deum. This is of some length, taking up fifteen pages; but from the opening phrase to the last the music bears the stamp of being conceived in the church and of having been carried out by a master craftsman. The phases of the hymn are followed with keen appreciation of their significance, and some of the harmonic changes are extremely happy, notably on page 9, where the chord of the 6th on C is changed into the dominant 7th at the words 'of death.' The verses beginning 'Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin,' are set for bass solo. The choir re-enters at 'O Lord, in Thee have I trusted,' and the conclusion is impressively worked up from this point.

Those who use this Te Deum should follow it by the same composer's setting of the Benedictus, which is written in similarly earnest style. Notwithstanding the absence of solo portions, contrast is obtained by certain verses being sung in unison by one section of the choir and answered by the other sections in harmony, and by the voices now and again singing unaccompanied strains—always an effective device.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

While the earth remaineth. Composed by Alfred R. Gaul.

The Parable of the Harvest. Composed by Frank J. Sawyer.

(Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 637 and 640.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The first of these anthems opens with a chorus which sings antiphonally with a select choir consisting of two soprano, alto, tenor, and bass parts. The former reiterate the words 'While the earth remaineth,' the 'verse' singers answering with the declaration of the invariability of the recurrence of the seasons, the effect being decidedly impressive. A melodious tenor solo follows, and a four-part chorus, Allegro con spirito, concludes the composition.

Dr. Sawyer's anthem consists of four sections, severally headed 'The Promise,' 'The Fulfilment,' 'The Lesson of the Harvest,' and 'Thanksgiving for the Harvest.' The promise is given out by a soprano soloist, whose words are repeated by the choir. The soprano also recites the fulfilment in a recitative, the chorus subsequently entering in unison with the words 'Let all the earth fear the Lord.' The third section is set for a soprano or baritone soloist, followed by the sopranos in unison. The concluding portion opens with a vigorous chorus which leads into the exposition and brief development of a fugue subject, rendered imposing by the inclusion of the melody of the 'Old Hundredth.' Both these anthems possess the merit of being easy to read.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Caprice. By Arthur Hervey.

Cervona. Spanish Dance. By J. Warwick Moore.

Under the Greenwood Tree. Gigue. By Michael Watson.

[Forsyth Brothers.]

Mr. Arthur Hervey's 'Caprice' is as capricious as a maid of fifteen, and withal as dainty and graceful as a dainty damsel of that age should be. The music is by no means difficult, the florid passages lying singularly well under the hand.

Mr. Moore's Spanish Dance has much of the fire and languishment commonly attributed to the people of this portion of the sunny South. Played with a firm touch and with spirit it will prove to be an effective little piece for the household instrument.

When music gets under the 'greenwood tree' it almost invariably becomes frolicsome, and Mr. Watson has been faithful to tradition. His piece is gay as gay can be; it hops and bustles along with unflagging vivacity, and the music seems to come to an end—or leaves off—quite unnecessarily.

The Queen of Sheba. An Oratorio. The words selected from the Holy Scriptures by the Rev. A. C. Manston, B.A. The music composed by Harvey Löhr.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon manifestly affords scope for musical treatment, and Mr. Harvey Löhr may be congratulated on the choice of his subject and still more on the judicious manner in which it has been treated by his librettist, Mr. Manston. The music is laid out for three soloists, the Queen of Sheba (soprano), a Narrator (tenor), and King Solomon (bass), four-part chorus, and orchestra, a pianoforte version of the last-named being arranged by the composer. The traditional form has been adopted. The work opens with an overture covering fourteen pages of the pianoforte score, and the subsequent series of choruses, songs, and recitatives are each complete numbers in themselves. The style is diatonic, direct in expression, and what may be termed square in contour. The songs will present no difficulties to ordinary vocalists, and the choruses are easy to read, the composer—even when indulging in fugal writing—having manifestly kept well in mind the capabilities of average choirs, and sought to gain impressiveness by simple means rather than by complexities.

SONGS.

Anna Marie. One Word is too often profaned. Composed by C. A. Macirone.

Abou Ben Adhem. Composed by E. H. Thorne.

[Joseph Williams.]

Miss Macirone always writes well and with keen appreciation of the advantages arising from using the simplest means possible to gain desired effects. This is shown in a marked manner in the four-part songs for mixed voices, 'Anna Marie' and 'One Word is too often profaned.' The text of the former is 'The Black Knight's song,' from Sir Walter Scott's 'Ivanhoe,' and that of the latter is by Shelley. The music to the song of the knight is vigorous and bright as befits the theme, and Shelley's lines are allied to strains appropriately graceful and expressive.

Mr. Thorne has taken Leigh Hunt's version of Abou Ben Adhem's significant vision, and has set it for alto, first and second tenor and bass, with a skill that accentuates the meaning of the lines, and this is tantamount to saying that the music is very good. It would form an attractive item at any concert.

PART-SONGS.

When hands meet. By Ciro Pinsuti.

Waiting for the swallows. What shall we sing to thee? Melodies by Ciro Pinsuti.

It was a lover and his lass. Composed by A. Herbert Brewer.

Come again, sweet days. By John Dowland.

What saith my dainty darling? By Thomas Morley.

The Tourney. By John E. West.

(Novello's Part-Song Book. Nos. 819-825)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The value of this series of part-songs is greatly increased by its inclusion of many of the finest examples of this branch of music, and of others which, by their melodiousness and charm, have secured widespread popularity. Amongst the latter assuredly may be placed 'When hands meet,' 'Waiting for the swallows,' 'What shall we sing to thee?' and 'It was a lover and his lass.' The first is a most attractive specimen of Pinsuti's style, and the second and third are effective arrangements of melodies by the same composer. Shakespeare's ever fresh lines are set in a manner that testifies to Mr. Herbert Brewer's sound musicianship and will interest a well-trained choir. The initiatory entrances require to be briskly taken up, and unflagging attention will be demanded to secure the precision imperatively necessary to do the music justice, but these exactions will be fully repaid by the bright and gay-spirited music furnished by the organist of Gloucester Cathedral.

'Come again, sweet days,' is one of the best of old John Dowland's madrigals and is a pleasing example of English art in the sixteenth century.

'What saith my dainty darling?' is another characteristic specimen of the English madrigal of the same century, which will certainly aid in keeping green the memory of the musical worthy, Thomas Morley. It should be added that 'What saith my dainty darling' is in five vocal parts, the soprano part being divided.

Mr. John E. West has set Tennyson's recital of how the fair Edith was won by sturdy Sir Ralph in a manner that admirably reflects the spirit of the lines. The remarks of the King which conclude each verse are most effectively treated, and now and again there is a glint of humour which considerably heightens the dramatic spirit of the music.

SHORT NOTICES.

Things seen: impressions of men, critics, and books. By G. W. Steevens.

[William Blackwood and Sons.]

This is the first volume of the works (memorial edition) of the brilliant young journalist who fell a victim to enteric fever during the siege of Ladysmith. It consists of reprints of essays contributed by Mr. Steevens to various magazines and to the Daily Mail on a variety of topics—all of them written by one who had the gift, and that largely developed, of a keen insight into men and things, and the facility of vividly giving expression in cold print to that which he so acutely observed. The strictly musical essays—treated entirely from a non-professional point of view—in this volume, are 'Words for music' and 'The Feast of St. Wagner' (three articles). The book is prefaced by a memoir contributed by Mr. W. E. Henley, and a fine portrait of the author furnishes an appropriate frontispiece to an entertaining book.

The Philosophy of Voice. By Charles Lunn. Ninth Edition. [Ballière, Tindall and Cox.] This is a revised edition, with the addition of much new matter, of Mr. Charles Lunn's well-known treatise on voice production wherein he sets forth 'the right and wrong action of voice in speech and song, with laws for self-culture.' Whatever may be thought of Mr. Lunn's method—and how strangely at variance with one another the whole race of these voice trainers seem to be—few will deny that he is on the right tack, especially if, as he says, the keynote of his system is to be found in the words of Pope:—

> First follow nature, and your judgment frame
> By her just standard, which is still the same;
> Life, force, and beauty must to all impart
> At once the source, and end, and test of art.

The book, of some 200 pages, is well illustrated with diagrams, &c., and it has an index.——How to tell the nationality of old violins. By Balfour and Co. [Balfour and Co.] If this little book contains nothing that is very new, it answers its purpose within the limitations of its space. Perhaps the best thing is to be found on the last of its twenty-eight pages—that is the advice given to amateurs who wish to purchase a fiddle: viz., consult an expert.——Arundel Hymns. Part III. Chosen and edited by Henry, Duke of Norfolk and Charles T. Gatty. [Boosey and Co.] This small collection of 'Catholic Hymns and Spiritual Praises' is an instalment of a contemplated hymnal. The music for the most part consists of old tunes selected from foreign sources, though that typical English Psalm-tune, St. Anne's, has found a place in the collection. The work of editing seems to have been done with a due regard to the requirements of congregations and the claims of musicianship.

Miss Hilda Foster has, we regret to learn—for the sake of the art, but not for her own—relinquished her professional career by reason of her recent marriage. But her equally gifted twin-sister, Miss Muriel Foster, will continue to give pleasure to the public by her beautiful voice and artistic singing. She is engaged for the approaching Hereford Festival and the entire season of St. James's Hall concerts.

THE ROYAL OPERA.

PUCCINI'S OPERA 'LA TOSCA.'

On Thursday, the 12th ult., Puccini's 'La Tosca'—the only operatic novelty of the season—was produced at Covent Garden with all the outward signs of a great success. It is pleasant to record that the management, which has been the object of so much severe criticism, did all that any management possibly could do to ensure a perfect performance. The mounting could not have been better at any of the theatres which make staging their special study, and there was ample evidence of careful rehearsal. The enthusiasm of the public was repeated on the occasion of the second performance, which took place on Monday, the 16th ult., when the composer was again present and was called before the curtain several times, just as though it had been an ordinary first night.

The opera is founded on Sardou's play, which we must assume to be so well known that a detailed narration of the story is superfluous. The librettists, Signor Illica and Signor Giacosa, have turned Sardou's five acts into three. They have written a consistent, powerful—perhaps, even too powerful—story, showing great knowledge of stage-craft, and the incidents they have added show keen insight into a composer's needs. The first act is practically the same as Sardou's. It shows the escape of Angelotti, his rescue by Cavaradossi, Cavaradossi's love for La Tosca, her jealousy, and Scarpia's suspicions and his passion for Tosca. At the end the librettists introduce an episode of their own. There is a great thanksgiving service in the church in honour of a supposed defeat of Napoleon, and while the people pray and the organ is played and the cannon booms, Scarpia, standing apart, soliloquises about his passion and his search for the escaped Angelotti. It is perhaps somewhat theatrical, but not without effectiveness. The third act, with the death of Cavaradossi and the suicide of Tosca, is the same as in the play, save that the librettists interpolate a soliloquy of regret and love for Cavaradossi. All the rest, the capture and death of Angelotti, the arrest and torture of Cavaradossi, while Tosca can hear his groans, Scarpia's advances to Tosca, his fraudulent promise of a mock execution and escape for Cavaradossi, his murder by Tosca and the cantata sung in the Queen's apartments, which we hear behind the scenes—all this is crowded into the second act of the opera, which consequently is one of almost unredeemed horror.

Signor Puccini's music is, of course, of the young Italian school. It shows the hand which wrote 'La Bohème'; but, at the same time, it is more closely akin to the work of Mascagni and Leoncavallo than the earlier and lighter opera. It has the same merits and the same defects. The chief merit is the sense of impulsive passionate life which it conveys; the chief defects are lack of strong, broad melody and of anything like development, and crudity in the obtaining of effects. The orchestration is clever, but thin in texture wherever it is not blaring and blatant. There is but little attempt at polyphony in the ordinary sense, though there are some big ensembles where several ideas are presented to us at once; but they go on independently rather than combine into a homogeneous whole. Such is the Finale of the first act already alluded to. Another weakness of Puccini's music is a certain lack of aptness in musical characterization, though the music accompanying the entrance of the old Sacristan is an exception proving the rule. But that accompanying Scarpia's death is an illustration. The Leitmotiven, which are employed freely, are not in any sense treated—they are simply repeated. But with all its faults there is much sincerity in the music, and such strength of utterance that it has the power of holding the hearer's attention and adds to the poignancy of the drama, though not much of it can honestly be said to be, in and by itself, capable of causing æsthetic pleasure.

A survey—necessarily incomplete and rapid—of the chief moments of the opera will be the best evidence in support of this criticism. In the first act there is a long and passionate love duet between Tosca and Cavaradossi, in which the note of passion is earnest but superficial. The transitions are too sudden, the contrasts too sharp for the highest art; for the total effect is heterogeneous. The finale is exciting, but Scarpia's soliloquy is so lost in the general din that its purport is obvious only to those who know the book. In the second act the music first of the Gavotte and then of the Cantata, which is heard through the open window of Scarpia's room in the Farnese Palace, is a grateful contrast to the storm and stress amid which it occurs. There is grim force in the motif which accompanies the torture of Cavaradossi, and the defiance he hurls at Scarpia has manly vigour. A solo of Tosca, in which she reflects on her past life, is perhaps the most melodious number in the whole; but it is not remarkable for originality. The strains accompanying Scarpia's death are scarcely appropriate—it is almost frivolous; but at the end of the act the music is adequately expressive. The introduction to the third act, with its descending fourths and fifths and variously tuned bells, is graceful and peaceful, but thin; then comes a solo—also of recollection for Cavaradossi—which is melodious and full of sentiment. The words show the hero in a poor light, but that is not the composer's fault. The following duet between Tosca and Cavaradossi—where she tells him of Scarpia's death and of his hopes of escape—is melodramatically attractive, but the unison passage with which it ends does not improve it. Lastly, the flippancy of the music during the execution of Cavaradossi is not easy to reconcile with any received canons, though it is obviously meant to reflect rather the cheerful nature of Tosca's anticipations than the grim tragedy which is really being enacted. But this raises a large æsthetic question which there is not space to discuss here.

The performance was excellent. Fräulein Ternina as La Tosca, in a character belonging to a school of music to which she is unused, and which might have been expected to impose severe limitations on her genius, showed herself to possess, in addition to all her other gifts, the rarest versatility. A better singer of Italian, a better actress of melodrama, the operatic stage can hardly boast. Signor De Lucia as Cavaradossi had a character exactly suited to him, and used his opportunities with great effect. Signor Scotti was condemned by librettist and composer alike to be an Adelphi villain all through, and bore himself with distinction. M. Gilibert, as the Sacristan, was quite delightful. Signor Mancinelli deserves the warmest praise for the verve and finesse with which the orchestra played throughout.

The second Nibelungen Cycle occupied the week beginning June 25, and was in many respects an improvement on the first. The staging, except in the 'Rheingold,' was much better; the finale of the 'Götterdämmerung' was managed without a black curtain, and the orchestra played with much more grip and vigour throughout. The most important change of cast was that Frau Gulbranson succeeded Fräulein Ternina as Brünnhilde. That this change was in all respects an improvement may be doubted, but it gave us an opportunity of seeing Fräulein Ternina as Sieglinde—an impersonation unequalled for beauty and pathos. Frau Gulbranson is a great artist whose reputation is well deserved. She is the best embodiment of the type of what may be called masculine Brünnhildes on the stage. But she has a dignity of style and gesture which remove her impersonation far above mere melodrama. She was best, perhaps, in 'The Walküre'; but her acting and singing in the finale of the 'Götterdämmerung' were marked by an amount of subtlety and restraint for which her earlier work had hardly prepared us. Herr van Rooy was again magnificent in the 'Walküre,' and Herr Bertram took his place in 'Siegfried.' Herr Slezak was splendidly youthful and in other ways adequate in the title-part of Siegfried, and Herr Kraus repeated his performance as Siegmund in 'Walküre' and Siegfried in the 'Götterdämmerung.' He improved as he went on in the matter of vocalisation not a little.

In the middle of this week came a performance of 'Lohengrin,' worth recording because of Fräulein Ternina's fine rendering of Ortrud, which was almost wholly free from melodramatic exaggeration and conventionality, a rare achievement, and Frau Gadski's beautiful performance as Elsa. She is almost, if not quite, the best Elsa we have now. Herr Dippel was excellent as Lohengrin.

On the 4th ult. M. Jean de Reszke re-appeared after his indisposition and sang Walther in 'Die Meistersinger' with all his wonted charm, and nearly all his wonted power and brilliancy. He appeared also on the following Saturday (7th ult.) in 'Lohengrin,' when he was quite his old self. The chief feature in the performance of 'Die Meistersinger' was the Hans Sachs of Herr van Rooy, which was new to England. It is a performance as artistically complete as everything Herr Van Rooy undertakes, and it is very German in its insistence on the bourgeois elements in the character. Indeed, the whole performance accentuated that aspect of the work—and not wrongly. Frau Gadski as Eva was most delightful, but she made no attempt to be a fine lady. Herr Klopfer as Pogner, and Herr Muhlmann as Kothner sang well, but the other Meistersingers were too Teutonic, and succeeded in making the ensemble at the end of the first act a triumph of cacophony. Herr Friedrichs as Beckmesser and Herr Brever as David were above all criticism as actors and below it as singers. (If only these admirable German operatic actors would learn to sing.) Herr Mottl conducted, and the whole went smoothly and with spirit. When 'Die Meistersinger' was repeated the part of Sachs was sung with fair success by Herr Bertram; but the most important change was the appearance, as conductor, of Herr Emil Paur, who has long had a great reputation in the United States. It is well merited, for he is a conductor with a marked personality, who has a great influence over the players under him. His chief characteristics are vigour and spirit, and a fondness for strongly marked rhythms and strongly marked orchestral colour. When he conducted 'Tannhäuser,' on the 9th ult., we heard, for the first time this year, the ensemble at the end of the first act taken at the proper pace which enables singers to phrase properly. Herr Paur conducted with unflagging energy throughout, and worked up all the climaxes with great spirit. M. Imbart de la Tour appeared as Tannhäuser with considerable success. He acts with temperament and sings with taste. It is true his production is rather French, but that is better than no production at all, which is the complaint of most German Tannhäusers. Frau Gadski was an admirable Elizabeth in all respects. She accentuates the womanly side of the character more than its saintly aspects. M. Plançon was once more perfection itself as the Landgrave and Herr Bertram a blameless Wolfram, except for his apparently ineradicable tendency to be pedagogic on every occasion.

On the 11th ult. Madame Melba appeared in 'Lucia di Lammermoor' and sang magnificently. In the Mad Scene she was, as she always is, unapproachable in perfection of vocal technique, and almost made one forget and forgive the futility of the music. M. Saleza as Edgardo was astonishingly good. No artist has made greater strides than he has since he first came to us. He began by being remarkable chiefly for volcanic and unrestrained —almost misdirected—energy, in consideration of which many faults were forgiven. But now he can act with distinction and repose, and even suggests elegance of bearing.

On Monday, 23rd ult., the last week of the season began with a brilliantly spirited performance of 'Il Barbiere.' Signor Baldelli, who had already won success here in private concerts, had come over specially to play Don Bartolo, and gave a very humorous and finished—perhaps, even over-elaborate—picture of senile decay and fatuity. He slightly overdid his parlando effects, but when he sang he sang extremely well. The rest of the cast was familiar. M. Edouard de Reszke's inimitably unctuous fooling as Don Basilio is obviously as great a pleasure to him as to his audience, and his singing of 'La Calonnia' is a wonderful piece of art. Madame Melba also revels in the hoydenish pranks of Rosina, and sings the florid music to perfection. In the Lesson Scene she sang the Mad Scene from 'Lucia,' which is, after all, not such a terrible anachronism, for Donizetti's opera is only nineteen years later in date than Rossini's. But what can one say of Tosti's 'Mattinata,' which was sung as an encore? Madame Melba sang both things superbly. M. Bensaude was an alert and airy Figaro—somewhat too well pleased with himself, perhaps, and too fond of smiling, but otherwise excellent, and vocally very meritorious. Signor De Lucia, as the Count, was full of fervour and also not devoid of humour; his singing of florid music was not above reproach. Signor Mancinelli conducted, and the whole performance went with infectious spirit.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

M. Paderewski was the hero of the hour at the last concert of the season, held at Queen's Hall on Coronation Day. The great pianist played the solo part of Mr. F. H. Cowen's 'Concertstück' with dazzling brilliancy and all possible effect. This was the first performance of a work which, unlike the composer's previous artistic productions, is of the rhapsodical genus. Whether that is Mr. Cowen's strong point is a matter on which there are different opinions, indeed, the question arises whether it is desirable in the true interests of art for composers to favour the rhapsodical cult to the neglect of pure, form-designed music. But there can be no question as to the craftsmanship of Mr. Cowen's new work, even though the mould in which his 'Concertstück' is cast is not that of the masterpieces of Mozart and Beethoven.

The remaining features of the concert need only to be recorded. They were Beethoven's 'Fidelio' Overture, Dvorák's 'Symphonic Variations' (for the first time at a Philharmonic concert), Schumann's beautiful D minor Symphony, and the National Anthem. Miss Amy Sherwin sang the difficult air 'Io t'amerò,' from Mozart's 'Il rè Pastore,' the violin obbligato of which was excellently played by Mr. Frye Parker, the leader of the orchestra.

In the retrospect of this—the eighty-eighth—season of the Society, there is nothing to call for anything of a diminuendo nature in the chorus of praise which has been meted out to Mr. Cowen for the skill he has shown in his conducting achievements. There have been indications of a certain stodginess on the part of some of the less alert members of the band, who have yet to become infected with their chief's enthusiasm; but Mr. Cowen has worked wonders, and any misgivings — should they ever have arisen—as to his qualifications for the post must have been dispelled at the first concert. He has continued to do well, and he is to be sincerely congratulated upon results that add to his credentials of a conductor of the first rank.

PURCELL'S 'FAIRY QUEEN.'

'Charming music, so fresh, so spontaneous, and full of melody.' Such were some of the comments which emanated from the lips of not a few competent judges who were assembled under the hospitable roof of Mrs. H. Mudie Cooke, in Stratford Place, on the 6th ult. The occasion was a performance, under the able direction of Mr. J. S. Shedlock, of Purcell's 'Fairy Queen' music—or, to be quite exact, a selection therefrom. This little known work of the great English master—the libretto of which is an anonymous adaptation of Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream'—was first performed at the Dorset Gardens Theatre in 1692, the year following the completion of 'King Arthur.' Concerning the production of the 'Fairy Queen,' Downes, in his Roscius Anglicanus, says:—

> 'This in ornaments was superior to the other two (King Arthur and Diocletian), especially in cloaths for all the singers and dancers; scenes, machines, and decorations, all most profusely set off, and excellently perform'd; chiefly the instrumental and vocal part compos'd by the said Mr. Purcell, and dances by Mr. Priest. The Court and Town were wonderfully satisfy'd with it, but the expences in setting it out being so great the company got little by it.'

'Some select songs' and a few other pieces from the opera were published; but the score, like other music of Purcell's, seems to have been lost, as the following advertisement, which appeared in the London Gazette of October, 13, 1700, contains the offer of a reward for its recovery:—

> 'The score of Musick for the Fairy Queen set by the late Mr. Henry Purcell, and belonging to the Patentees of the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden, London, being lost by his death, whoever brings the said score, or a copy thereof, to Mr. Zachary Baggs, Treasurer of the said Theatre, shall have 20 guineas reward.'

No one came to relieve the money bags of Mr. Zachary Baggs of those '20 guineas,' and thus the music of the Fairy Queen' has practically been lying silent for two hundred years. The task of gathering together its various fragments from the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace and other sources, with a view of preparing an edition of the work for the Purcell Society, has been undertaken by Mr. Shedlock, whose erudition eminently fits him for such a responsibility. This led Mr. Shedlock, in Mrs. Mudie Cooke's drawing-room, to give a taste of the music in a tasteful selection of some twenty excerpts, about half the entire work. Amongst the songs that particularly took one's fancy were 'Hark! hark! the echoing air' (a delightful soprano ditty); 'If love's a sweet passion' (tenor); 'Oh! let me weep' (contralto), an air with a beautiful violin obbligato; 'The songs of the four seasons'—a song cycle; and the coquettish duet,' Now the maids and the men,' capitally sung by Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan. The instrumental selections were equally captivating—in fact, the only fault that could be found with them was that they were too short. In addition to the two artists already named, the soloists were Madame Carlotta Elliot and Mr. Vivian Bennetts, while useful aid was rendered by the Misses Lawrence, Miss Peddle, and Mr. Putnam Griswold. The accompaniments were played by a quintet of strings —Mr. Sigmund Beel (first violin), Mr. W. H. Norris (second violin), Mr. J. Waud (viola), Mr. C. Corri (violoncello), and Mr. J. Haydn Waud (contra-basso)—while Mr. Shedlock presided at the harpsichord. The entire performance was excellent, and gave real enjoyment to those who were met together to listen to Purcell's tuneful strains. We understand that Mr. Shedlock proposes to issue a selection of six of the 'Fairy Queen' songs and that they will be published in due course by Messrs. Novello.

JOHANN KUBELIK.

The feature of an otherwise remarkably featureless season has been Johann Kubelik. The last number of The Musical Times contained the announcement of the great success he achieved when he first appeared with Dr. Richter's orchestra. The Concerto of Paganini which he played afforded critics no opportunity of judging his musicianship or artistic power, but sufficed to show that in respect of technique he has few if any living rivals. He plays the most superhumanly difficult passages without a trace of effort and with a completely unmoved face. He is almost always faultlessly in tune, and, what is even more remarkable perhaps, he never deviates into ugliness and harshness of tone. All this was evident from his first performance; and the six recitals he has given since then—a wonderful number, considering the circumstances—have not given one any cause to modify this opinion. It is not necessary to specify in detail the dates of his six recitals, or to go through the programmes, especially as he has repeated several of the pieces. He has played Bach's Chaconne, Mendelssohn's Concerto, Beethoven's Fifth Sonata, the 'Kreutzer' Sonata, and a movement from Max Bruch's G minor Concerto and Tartini's Trillo del Diavolo—enough to give one a good idea of his powers as an interpreter. It cannot honestly be said that, as yet, they are of a high order. But he has done nothing to give any cause for doubt that he is on the right road. The harshest thing that can fairly be said is that his readings are cold and uninteresting. But, on the other hand, they are refreshingly free from mannerism, affectation, or exaggeration. He plays the classics, indeed, rather as if he were afraid of them and of himself. He keeps himself too well in hand, for fear, seemingly, that he might be betrayed into excess by his temperament. That he does possess temperament is abundantly clear from his playing of things like Ernst's Fantasia on Hungarian Airs and Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen,' in which he obtained effects beyond the reach of mere technical perfection. But he seems afraid to introduce even great warmth of tone into Beethoven and other classical music—a mistake nearly as common as its direct opposite, which is sentimentalizing. This was very marked at his last recital, when he played the 'Zigeunerweisen' immediately after the 'Kreutzer' Sonata, which was perhaps, on the whole, his least satisfactory exploit. Of all the classical things he played he did best in Mendelssohn's Concerto. He tackled the opening movement in a manly, straightforward way, and his extraordinary skill in bowing enabled him to phrase the slow movement with unusual breadth. Indeed, there is no one—not even Ysaye—who can go on as long as he can without an apparent break in or between the phrases. In the Finale his self-restraint in not aiming at mere meretricious effect by means of exceptional speed—an effect well within his reach had he wished for it—was highly praiseworthy. Indeed, he played the Finale slower than most violinists. His remarkable exploits as a mere executant have already been mentioned. Such things as Paganini's Variations on 'God save the Queen,' his 'Hexentanz,' his Fantasia on airs from 'Moses' (he plays a great deal of Paganini) have not been more finely and faultlessly done for a long time; but perhaps the most remarkable piece of work he does is in Bazzini's 'Ronde des Lutins.' It is not in itself of insuperable difficulty, but he plays it at such a pace, with such unfaltering neatness and clearness, with such a full, round tone, and such a beautiful sense of rhythm that it is quite wonderful. Here, too, he shows qualities above those of the mere virtuoso, which gives one reason to hope that, ere long, Kubelik may be a great artist. At present that name cannot be given to him, though he must unhesitatingly be placed in the very first rank of players.

HERR ROSENTHAL'S RECITAL.

Herr Moritz Rosenthal gave only one recital in London this season, but chose for it an unfortunate day, in that the afternoon of June 28 had long previously been fixed on by Miss Lillian Blauvelt for her farewell concert, at which she had the assistance of M. Ysaye and Signor Busoni. Herr Rosenthal was in very fine form, and his performance of Mozart's Sonata in A was fully satisfactory to those who accept his canons of classical interpretation, though others would maintain that he gives too free a rein to his own individuality, whereby the personality of the composer is thrust into the background. The same may be said of his interpretation of Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques,' which, in his hands, are transformed into a series of tremendously vigorous and dazzlingly brilliant sketches, which appeal irresistibly to many; but, again, others will prefer a reading which gives more prominence to the strain of tenderness in the music, and makes one feel more fully the essential unity of the whole. But Herr Rosenthal's playing of Chopin leaves no room for adverse comment, and in pieces of pure brilliancy and display he is quite without an equal, and probably will long remain so. Of all Chopin's longer solos the Polonaise Fantaisie is perhaps the one which recital-givers least often include in their programmes, and for a good reason. It is, on the whole, the least interesting. If one did not know its authorship one would put it down as the work of a conscientious and not very imaginative imitator, rather than of Chopin himself. Herr Rosenthal extracted from it every tittle of charm and beauty that it possesses, and kept the hearers' interest alive better than probably any living pianist could. Of his playing of three of Chopin's Preludes, one of the Valses, and the Chant Polonais, it need only be said that he has seldom, if ever, played them with more commanding skill or individuality.

THE LONDON TRIO.

PROFESSOR STANFORD'S NEW TRIO.

The first performance of a new Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Dr. Villiers Stanford, imparted special interest to the concert given, on the 13th ult., by 'The London Trio' at the Royal Society of British Artists, in Suffolk Street. The work, in the key of G minor and with the opus number 75, is dedicated to 'The Berlin Trio,' which may be taken as significant of the progress English music is making in the Fatherland. That this Trio will excite esteem there, little doubt need arise, for it possesses those scholastic qualities which are always appreciated by German musicians. But it has more than these attributes by way of recommendation. The second movement, an Andante, has a beautiful singing melody, and it is treated in a manner that is full of dignity and meditative grace. To this succeeds a Presto, in which the nationality of the composer is suggested, and which dances on its way with delightful gaiety and joie de vivre. The opening and closing movements are not so remarkable, perhaps; but the first number is notable by the aptness of the development and for the admirable way in which the musical interest is shared by all the instruments. The Finale is preceded by a Larghetto, somewhat complaining in character. Its melancholy, however, is effectually dispersed by the Allegro con fuoco, which concludes the trio in vigorous fashion. We hope to hear the work in the Autumn, when it should be added to Mr. Arthur Chappell's repertory at the 'Pops.'

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

'The Royal Vagrants.'

The members of the opera class performed, in the theatre of the school, on the 6th ult., a two-act comic opera, entitled 'The Royal Vagrants,' composed by Mr. H. Waldo Warner, who has had a highly successful career as a student. The book, by Mr. Cyril Hurst, is of a semi-romantic order, the story springing from the masquerading, as a minstrel and a peasant respectively, of a prince and a countess who have determined to please themselves in the matter of marriage. With the sentimental interest is woven humorous passages, and in his treatment of these Mr. Warner displays considerable promise. The concerted music is for the most part bright, ingenious, and free from effort, whilst throughout there is evidence of the gift of melody. The most notable of the songs is that of a wily mendicant, for this number shows decided freshness and no small measure of quaint character. The ballet music for wood-nymphs, gathering round the heroine as she sleeps under a tree, is both fanciful and effective. The disguised couple were played by Mr. Richard Triggs and Miss Louisa Ratcliff, who sang tastefully, and there was a numerous band and chorus. The composer, who conducted, was cordially congratulated upon a score that, though unambitious, is marked by neat workmanship.

BRASS BANDS AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The brass band contest at the Crystal Palace, on the 21st ult., brought together many of the best known bands from the Midlands and the North, as well as from the Home counties. The entries numbered forty-eight, which represented about twelve hundred instrumentalists. In several instances the competition was keen, and the general efficiency of the performers testified to the benefits derived from the formation of brass band associations in certain populous districts in which the opportunities of hearing vocal and instrumental music are limited. The first prize of £75 and the right to hold for a year the National Challenge Trophy, presented by the directors of the Crystal Palace, and valued at a thousand guineas, was awarded to the Denton Original (Manchester), conductor, Mr. A. Owen. The second prize (£30) was gained by the Black Dike (Bradford), conductor, Mr. John Gladney; the third (£20), by the Wingates Temperance (Westhoughton, Lancashire), conductor, Mr. W. Rimmer; the fourth (£12), by the Lee Mount (Halifax), conductor, Mr. W. Swingler; and the fifth (£8), by the Arael Griffin Temperance (Abertillery), conductor, Mr. H. Bentley. All these were in the first of the three sections into which the competitors were divided. In the second section Kettering Town Band won the first prize, £20, and in the third section Hucknall-Haithwaite received the chief prize, £12. There were also special prizes for conductors and soloists. The judges were Dr. C. W. Pearce, Messrs. Joseph Shepperd, Carl Kiefert, J. W. Bestwick, T. Valentine, and E. B. Nash. A regrettable incident of the afternoon was the action of some of the non-recipients of first prizes, who showed their disappointment by leaving the Palace, and not taking part in the evening concert. Such conduct is un-English to a degree. After the contest the combined bands assembled on the Handel orchestra for a concert, conducted by Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. August Manns. The 'Cornelius' March and the 'Tannhäuser' March were admirably played.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

MR. FARJEON'S COMIC OPERA.

The first production, on June 29, at St. George's Hall, of a new comic opera in one act entitled 'The Registry Office,' by Eleanor and Harry Farjeon, possessed more than ordinary interest, owing to the exceptional talent previously shown by these young people. Expectation was pleasantly realised. The libretto, built upon the exaggeration of the demands of very much up-to-date domestics, is not only funny, but is put together with manifest dramatic perception, and contains many neatly turned lines. The music accomplishes much, but contains the promise of much more. There is a perception of humour, a facility of expression, and a manifest capacity for contrapuntal writing that indicate exceptional natural ability. This is, perhaps, most marked in the quintet, 'It is written in pages of domesticated sages,' which is remarkable for its spontaneity and deft employment of appropriate means. The greatest capability amongst the exponents was shown by Jeannie Bateman as Lady Bird, and Ernest Torrence as Sir Julius, but the other members of the cast, Lillian Ginnett, Hilda Raab, Rose E. Wheeler, and Edward F. Barrow, showed intelligence and commendable desire to do their best for their fellow-student. 'The Registry Office' was preceded by Walter Monck's clever and amusing sketch, 'The Angel Boy,' which was admirably acted by Edith A. Hall, Cordelia Coe, Dorothea Corder, Philip Suckling, Cecil Rose, and the author. It should be added that the former work was produced under the direction of Mr. G. H. Betjemann, who conducted, and that the latter afforded proof of the good training by Mr. William Farren.

CHAMBER CONCERT.

Interest at the Students' concert, on the 24th ult., at St. James's Hall, was chiefly centred in the compositions by pupils. The first brought forward were three pianoforte pieces by Paul W. Corder. These comprise a bright and genial 'Scherzo,' which possesses some character; a poetically conceived 'Schlummerlied,' and piquant 'Humoreske,' all these pieces showing lively imagination and considerable knowledge of effect. They were excellently rendered by Cuthbert Whitemore, and the young composer was much applauded on his appearance on the platform. Three movements, severally an Andante non troppo, Intermezzo, and Finale from a String Quartet in F, by William H. Reed, proved well written, melodious, and pleasing music, as played by the composer (who led), Stephen Champ, Lionel Tertis, and R. V. Tabb. The third novelty was a Fantasia in B flat minor for pianoforte, by Felix Swinstead, which testified to the composer's appreciation of the capabilities of his instrument and his command of the keyboard. Other performances worthy of note were Jessie Smither's neat playing of Vieuxtemps's 'Air Varié' (Op. 22, No. 2) for violin, Henry Rojas's vigorous rendering of an air by Handel, and Ada L. Forrest's sympathetic interpretation of Spohr's 'Rose softly blooming.'

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES BY SIR HENRY IRVING.

The annual distribution of prizes took place on the 25th ult., at Queen's Hall, and acquired peculiar interest from the fact that the prizes were distributed by Sir Henry Irving. The proceedings were opened by the Ensemble Class, which, under the conductorship of M. Emile Sauret, played with remarkable precision and verve a 'Reverie' (Op. 22), by Vieuxtemps, and an effective 'Farfalla' (Op. 40), by M. Sauret. The Select Choir followed with excellent renderings of 'Orpheus with his lute,' by Edward German; 'Song of the Graces' from 'Faust,' by Carl Reinecke; and 'The Fairy Dance' from Mr. Frederick Corder's cantata 'The Bridal of Triermain.' Sir Alexander Mackenzie's speech to the Committee and the pupils must have been a grateful task, for he had only pleasant things to say and he said them with his usual felicity. In the regrettable absence of Mr. Thomas Threlfall, the chairman of the Committee of Management, the words of thanks to Sir Henry Irving were spoken by Sir Benjamin Baker, who claimed the eminent actor as an old schoolfellow.

Sir Henry, in reply, said that it had been a great delight to him to listen to such sweet music so beautifully discoursed. He felt his position on this occasion to be purely ornamental, for he could not claim to have a tittle of musical knowledge. He had, however, his private opinion that Sir Alexander had an object in withdrawing him from the tyranny of the drama to a place where music ruled supreme. The drama owed much to music, and many plays at the Lyceum were specially indebted to the art. He testified how highly he thought of its assistance by specially engaging several eminent composers, amongst whom he had had the good fortune to secure the help of his friend, Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

PRIZES AND AWARDS.

The competition for the Joseph Maas Memorial Prize took place on June 25, when the prize was awarded to Henry F. Plevy (a native of Hereford). The following awards have also been made: the Robert Newman Prize (for organ playing) to Ernest Read (a native of Shere, Surrey); the Walter Macfarren Medals to Mabel Colyer and R. Neville Flux; the Charlotte Walters Prizes to Gertrude L. Harvey and Walter N. B. Monck; the Frederick Westlake Memorial Prize to Marguerite Elzy (of Malvern); the Julia Leney Prize (for harp playing) to Gwendoline A. Mason (a native of Bryngwynt, Bangor, North Wales); and the Parepa-Rosa Prize to Ethel Wood (a native of Holmfirth, Yorkshire.)

LONDON AND SUBURBAN CONCERTS.

Mr. Jan Mulder presented an attractive programme for his annual concert, which took place on June 28, at the Salle Erard; but he was mistaken in claiming 'first performance' for Herr Richard Strauss's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 13), for this was played at a Chamber concert given by Madame Elsa Mathis, at the Queen's (Small) Hall, on February 13, 1897. However, it is as commendable to play little known and neglected music as to produce new. This Quartet is not entirely satisfactory, from a critical point of view. In the first movement the development is deficient in coherence. The Scherzo seems to be compounded of 'quips and cranks,' but possesses character. The Andante is the most satisfying of the four movements, being based on a broad melody of impassioned kind. In the Finale there is 'something attempted,' but little done. Mr. Mulder subsequently brought forward a real novelty of his own composition, in the shape of a well written Sonata in D minor (Op. 60) for pianoforte and violin, which was effectively interpreted by Messrs. Rudolf Zwintscher and Philip Cathie. The work possesses considerable musical interest, and we hope to hear it again. The programme was concluded with the first performance in England of two movements, an Adagio and Minuetto, from a Trio in B flat for two violins and violoncello. These were composed in 1776, and bear the Köchel number 266. They are thoroughly characteristic of Mozart's style, and it is satisfactory to know that they have been published by Messrs Breitkopf and Härtel. An excellent selection of unhackneyed songs was sung by Mdlle. Otta Brony and Mr. Henry Piercy.

Mr. Charles E. Baughan has on several occasions shown skill and grace as a composer, and his concert on June 26, at St. James's Hall, therefore distinctly merits record in these columns. The most important feature of the programme was a song cycle derived from Mr. Baughan's Greek opera 'The Maid of Artemis.' Several of these songs possess a freshness and unconventionality which should secure for them the attention of cultured vocalists. 'The year is young' is full of youthful exuberance; 'Pyrrha' is most graceful, and 'Satyr nimble' has so much originality and charm that it has frequently been heard in our concert-rooms. The above were all most effectively sung by Miss Esther Palliser. The contralto songs, the best of which is 'Endymion,' were beautifully rendered by Miss Ada Crossley, who also assisted in the vivacious duet 'Set us free.' It should be added that the 'Choric Prelude' and concluding 'Choric Ode' to the cycle were brightly interpreted by the London Kymric Ladies' Choir, conducted by Miss Frances Rees; and that Mr. Joseph O'Mara, Mr. Arthur Walenn, and Herr Georg Liebling also rendered assistance in the first part of the programme.

The Tonic Sol-fa Association held its annual festival at the Crystal Palace on the 14th ult., with specially commendable results, considering that the new policy of the railway companies prevented about 500 provincial singers taking part in the adult concert. As regards readiness of attack, accuracy of intonation, and observance of details of expression the performances spoke volumes in favour of the method of teaching that has done so much to popularise music among the young during the past half-century. At the juvenile concert 5 000 certificated singe s rendered Mendelssohn's 'Thee we hail,' Stanford's 'The old grey Fox,' and other pieces with excellent effect under the baton of Mr. T. R. Rayment, Mr. C. Hugh Rowcliffe being at the organ. Leading features of the adult concert were a well executed selection from Mr. F. H. Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden,' some pieces from Sir A. Sullivan's 'On Shore and Sea," and Mr. Hamilton Clarke's part-song "When the world." Mr. Leonard C. Venables skilfully conducted, and Mr. Henry W. Weston played Handel's Organ Concerto in D minor in good style.

Mr. John Thomas, assisted by a band of twenty-four lady harpists, gave his annual concert on the 7th ult., at St. James's Hall. Features of the afternoon were the solos interpreted by the concert-giver, with his usual brilliancy and facility, and his duets with Mdlles. Marianne and Clara Eissler, the former playing the violin and the latter a second harp. The performance by the band of harps was remarkable for precision and unanimity of expression, and reflected great credit on the teaching of Mr. John Thomas, who conducted. Enjoyable variety was afforded by the singing of Signorine Sofia and Giulia Ravogli, and other vocalists whose merits were fully appreciated were Mrs. Mary Davies, Miss Clara Williams, Miss Kate Williams, Miss Rosina Beynon, Mr. Dyfed Jones, and Mr. Emlyn Davies.

The Nonconformist Choir Union Festival, hitherto one of the largest of the annual musical gatherings at the Crystal Palace, suffered on June 30 in consequence of a difficulty with the railway companies; but, though greatly reduced in numbers, the singers made a good impression. Among the anthems were Darnton's 'In the beginning was the Word,' Mansfield's 'We declare unto you,' and Josiah Booth's 'Arm, soldiers of the Lord,' the last-named being rendered with genuine spirit. Mr. E. Minshall carefully conducted the choral pieces. Mr. Fountain Meen was at the organ, and Mr. T. R. Croger skilfully presided over some orchestral performances, including Gounod's 'Marche Solennelle.' The customary competition of choirs was abandoned.

The London Sunday School Choir held its twenty-eighth annual festival at the Crystal Palace on June 27, when, as usual, two concerts were given on the Handel orchestra. The most noteworthy was of course that of adults, totalling 4,000, under the conductorship of Mr. William Whiteman, who sang with firmness and spirit 'Thanks be to God' ('Elijah'), 'Unfold, ye portals' ('Redemption'), and 'The night is calm' (Sullivan's 'Golden Legend'). Earlier in the day Mr. J. Rowley conducted the juvenile choir of 5,000 voices through several simple pieces, in the rendering of which regard for light and shade was a commendable feature.

The London School Board annual vocal display at Queen's Hall, on the 4th ult., took the form of an oratorio performance instead of a competition as heretofore, when the children were supported by adults for the tenor and bass parts of the choruses in 'Judas Maccabæus.' Considering that, according to Lord Reay's announcement, the juveniles had had but a few weeks' practice, they sang with intelligence and quite as much effect as could be expected under the circumstances. The orchestra which played the accompaniments was by no means an assistance to the choristers. Messrs. W. L. Cockburn and G. Burdge were among the soloists. Mr. A. L. Cowley conducted and Mr. F. E. Lyne was at the organ.

An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was given at the Alexandra Palace, on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill. The principal vocalists were Madame Medora Henson, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The choruses were effectively rendered by the Alexandra Palace Choral Society, which with the orchestra numbered over 600. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha' were announced for performance here on the 26th ult. (too late for notice in our present issue), under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill. Miss Ethel Drinkwater, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Arthur Barlow were engaged as soloists.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC AND THE ASSOCIATED BOARD.

The annual meeting of the Royal College of Music was held at Marlborough House, on the 10th ult., his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, President, in the chair. The report of the Council stated that the number of pupils at the College was 407. The building of the new concert hall had made good progress and it was hoped that the room might be ready for use at the end of the year. The Prince of Wales, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, paid a warm tribute to the services of the late Sir George Grove in the cause of the College. He then presented the Challen gold medal for pianoforte playing, awarded in March, 1900, to Florence Smith (scholar), and the gold medal, presented by Rajah Sir Surendro Mohun Tagore, of Calcutta, in commemoration of the marriage of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York, for the most generally deserving female pupil of the year, to Agnes H. Nicholls (ex-scholar).

The Prince of Wales, President of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music, subsequently took the chair at the eleventh annual general meeting of the Board and of the honorary local representatives, which was also held at Marlborough House. The report of the year stated that 2,888 candidates entered for the local examinations, as against 2,895 in the preceding year. The audited accounts showed that, after providing for all contingencies, including £652 1s. for exhibitions given by the Board, there remained £1,200 to be divided between the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music.

Under the presidency of Lord Alverstone the members of the Associated Board dined together in the evening in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hôtel Métropole. Among the company were Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Hubert Parry, Sir W. Richmond, Mr. F. H. Cowen, Sir J. Crichton-Browne, Mr. Oscar Browning, Mr. A. Manns, and Mr. James Muir (secretary of the Associated Board).

Lord Alverstone—who is better known as Sir Richard Webster—in proposing the toast of the evening, eulogised the joint labours of the Royal Academy of Music and its sister Institution at Kensington in furthering the cause of musical education. Carrying his mind back to the early "fifties," when he was at school, the Master of the Rolls expressed the conviction that, had an attempt been made in those days to examine students of music in the manner now done throughout the country, there would have been scarcely any candidates at all.

INCORPORATED STAFF-SIGHT-SINGING COLLEGE.

The annual general meeting of the Incorporated Staff-Sight-Singing College was held, on the 21st ult., at the Guildhall School of Music, the president (Dr. W. H. Cummings) in the chair.

Dr. Hamilton Robinson, the hon. secretary, read a highly interesting annual report, in which it was stated that the past year had been one of continued satisfactory progress and prosperity. Attention was also directed to the very successful Conference with principals of secondary schools which had been held last December, at the Guildhall School of Music, one of the many good results being that several of the heads of high schools and colleges, who had attended that Conference, had adopted the method of teaching advocated by the College in Institutions under their charge, where it was now in regular use exclusively. A full report of this Conference has been printed and can be obtained from the hon. secretary.

Several examinations had been held at various centres (new and old), and eight diplomas and 194 certificates had been awarded. More than one educational institution—notably the London School Board—had welcomed the diplomas and certificates of the Incorporated Staff-Sight-Singing College as exemptions from certain of their own examination requirements.

The report contained an expression of the great satisfaction felt in the fact that Sir John Stainer and Sir Frederick Bridge had shown their interest in the movement by consenting to become patrons of the College. Hearty acknowledgment was made of the earnest services of Dr. Warwick Jordan, the hon. treasurer, and Dr. Hamilton Robinson, the hon. secretary.

MUSIC AT THE LADIES' COLLEGE, CHELTENHAM.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

A concert was given by the pianoforte pupils of Mr. Domenico Barnett at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham, on the 13th ult. To play the pianoforte well three things are greatly to be desired: musical taste, patience, and last, though not least, a good teacher. Of the young ladies who took part in the concert there were one or two who did not seem to have much soul for music, though all of them were evidently possessed of a good stock of patience. Then, again, the satisfactory production of tone, the neat technique, and the intelligent rendering of various pieces of the classical and romantic schools testified to the excellence of the instruction. Mr. Barnett, if we may judge from the performances at this concert, does not force his own interpretations on his pupils, but leaves free play to their individuality. The difficult Scherzo from Scharwenka's first Concerto, dedicated to Liszt, was played with great precision and dash by Miss Alice Hare, and Miss Grace Salsbury interpreted the solo part of the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto in G with excellent taste and feeling. Miss L. Haigh, who played the remainder of that work, also deserves much commendation. The accompaniments to the concertos were played by a small orchestra of strings, of which lady pupils composed one-half, under the careful conductorship of Mr. C. J. Phillips. In how many London non-professional colleges for ladies, we wonder, would such a satisfactory substitute for a full orchestra be found! If all the music teachers of the great College over which Miss Beale so ably presides are as painstaking as Mr. Barnett, then, indeed, musical seed is being sown at Cheltenham which ought to yield abundant fruit. The College hall in which the concert was given is a spacious one, and with its two elegant balconies seats about 1,500. It is provided with a stage, but as much of the sound of music if performed on it would ascend to the flies, a small platform had been erected in front of it, and on this was placed the pianoforte. The fair pupils at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham, are to be congratulated upon their musical opportunities. May they make the most of them.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At the annual degree-day of the Victoria University many eminent scientists were presented to the Chancellor—Earl Spencer, K.G.—for honorary degrees, in addition to the very large number of students who had won distinction in the legitimate manner, by hard work, pursued in the three colleges of the University. Among the doctors, Walter Carroll—previously a Bachelor of Music of Victoria and Durham—was presented by Dr. Henry Hiles, under whose guidance he had obtained his qualifications. Dr. Carroll is the first who, in the great Northern University, has attained full graduation, although the minor degree in music has been reached by many young musicians of both sexes.

At our Royal College of Music the fortnightly rehearsals of the students have continued to attract crowded audiences of friends and of those who watch with great interest the progress made in the Institution so ably presided over by Mr. Brodsky. The annual examinations have terminated very satisfactorily, and there cannot be a doubt of the great future awaiting the College, from which a most powerful impetus is being given to music in the North of England.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Baden (near Vienna).—A monument was unveiled on the 1st ult., in the beautiful Helenen Thal and in the vicinity of the 'Beethoven Stone,' where the composer of the Ninth Symphony was wont to repose and commune with his genius during his summer residence at Baden. The tasteful monument is the work of the Viennese sculptor, Herr Josef Cassin.

Berlin.—In anticipation of the hundred and fiftieth anniversary (on July 28) of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach, commemorative performances were given, on the 12th and 19th ult., at the Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church, when several of the master's cantatas were performed, together with a number of his most important organ compositions, Professor Reimann being the organist.

Cassel.—During a recent excellent performance of the 'Nibelungen' cycle at the Court Theatre, under Dr. Beier's direction, Fräulein Marie Joachim, who admirably sustained the part of Brünnhilde, took leave of the public amidst numerous demonstrations of regret. Fräulein Joachim, who is a daughter of the great violinist, has been a member of the Court Theatre for upwards of three years.

Christiania.—A long-cherished desire of Norwegian music-lovers has at length been realised by the establishment, in this capital, of a National Opera Company, the personnel of which is constituted entirely of native artists. The conductor and artistic director is Herr Schorcht, a resident German musician, to whose unremitting zeal the realisation of the project is in a large measure due. The performances, which for the present are taking place in the large Tivoli Theatre, were opened on the 5th ult. with a capital performance of 'Der Freischütz.'

Cologne.—At one of the highly commendable People's concerts, last month, the performances included, for the first time, a symphony by Dittersdorf, entitled 'Perseus und Andromeda'—one of the twelve characteristic early specimens of 'programme' music in which the genial composer of 'Doctor und Apotheker' sought to illustrate certain episodes in Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.' The effect produced, both on the popular audience and the musicians present, was so great that the performance of some of the other pieces of the series is likewise in contemplation by the directors of the Institution.

Dresden.—A movement is on foot in the Saxon capital for the formation of a great choir of mixed voices amongst members of the working classes and with a view to the performance exclusively of high class music. The interesting scheme is finding numerous adherents and the performance during the coming winter of several works in the classical repertory is already under consideration.——At the instance of some Hamburg admirers of the late Hans von Bülow, a commemorative tablet has been placed on the house, in the Körner Strasse, where the great pianist-conductor was born.

Florence.—Signor Puccini, it is stated in well informed quarters, has abandoned, for the present, his projected opera on the subject of 'Marie Antoinette,' and has taken in hand, instead, a comic opera, for which MM. Giacosa and Illica have furnished the libretto. It will be entitled 'Tartarin' and is founded upon Alphonse Daudet's delightful satire, 'Tartarin sur les Alpes.'

Frankfort-on-Main.—The Baron Carl von Rothschild Public Library has been enriched by the valuable collection of books and manuscripts relating to the history and theory of music amongst the ancients, formerly in the possession of the late distinguished musical savant, Carl von Jan, of Strassburg.

Lausanne.—An excellent and most impressive performance of Hegar's oratorio 'Manasse' took place recently, at the Cathedral, under the direction of M. Charles Troyon. There was a choir of 350 voices, while Madame Troyon and Herren Kaufmann and Sistermans were the interpreters of the solo parts.

Leipzig.—A very efficient first performance was given, on June 27, at the Stadt-Theater, of 'The Fall of Troy,' the first part of Berlioz's 'The Trojans.'

Mayence.—The musical functions in connection with the celebration of the five-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Gutenberg, were of a very interesting character. One of the principal features was a magnificent performance, on June 23, of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' (Chrysander's version) by the combined Liedertafel and Damen Gesangverein, and with leading Handel interpreters (including Frau Herzog and M. Messchaert) in the solo parts. The performances on the following day included the festival cantata written for the occasion by Professor Volbach—a highly effective work for soli, eight-part chorus, with a cantus firmus for boys' voices, and two orchestras, which was received with the utmost enthusiasm. An interesting feature also was the performance, at the Gutenberg Monument, of the Te Deum written by Neukomm on the occasion of the unveiling of the latter in 1837, and in which some 1,200 mixed voices (men's and boys') took part.

Milan.—It is now definitely stated that, yielding to the earnest entreaties of the Duke de Visconti Modrone, Arrigo Boito, the composer of 'Mefistofele,' has at length authorised the production of his long-talked of opera 'Nerone,' and that the first performance is to take place at the Teatro della Scala during the coming season. The libretto, likewise from the pen of Signor Boito—who, indeed, since the time of the furore created by his 'Mefistofele,' nearly a quarter of a century ago, has been known chiefly as the librettist of Verdi's latest operas—is to be published in the course of this month.

Nuremberg.—Notwithstanding the annually increasing number of musical festivals in Germany, the first Bavarian festival, held in this quaint old city in June last, was a complete success; not, as is sometimes the case, from an artistic point of view only, but also in its financial results. Instead of the more or less appreciable deficit for which the guarantors had been fully prepared, the accounts exhibited the likewise scarcely appreciable, but none the less encouraging, net surplus of about nineteen shillings! The committee forthwith decided that the festival should be held every two years.

Paris.—A highly interesting collection of musical autographs was opened in the gallery of the Museum of the Opéra, on the 15th ult., in connection with the meeting of the Congress of Musical History, and will remain on view until the closing of the Universal Exhibition. It consists, for the greater part, of the very valuable collection in the possession of M. Charles Malherbe, the distinguished librarian of the Opéra, and includes a number of unpublished compositions by great composers, amongst them a fantasia for wind instruments, by C. M. von Weber, not mentioned in Jahns's catalogue, a minuet by Beethoven, and several pieces from the opera 'Mithridate,' by Mozart. ——The Academy of Fine Arts has awarded the Bordin prize of 3,000 francs to M. Constant Pierre for his 'Histoire des concerts publics à Paris,' and the Kastner-Boursault prize of 2,000 francs to M. Albert Soubies for his 'Histoire de la Musique.'

Pesaro.—Mascagni, whose new opera 'Maschere' has not yet been produced, has already completed another operatic score, this time on a classical subject, drawn from the Annals of Tacitus. The work is entitled 'Vestilia,' and is divided into four acts, with a prologue.

Pyrmont.—An interesting and in every way successful festival in honour of Lortzing was held on June 30 and the 1st ult., under the musical direction of Capellmeister Meister and Herren Sonnemann and Kruse, the latter being the well-known biographer of Lortzing. The performances consisted almost entirely of unpublished or only recently discovered works of the popular composer, including an early opera, 'Ali Pacha von Janina,' as well as his last operatic work, 'Die Opernprobe'; a festival overture, and a number of choruses for male voices. Much interest also attached to the first performance of an oratorio, 'The Ascension,' wherein the versatile composer shows himself a not unworthy interpreter of sacred subjects. Lortzing's artistic association with Pyrmont extended from 1826 to 1835, and traditions of his vivacious and amiable personality still linger in the town.

Rome.—Don Lorenzo Perosi, having recently completed his oratorio, 'The Massacre of the Innocents'—the eighth of the series illustrative of the life of the Saviour—is now engaged upon a sacred drama, consisting of a prologue and three acts, and entitled 'Moses.' MM. Agostino Cameroni and Pietro Croci are the authors of the book, which closely follows the Biblical story. The indefatigable young Maestro hopes to complete the musical setting during the present summer.

Vienna.—A series of very interesting historical concerts was inaugurated last month by the pupils of the Conservatorium, under the direction of Herr Mandyczewski, professor of musical history at that famous institution. Amongst the pieces produced were Bach's triple concerto for pianoforte, flute, and violin, Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater,' and an air from Handel's 'L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso,' the performance throughout reflecting great credit upon all concerned.—— Professor Leschetizky, the distinguished pianoforte teacher, entered upon his seventy-first year on June 22. In order to mark the occasion, a subscription has been raised amongst his former pupils—one of the most successful of whom is M. Paderewski—for the purpose of founding a Leschetizky Scholarship for talented young pianists.

OBITUARY.

Marie Krebs, the once highly popular pianist, died at Dresden on June 26, at the age of forty-nine. The daughter of C. A. Krebs, Court-capellmeister at Dresden, she came to London in 1864, aged twelve, as a youthful prodigy, when she made her first appearance at Alfred Mellon's Promenade Concerts and played also at the Crystal Palace. She afterwards appeared with great success during several seasons at the Monday Popular Concerts. Since her marriage, some eighteen years ago, with Herr Breuning, she has resided in Dresden.

We regret to record the sudden death of Mr. Richard Stokoe, which occurred on the 12th ult. Mr. Stokoe was for twenty-eight years organist and choirmaster of Christ Church, Down Street, Piccadilly, and was held in high esteem by the congregation there, both for his great musical talents and his genial presence.

Bartholf Senff, the Leipzig music publisher and editor of the well-known musical journal, Signale, recently died at Badenweiler, at the advanced age of eighty-five.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Robert Newman announces that his sixth season of Promenade Concerts will commence on Saturday, the 25th inst., under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Wood.

A Bill for the Registration of Teachers of Music, introduced by Mr. J. W. Sidebotham, was read for the first time in the House of Commons on the 20th ult.

Mr. E. R. Conder, who for over two years has acted in the capacity of honorary organist and choirmaster at Emmanuel Church, South Croydon, having recently resigned his position, has been the recipient of a most gratifying testimonial from the vicar and congregation of that church. The present has taken the form of a very handsome hall clock with the Westminster chimes and bearing the following inscription:—'Presented to E. Reynolds Conder, Esq., by the Congregation of Emmanuel Church, Croydon, June 28, 1900.'

Errata in our last number:—

P. 462, col. 1, twenty-one lines from the bottom. By a slip of the pen, 'Gird on thy sword' was written instead of 'wields his righteous sword' (see the first chorus of 'Judas Maccabæus,' where these words occur).

P. 456, col. 1, line 11, for 'Mr. Thomas Evans,' read 'Mr. Frederick Evans.'

CORRESPONDENCE.

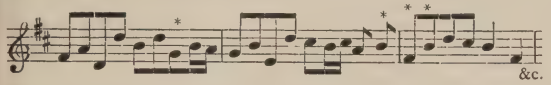
DR. S. S. WESLEY AND HIS HOLSWORTHY TUNE, No. 2.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I have read with much interest the admirable article on Wesley, which appears in this month's MUSICAL TIMES. As I write, there comes floating down into my study from the church tower the Holsworthy melody, No. 2, which you have printed, but which deserves to be more widely known than it at present is.

I notice, however, in the tune, as played by the Carillon, two variations from the tune as supplied by Dr. T. Linnington Ash, J.P., to whom undoubtedly Holsworthy (and, indeed, the musical world) owes the famous No. 1 melody, and which Dr. Wesley turned into what has become a favourite organ piece.

The variations in the No. 2 tune to which I wish to call your attention occur in the fifth, sixth, and seventh (complete) bars, at the notes marked *.



With reference to these variations, the first may simply be a misprint, and the second an emendation made by someone when the barrel was being pricked.

In conclusion, allow me to say that the Carillon was restored a few years ago at a cost of £350, of which £75 has yet to be raised. I shall be extremely grateful if any admirers of Wesley will show their appreciation of the great master by sending me a donation towards the deficit.

T. S. KENDALL,
Rector of Holsworthy.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

BATH.—At Downside (Benedictine) College, on the 21st ult., a concert was given of unfamiliar, or seldom performed, works of Handel. Solos and choruses were sung from 'Alcina,' 'Orlando,' 'Alexander's Feast,' 'L'Allegro,' 'Hercules,' 'Semele,' and 'Susanna.' The Passacaglia for two violins and violoncello was also performed, as well as a portion of the Violin Sonata (No. 2), while the orchestra, consisting of strings, oboes, and bassoons, played the Overtures to "Giulio Cesare' and 'Belshazzar,' the Minuet from 'St. Cecilia's Day,' and the Sinfonia from Act II. of 'Hercules.' Mr. R. R. Terry conducted.

BRISBANE.—With a view to retaining the Exhibition organ permanently here, the City Council some time since voted the sum of £2,000, conditional on the balance (£1,000) of the purchase money being raised by the citizens. Various methods have been adopted to raise the sum, but at the end of last year only £400 had been obtained. At the request of the Ex-Mayor, Mr. George Sampson undertook to give a series of recitals on the organ, which is of exceptionally fine tone and quality. Fourteen recitals have been given by this excellent organist, with the result that a further sum of £175 has been added to the Fund, and it is now hoped that an official city organist may be appointed.

CAPE TOWN.—Mr. James Hyde gave a Symphony concert in the Good Hope Hall, on June 12, under the direction of Messrs. Darter and Sons. The conductor (who was formerly connected with the Carl Rosa Opera Company) had under his baton a complete and very efficient orchestra, and full justice was rendered to an interesting programme, which included Beethoven's Symphony (No. 5), Haydn's 'Surprise' Symphony, the Overture to 'Nozze di Figaro,' and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, the solo part excellently played by Miss Louie Heath. The vocalists were Madame Hyde-Leipold and Miss Margarite Foote.

CHELTENHAM.—The first performance of a new Church cantata by Mr. E. A. Dicks, entitled 'The Promise of the Father,' was given at St. Luke's Church on June 27. The words have been selected and arranged by the Rev. W. Smith, and the cantata is in three sections, each complete in itself and suitable respectively for Ascensiontide, Whitsuntide, and Trinity Sunday. The choral writing is said to be 'characterised by impressive contrapuntal and fugal effects,' and the choruses were excellently sung by the choir of the church, augmented to eighty voices from other local churches. The solos are very melodious, and were sung with devotional expression by Miss Blanche Cooper, Miss Spackman, Mr. Eynon Morgan, and the Rev. Dr. Stuart Macgowan—the tenor part being the most exacting. Mr. F. W. Lesterleigh presided at the organ, which was supplemented by two cornets, and the composer conducted an excellent performance.

CHESTER.—A complimentary dinner was given, on the 2nd ult., to Mr. Edward Cuzner, by his colleagues, to commemorate his jubilee as a lay clerk in Chester Cathedral. On this occasion Mr. Cuzner was presented with a framed photograph of himself and fellow lay clerks, and he was also the recipient of an ebony gold-mounted baton from six of the old cathedral choristers.

COVENTRY.—A series of Festival Services have been held during June at the Parish Church, Leamington; Parish Church, Rugby; Holy Trinity Church, Coventry; and, concluding on the 5th ult., at the Parish Church, Nuneaton, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Bellamy, musical director to the Archdeaconry of Coventry Choral Association. On these occasions the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to the setting by Prendergast in C, and the anthems were 'Praise His awful Name' (Spohr) and 'How lovely are the messengers,' from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The surplus of the offertories was devoted to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The improvement in the singing of the various choirs was marked, and the services are said to have been the best ever given in the locality.

DUNEDIN (N.Z.)—A series of Chamber concerts has been given during the season at the Choral Hall, by Mrs. Blandford, Herr Zimmermann, and Mr. A. F. Robertshaw. The programme of the first concert, on May 11, included Rubinstein's Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 13) and the first movement of Fesca's Third Trio (Op 21). Mrs. Blandford played Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, and Herr Zimmermann gave Mendelssohn's familiar Violin Concerto and a Concert Ländler by himself. Miss Amy Murphy and Mr. Maitland Gardner were the vocalists. The programme presented on May 23 included Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata and the Scherzo from Beethoven's Fifth Sonata, played by Mrs. Blandford and Herr Zimmermann, who were joined by Mr. Robertshaw in Haydn's Trio (No. 1). Mrs. Blandford played as her solo Sterndale Bennett's 'Rondo piacevole,' and Herr Zimmermann gave the 'Fantasie caprice' by Vieuxtemps. The vocalists were Miss Blaney and Mr. Jago. Mrs. Murphy accompanied at each concert.

HOLYHEAD.—Mr. Charles H. Moody, of Holy Trinity Church, Coventry, gave an organ recital on the 3rd ult., at St. Cybi's Collegiate Church. The Parish Church English Choir, augmented by a chorus of sixty voices, was under the conductorship of Miss Walter Thomas, organist and choir director of St. Cybi's. Mr. Moody's programme included Dr. Vincent's 'Sunset,' a Fantasia by Dubois (most skilfully played), Salomé's Offertoire in D flat, and Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C. The choir sang Handel's "Lift up your heads" with much spirit.

NOTTINGHAM.—The programme of music performed on Speech Day (June 28), at Trent College, included the following part-songs by the choir: 'Glorious Apollo' (Webbe), 'Sweet Flora' (Barnby), 'Hail to the Chief' (Bishop), 'Sing we and chaunt it' (Pearsall), and the 'Deserted Moon' (Abt). Among the dramatic selections was a scene from 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,' during which some Turkish music has to be performed; this was specially composed for voices, strings, and tympani, by Mr. E. L. Price, organist of the College.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Preludium.—(1) With the exception of the Gavotte Moderne and the Andantino, Mr. E. H. Lemare's organ compositions are not arranged for the pianoforte. (2) Try Bach's three-part Inventions and his Suites. You would find much valuable material in Mr. Franklin Taylor's specially selected Pianoforte Studies, published by Messrs. Novello.

H. M. G. T.—'The Storm,' an organ piece by the Rev. E. Husband, is not published, and, moreover, we believe that the composer has no intention of printing it.

W. C.—To give an opinion 'as to the best six church choirs in London, in the order of merit,' is too great an undertaking during the present tropical state of the weather. To do this would probably be the means of placing us in a still warmer corner.

S. E. C.—A prospectus of the Internationalen Musikgesellschaft can be obtained from Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, 54, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

A. J. L.—It is rather difficult to give a list of the titles which have been appropriated by 'any Glee party.' As you ask us to suggest 'a name,' why not adopt that of Horsley—'The Horsley Glee Party'? From an appropriate point of view it would be hard to beat, as William Horsley was a typical British glee composer.

Max.—(1) The horizontal dash over a note is an indication that the said note is to be sustained its full length of time, and often with a certain amount of pressure. (2) Handel's 'Occasional Overture' may be played at Andante maestoso, crotchet = 63; Allegro, crotchet = 100; Adagio, crotchet = 66; and March, crotchet = 126.

J. H.—Representative madrigals by nearly all the composers you name are included in Messrs. Novello's catalogue.

M. E. G.—(1) The 'Judgment of Solomon'—his decision about the living child for whom the two mothers disputed—forms Part II. of Handel's oratorio of 'Solomon.' (2) The meaning of 'Temperament' as applied to singers is not easily definable. The use of the term in physiology is to designate certain physical and mental characteristics, and its two fundamental classifications are the sanguine and the melancholic. But the different temperaments frequently merge so gradually into one another that very often it would be extremely difficult to decide to which variety any special case belongs. So with singers. Would that they all had the artistic temperament.

Rev. J. McC.—In regard to your inquiry concerning the tunes Nos. 133 and 203 in the Irish 'Church Hymnal,' the only possible explanation of the discrepancies is that Sir Joseph Barnby must have revised them between their first appearance in his 'original tunes' and their re-appearance in the 'Hymnary'; and that the 'copy' for the 'Church Hymnal' was prepared from the 'original tunes' version.

Vera.—(1) Sterndale Bennett's Scherzo in E minor (Op. 27) is in Sonata form. The second subject, however, returns in the major key of the tonic. (2) Specimens of Professor Prout's 'amusing words' to Bach's '48 Preludes and Fugues' will be found in The Musical Times for April, 1899 (p. 230), in a biography of the inventor of those verbal comicalities.

Mytonian.—(1) Tschaïkowsky's suite de ballet 'La Belle au Bois Dormant' is arranged for pianoforte solo by Siloti and by Langer (an easy arrangement), and for pianoforte duet by Rachmaninoff. (2) The history of Haydn's trio 'Maiden fair, O deign to tell,' is a little obscure. In a very old German copy ('Liebes Mädchen, hör' mir zu'), published by Cranz, of Hamburg, the music is assigned to Mozart! Perhaps some of our readers can throw some light upon this favourite piece.

J. J.—(1) The 'Panis Angelicus' from César Franck's Mass in A is in the key of A—compass, G sharp to F sharp. There is also an edition in the key of B. (2) Cherubini's Ave Maria is in F—compass, E to A. Both may be obtained of Messrs. Novello.

One or two questions are held over.

RUTH

A HARVEST PASTORAL

SUITABLE FOR USE IN PLACES OF WORSHIP

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventual episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

FIVE-PART HARMONY

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

Mus. Doc., Cantab.

PREFACE.

This little book is intended for those who, having already gained a competent knowledge of four-part harmony, desire to write with confidence in five parts.

Five-part writing is compulsory for the degree of Bachelor of Music at the principal Universities; yet even the best text-books furnish candidates with little help in respect of five-part writing.

The plan of this work is arranged in such a manner that anyone who is already well instructed in harmony may advance without the aid of a teacher.

In each Chapter a problem is proposed, and its solution is given in the Appendix (p. 28 et seq.).

The conscientious student will first deal with the problem, shutting his eyes to the solution until he has worked the thing out for himself.

He will then find it profitable to compare his result with that of the author.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive, but it contains a more complete discussion of the subject than the author has met with elsewhere.

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

UNISON CHANTS

FOR THE PSALTER

A COLLECTION OF SINGLE CHANTS

EDITED BY

EDWIN GEORGE MONK

Mus. Doc., Oxon., Organist and Master of the Choir, York Minster, 1859-83.

The Voice Part—Price Eightpence. Organ Harmonies—Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Not only have small and moderately qualified Choirs been kept in view, but also particularly the Voice of the great Congregation. In order to secure this much to be desired end—Chanting of the Daily Psalms by Choir and Congregation combined—the following means are proposed:—

I. Singing in Unison (strictly speaking, Octave-singing).

II. Employment of Chants of Restricted Compass only; especially as to all Reciting-Notes.

No note lower than or higher than is employed for Recitations; these extremes being avoided as far as possible; the former occurring mostly when a subdued, the latter when a jubilant note is required. The Melodies never extend below or above such outside limits being very occasionally used, and then only for short Psalms, or portions of Psalms.

III. Provision for Change of Chant at every fresh Psalm; and also whenever, in the course of any of the longer Psalms, such change could be made to follow the significance of the Sacred Text, conduce to its clearer understanding, or enforce its teaching

IV. Suggestion for occasional Change of Instrumental Harmony as a further mode (often of much value and potency) of heightening the desired expression; or of calling attention to important divisions, and changes of subject or utterance, in cases when actual change of the voice-part seemed undesirable.

A COURSE OF HARMONY

BY

FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus.D., Oxon.

(Gresham Professor of Music)

AND

FRANK J. SAWYER, Mus.D., Oxon.

(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ

AND

JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of Daily Technical Practice. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A.	Ditto (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.
3A.	Ditto (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A.	Ditto
5A.	Ditto
6A.	Ditto

Books 1A, 2A, and 3A now ready.

1B.	STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2B.	Ditto (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ..	2s. 6d.
3B.	Ditto (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4B.	.. ..
5B.	.. ..
6B.	.. ..

Books 1B and 2B now ready. Book 3B (in the Press, to be published on August 15).

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

Just Published.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822. INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

PATRONS:

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES AND OTHER MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY.

President—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA, DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

Principal—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

	VIOLONCELLO.

The Local Centre Examinations are held Annually, in March and April. Full particulars will be found in Syllabus A, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

The School Examinations are held at three periods: (a) March—April, (b) June—July, (c) October—November. Candidates for these Examinations may be entered either by Heads of Schools or by individual Teachers. In the latter case, neither the Teacher nor the Candidate need necessarily be connected with a School. Full particulars of these Examinations, and also of the General School Examination and Class Singing Examination, will be found in Syllabus B, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

Entries for the Oct.—Nov. period will be received not later than Oct. 13.

The Board gives annually six Exhibitions tenable for two years. These Exhibitions are limited to candidates under 20 years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

The attention of Teachers and Candidates is specially drawn to the important new regulations contained in Syllabus A and B for 1901, which are now ready.

SOME OF THE GREATEST ENGLISH MUSICIANS HAVE TESTIFIED TO THE MERITS OF THE "CHALLEN" PIANOS

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN
(Conductor of the London Philharmonic Society) writes—

"I have inspected the Pianofortes of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have much pleasure in giving my unqualified approval of them. I consider that for purity of tone, touch, and good workmanship they will favourably compete with Pianos made by any other English firm, and superior to most of those of foreign manufacture.

(Signed) "FREDERIC H. COWEN."

ESTABLISHED IN THE REIGN OF GEORGE III.

THE GENUINE
SCHIEDMAYER PIANOS

(Trade Mark:—SCHIEDMAYER PIANOFORTE FABRIK.)
(Vormals:—J. and P. SCHIEDMAYER.)

Madame ALBANI writes:—
"They are altogether most beautiful instruments."
Miss CLARA BUTT writes:—
"The tone is magnificent; it is delightful to sing to. I recommend every singer to have a 'Schiedmayer,' it is such a help to the voice."

(BARITONE)

Of the Leeds, London, Sheffield, and Chester Musical Festivals, Queen's Hall Promenade and Symphony Concerts, Crystal Palace and Principal Provincial Concerts.

CHESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL, JULY 25, 26, 27, 1900.—"ZION" (Gade).—"The baritone solo was sung by Mr. Charles Knowles with much earnestness and effect."—Daily Telegraph, July 26, 1900.

"In which Mr. Charles Knowles sang the solo part very ably."—The Times, July 31, 1900.

"The solitary solo was powerfully sung by Mr. Charles Knowles."—Yorkshire Post, July 26, 1900.

"It is a somewhat trying solo, but in the hands of Mr. Charles Knowles, who made his first appearance at the Chester Festival, it received artistic treatment, and showed his fine voice off to advantage."—Chester Chronicle, July 28, 1900.

"FAUST" (Berlioz).—"With Mr. Charles Knowles, as an unusually powerful Brander."—The Times, July 31, 1900.

"Mr. Charles Knowles had in Brander a part peculiarly suited to his powers. In the closing cadence of the burlesque Amen Chorus his stentorian voice told against the whole body of men's voices with an effect quite unique."—Yorkshire Post, July 27, 1900.

"TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST" (Perosi).—"The soloists, Mr. Green and Mr. Charles Knowles (upon whom the bulk of the work fell), and Mr. Ditchburn, all did justice to their parts."—Manchester Guardian, July 28, 1900.

Now booking season 1900-1901. For terms and vacant dates, apply, 24, Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

MR. J. E. ROBERTS

(BASS-BARITONE)

RECITAL.—"Mr. Roberts possesses a sonorous baritone voice. He created a fine impression by his singing of 'And God said' and 'Now heaven in fullest glory' ('Creation'). He also gave a spirited and dramatic rendering of 'Lord God of Abraham' ('Elijah') and 'Consume them all' ('St. Paul'), and in response to an enthusiastic encore he sang with capital judgment and expression 'It is enough.'"—Leigh Chronicle, May 25.

Two extra Supplements are presented gratis with this number. A Portrait of Dr. William Croft, specially photographed from the oil painting by T. Murray in the Music School at the University of Oxford; and a Part-song, entitled 'The Laughing Waves,' by Reginald Somerville.

THE old tune 'St. Anne's' is well known wherever English hymns are sung. A few words concerning its reputed composer may, therefore, form an appropriate accompaniment to the special portrait of the old Psalmodist, Dr. William Croft, which forms one of our extra supplements.

The information concerning the parentage and birthplace of Dr. Croft is exceedingly scanty. But we are able to supply a slight amplification thereto, which is the result of personal investigation at a delightful spot in the Shakespeare country. Six miles south-east of Stratford-on-Avon are situated the undulating meadows and rural beauties of Ettington Park. Within this pleasant and peaceful domain there formerly stood the village of Nether (or Lower) Eatington.* About a hundred years ago the villagers betook themselves to Upper Eatington, some two miles away, where a new church—not altogether an edifice of ideal beauty—was erected for their use, and the land at Nether Eatington was enclosed by virtue of a special Act of Parliament passed in 1795.† All traces of the village of Nether Eatington have therefore disappeared. The old church is in ruins. The only portions that have been preserved are the tower and the south transept; the latter is used as the mortuary chapel of the Shirley family. A few yards from the picturesque remains of the old sanctuary stands the stately manor house, rebuilt during the present century, which has been the home of the Shirley family for a thousand years.

At one time the Shirleys leased their place at Nether Eatington. One of the said lessees, who 'held the lease of the manor house from Sir Robert Shirley before the year 1671,' was a certain William Croft. Either before or after he took up his abode at Eatington, Mr. Croft fell in love with the vicar's daughter, Jane Brent. He ultimately led her to the altar, as the following entry in the Ettington marriage registers testifies:—

1671. Oct. 17. Guilielmus Croft, generosus, uxorem duxit Janam filiam Johannis Brent Quondam vicaris hujus Eccl'æ.*

Five children (at least) were born to them at the old manor house, their names and the dates of their several baptisms being thus recorded in the Ettington registers:—

1672.	Oct. 29.	Edward.
1674.	Oct. 6.	Maria.
1676.	Nov. 2.	Margaret.
1678.	Dec. 30.	William.
1680-1.	March 6.	John.

MASTER WILLIAM CROFT.
FROM AN OIL PAINTING, BY AN UNKNOWN ARTIST, IN THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.
(Photographed by Messrs. Boutall and Cockerell.

The fourth child and second son of William and Jane Croft became the celebrated composer of English Church music whom we know as Dr. Croft. The entry of his baptism stands in the registers as follows:—

1678.
Decemb. 30. Guilielmus, filius Guilielmi Croft. Gen'. Bap.

* The original spelling was Ettington, but in the middle of the seventeenth century it became corrupted to Eatington. The place name has now very properly been restored to Ettington.

† The local histories and Kelly's current 'Directory of Warwickshire' wrongly give 1798 as the date of this Act.

* The bride's father, the Rev. John Brent, M.A., died two years before the marriage, in 1669, and is buried in Nether Eatington Church.

Thus there can be little doubt that Croft was born in 1678, and not in 1677 as is usually stated. Moreover, this fresh information shows that he came of a good family, and that he was not of lowly birth. The qualification 'Gentleman' in the registers means something more than it might in the present day. Moreover, the family bore arms, which may be found beneath the engraved portrait of our composer prefixed to his Musica Sacra, as shown in our fac-simile—

THE ARMS OF THE CROFT FAMILY.

In regard to the history of the Croft arms, Grazebrook, in his 'Heraldry of Worcestershire' (p. 148), furnishes the following information :—

Croft, of Blockley, Kyre, &c.—Quarterly per fesse, indented, azure and argent; in the first quarter a lion passant guardant, or.

This coat was formerly in Martley Church, set up probably for Sir Edward Croft, Knt., who was steward of the manor in 19 Henry VIII. It also occurs at Tenbury, impaled by Mr. William Acton, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Henry Croft, of Kyre. The family was of Croft Castle, Co. Hereford.

The reference to Tenbury is interesting. Was Ouseley aware of it? Burke says that the Croft arms were given by King Henry III. to Roger de Croft for aiding Prince Edward to escape from Hereford.

To return to Ettington. The church registers do not furnish any further information than that given above in reference to the Croft family, nor does there seem to be anything more known of them in the Shirley records. To the credit of the Shirley family it should be stated that, in 1835, a daughter of the house—now the dowager Lady Heathcote—executed a small marble monument to the memory of Dr. Croft. This memorial, with a suitable inscription, appropriately finds a sheltered place in the ruins of the church wherein William Croft was baptised, and where he in all probability first heard the service of the Church of England, which he was afterwards to enrich with the fruits of his genius. The boy became one of the Children of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, under the Mastership of Dr. John Blow, and a pupil of that distinguished composer. This is all that seems to be known of his earliest years.

All the biographers of William Croft—from Burney and Hawkins downwards—state that in the year 1700 he was appointed the first organist of St. Anne's Church, Westminster (Soho). But we venture to think that not one of these biographers—the majority of whom are mere copyists—has examined the Vestry records of that parish. Through the courtesy of the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, M.A., the present rector, we have had access to the St. Anne's Vestry Minutes of two hundred years ago. Unfortunately the first eighty-eight pages are missing, but the carefully-made index thereto is intact. From this we glean the following information :—

1699. Organ given by his Majesty to the parish to be viewed, &c. .. .. p. 78
Loft to be built for do., the expense of carpenters and joiners work therein not to exceed £50.. .. .. p. 79
Proposals and draught for placing the same to be delivered .. .. .. p. 80

As the church was consecrated on March 21, $168\frac{5}{6}$, the inference is that the sanctuary was without an organ for the first thirteen years of its existence.

But to return to the Index. Here we find :—

1700. Organist, Mr. Croft chosen .. .. .. p. 83
Blower, Mr. Brown chosen.. .. .. p. 85

The account books show that Mr. Crofts—the added sibilant, so common in the spelling of old-time names, need not trouble us—was paid a salary, or 'wages,' of £25 per annum.

Consequent upon some extensive repairs to the organ undertaken by 'Father' Smith, which necessitated the silencing of the instrument for a time, we find the following wage-stopping entry in the Vestry Minutes. (We give a fac-simile of this Minute on opposite page.

It was resolved that Mr. Crofts should be paid him half a years wages for playing upon the Organ in Mr. Hugh's time when Churchwarden; But during the time he did not play upon the Organ, which were a year and one quarter of a year (the Organ being in that time oute of order) it was resolved that no wages should be paid him for that time.

Whereupon the s^d^ Mr. Crofts answered; that it was to his great detrem^t^ and disadvantage, yet would play upon the Organ for one quarter of a year, in hopes that y^e^ Gentlemen of the Vestry would consider him for the loss of that time.

FAC-SIMILE (FULL SIZE) OF A VESTRY MINUTE OF ST. ANNE'S CHURCH, SOHO.
(By kind permission of the Rector, the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, M.A.)

Attention must be drawn to the fact that in this parsimonious Minute the christian name of Croft is given as Phillip, not William. 'A slip of the pen, of course,' the reader will naturally say. But stay, good critic, jump not so precipitously to any such conclusion. In the first place, these old records are very carefully written in regard to christian names and, in fact, with every attention to minuteness of detail. There is no suspicion of inebriety in the caligraphy. Moreover, the name Phillip Croft occurs eight years later in the following Minute, which we give in fac-simile in the adjoining column:—

January 22 1711 (that is the year 1712, according to the new style).

Ordered

That Mr. —— Isham be Organist of this parish Church of St. Ann Westm^{r}, Mr. Phillip Crofts the former Organist haveing freely and willingly resigned the s^{d} place.

(The blank space, left to this day, for Isham's christian name should be noted.)

The dates of the organ appointment and resignation thereof agree with those given by all the writers on Dr. William Croft.

The questions that await answers are these:—

(1) Are Phillip Croft and William Croft the same person?

(2) Is the name Phillip a slip of the pen in both these official entries, which are separated by an interval of eight years?

In support of a negative reply to No. 1, we may point to the fact that the Vestry of St. Anne's was a very autocratic and business-like body. Moreover, in the year 1718 they resolutely set their faces against pluralities in regard to their organist at that time, as the following Minute duly testifies:—

June 23, 1718.

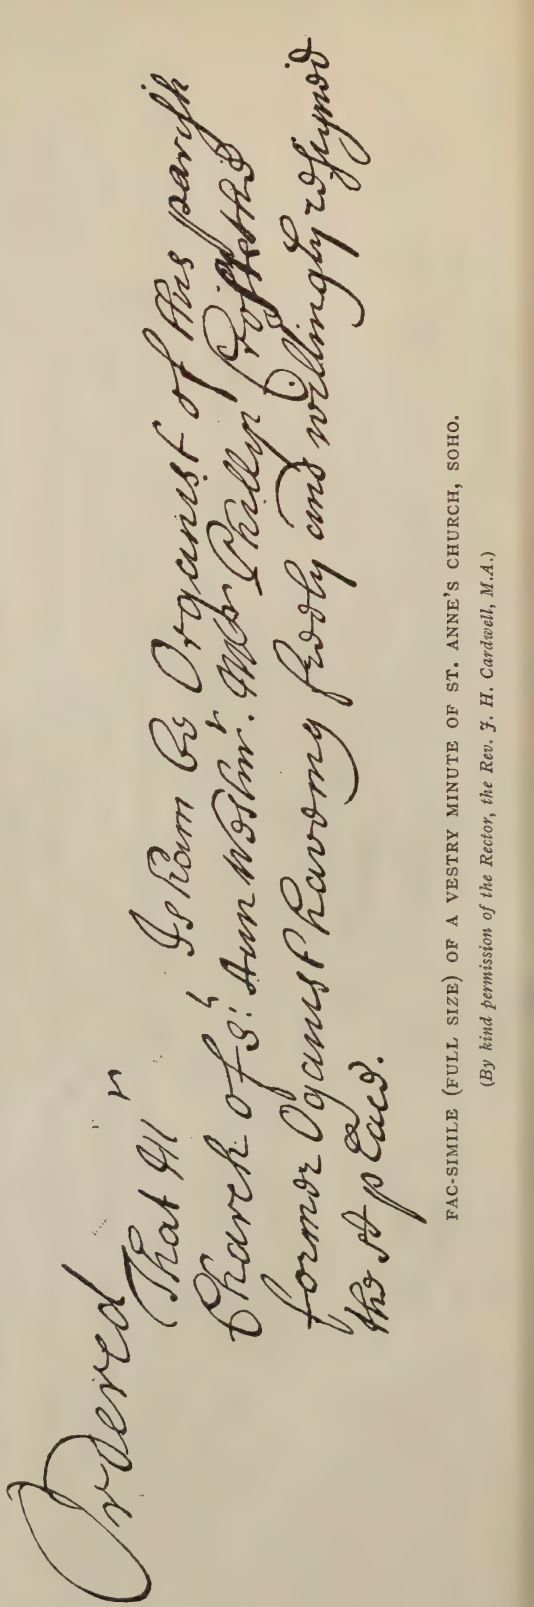
Mr. Isham, the organist have requested to this Board by Dr. Pelling [the Rector of St. Anne's] that he might hold the Organist place of this church in conjunction with the parish church of St. Andrew, Holbourn; whereupon the Vestry did not think fitt to comply with his request.

Did the Vestry likewise 'think fitt' during Croft's organistship?

In regard to Question No. 2, we have already pointed out the careful manner in which the Minutes were kept. But we must leave our readers to draw their own conclusions, while we rest content with having called attention to a matter which seems to have been overlooked by previous biographers of Dr. Croft.

Those who are under the impression that daily services in London Churches are of comparatively recent introduction may be interested in reading the following extract from Paterson's 'Pietas Londinensis, or the Present Ecclesiastical State of London' (1714). Referring to St. Anne's, Soho, Paterson says:—

Here are Prayers four Times in the Day; viz. at Six in the Summer, and Seven in the Winter, and Eleven; and at Four and Six in the Evening thro' the Year.



FAC-SIMILE (FULL SIZE) OF A VESTRY MINUTE OF ST. ANNE'S CHURCH, SOHO.

(By kind permission of the Rector, the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, M.A.)

Paterson also records, under the heading of St. Anne's, the preaching of the first Welsh sermon in London. He quaintly says:—

And on St. David's Day, or the first of March last at Twelve; a sermon was preach'd in the old British Language, before the Lord Bishop of Bangor, and a great Number of Welsh Men; by Mr. Moses Williams, Chaplain to the Countess of Denbigh; which had never been done before in London.

In the year of Mr. Croft's appointment to the organistship of St. Anne's a publication appeared bearing the following title:—

A choice collection of AYRES for the Harpsichord or Spinett, with very plain and easey directions for young beginners never before published, composed by these eminent masters, viz. Dr. JOHN BLOW, Master of the boys and organist of the Chappel-Royal and St. Peters Westminster, Mr. FRANCIS PIGGOT, also organist of the Kings Chappel and the Temple, Mr. JEREMIAH CLARKE, organist of St. Pauls Cathedral and composer of the musick used in the Theatre Royal, Mr. JOHN BARRETT, Musick Master and organist to Christ's Hospital and St. Mary-Hill Church, and Mr. WILLIAM CROFTS, carefully corrected by each Master. And fairly engraven on copper-plates.

London: Printed and Sold by John Young, Musicall Instrument Seller, att the Dolphin and Crowne att ye West End of St. Pauls Church Yard, 1700.

'The Publisher to the Reader' says, by way of preface to the book:—

And as it's [the harpsichord's] excellence has made this the favourite instrument of the best masters, so its neatness and easiness in playing on hath so particularly recommended it to the Fair Sex, that few Ladys of Quality omitt to Learn on it, And for their Sake it is that ye Masters from time to time communicate their Compositions; Whereof the present volume is a Collection which the Worthy Gentlemen mentioned in the Title have been Pleased to Favour me with & Permitt me to Publish. After naming ye men that Composed these Lessons 'twould be Presumption and Impertinence to Offer at a Character of 'em, and 'tis Sufficient to assure the Reader that they are Genuine.

In the 'very plain and easey directions for young beginners' mention is made of the 'Tenner Clift.' The following rules for key-board fingering show clearly enough that what we absurdly call 'foreign fingering'—that is, 1 to 5—was the system in vogue in England two hundred years ago. The curious left-hand fingering will not escape notice.

Observe in ye fingering of your right hand your thumb is the first, so on to ye 5th.

In ye fingering of your left hand your little finger is ye 1st, and so on to the 5th.

To return to matters more strictly biographical. Here follow some Croft entries in chronological order, extracted from The Old Cheque Book, or Book of Remembrance, of the Chapel Royal, St. James's. Certain eccentricities of spelling must not be laid to the charge of the present writer, nor of that convenient scape-goat, the proof reader!

THE HOUSE IN WHICH DR. CROFT WAS BORN.
THE OLD NETHER EATINGTON MANOR HOUSE.
(By permission of S. Evelyn Shirley, Esq., D.L., J.P.)

1700. July 7. By vertue of a warrant from the Right Reverend the Dean of the Chapell Royal Mr. Jeremiah Clerk and Mr. William Crofts were both sworn Gentlemen extraordinary of the King's Chapell (and to succeed as organists according to merit, when any such place shall fall voyd) by mee R^h^ Battell, S.D. Wittnes Edw. Braddock, Clerk of the Cheke.

1704. May 25th. By vertue of a warrant from the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London I have sworn and admitted Mr. Jeremiah Clark and Mr. William Crofts joyntly into an organist's place vacant by the death of Mr. Francis Pigott. R^h^ Battell, S.D., Witnes Edw. Braddock, Clerk of the Cheque.

On December 1, 1707—not in October or November as the subjoined entry in the Cheque Book would seem to imply*—Mr. 'Jerry' Clark shot himself at the Golden Cup in St.

* Mr. W. Barclay Squire was the first to discover this date discrepancy and also the gruesome particulars of the suicide of Jeremiah Clark. See the Athenæum of April 2, 1887, p. 457.

Paul's Churchyard, whereupon Croft succeeded to 'ful' post of organist of the Chapel Royal. Here is the official record:—

1707. November the 5th. By vertue of a warrant from the Lord Bishop of London, Dean of the Chapell, I have sworn and admitted Mr. William Croft into an organist's place now become ful by the death of Mr. Jeremiah Clerk. Rh Battel, S.D.

The Cheque Book entries relating to Croft may now be completed:—

1708. Dr. John Blow, Organist and Master of the Children of her Majesties Chapell Royall and Composer in ordinary to her Majesty, dyed the first of October 1708, and by vertue of a warrant from the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London, Dean of her Maj. Chappell Royall, I have sworne Mr. William Croft, Master of the Children and Composer; and likewise by vertue of a warrant bearing date the same day Mr. John Weldon was sworn Organist in the sayd Dr. Blow's place, by me Rh Battell, S.D., Wittness, Daniell Williams, Clerk of the Cheque.

1715. Aug. 8. There was likewise inserted in the aforesaid establishment* an allowance to Dr. William Croft (as Master of the Children) of eighty pounds per annum, for teaching the children to write and accompts, or for teaching them to play on [the organ], and to compose music. Dolben, Subdean.

Croft also held the sinecure post of lutenist, which brought in an additional £60 a year to his Chapel Royal emoluments. The Rev. Edgar Sheppard, Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal, in his interesting and exhaustive book, 'Memorials of St. James's Palace (Vol. II., p. 312, note), supplies the following financial information:—

'To Dr. Croft, for keeping, maintaining, and teaching 10 children of the Chapel at £24 per ann. each = £240.'

In succession to Dr. John Blow (who died October 1, 1708), Croft was appointed organist of Westminster Abbey, which post he held for the last nineteen years of his life.

Like other old-time church composers—Henry Purcell and Thomas Attwood to wit—Croft wrote for the theatre. The following overtures and act-tunes were composed by him for Drury Lane: 'Courtship à la mode,' July 9, 1700; 'The Funeral' (!), 1702; 'The Twin Rivals,' December 14, 1702; and 'The Lying Lover,' December 2, 1703. On July 9, 1713, he accumulated the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor in Music at the University of Oxford. His exercise was afterwards published, with two Odes in English and Latin written for the Peace of Utrecht, under the title of 'Musicus Apparatus Academicus.'

In 1724 Croft issued, by subscription, in two volumes, a collection of thirty anthems, entitled 'Musica Sacra.' This publication included the completion of the unfinished burial service by Henry Purcell. In an interesting preface Croft states that the work is 'the first Essay of publishing Church-Musick in England after this Manner of Printing'—i.e., in score, engraven and stamped on plates.

* That is, an addition to the old establishment of the Chapel—viz., four gentlemen, a second composer, a lutenist, and a violist.

As one of the great masters of English Church Music, Croft was a prolific composer of anthems. Some of these were written for State and other occasions, such as the Festivals of the Sons of the Clergy, and are scored for orchestra. 'Novello's Collection of Words of Anthems' (1898 edition) gives the titles of no less than forty-three anthems by him, and there are several others still in manuscript scattered here and there in various libraries. Amongst those unpublished is 'Praise God in His sanctuary,' 'Compos'd for and Perform'd at the opening of a new Organ at Finedon, in Northamptonshire, May 17, 1717,' when Croft presided at the instrument. The organist at Finedon was James Kent, then a youth of seventeen. To this day there is an organ stool in the church which has inscribed on it, 'J. K., 1717.' Croft's setting of 'God is gone up' was not published during his lifetime: it made its first appearance in print in Boyce's 'Collection' (Vol. II.), issued between 1760 and 1788.

Croft composed Morning Services in A and B minor, and a Morning and Evening (Cantate and Deus) Service in E flat. In the Jubilate of the E flat Service he did not set the words 'O go your way into His gates with thanksgiving'; a blank space is left in the manuscript which he never filled up. A 'Te Deum in D, for voices and instruments, in full score, and in the composer's autograph,' which is in the Library of the Royal College of Music, does not seem to have been published. Concerning Croft's Service in A, so eminent an authority as Sir John Stainer says:—

> One of the finest, if not the finest, setting of the Te Deum and Jubilate to which the English Church can point, is that by Croft, in A. It combines a suitable variety of sentiment with a dignified unity as a whole; and while in turn it is plaintive, penitential, or joyous, it bursts at the close of the Gloria to the Jubilate into a rich Fugato highly artistic and effective.—(Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, Vol. III., p. 474a.)

The noble Burial Service of Croft and Purcell, by reason of its sublime simplicity, is incomparable.

Croft also composed music for the harpsichord, the flute, and some songs. The Post Boy of September 30—October 3, 1699, announced the following publication:—

> Six Sonatas or Solos, three for a Violin, and three for the Flute, with a Thorough-bass for the Harpsichord Theorboe or Bass-viol. Composed by Mr. William Crofts and an Italian Mr. Printed for John Young, Musical Instrument-Seller, at the Dolphin and Crown at the West End of St. Paul's Churchyard and at most musick shops. Price 3s.

Who was the 'Italian Mr.'?

Another instrumental work has this curious title:—

> Six Sonatas of Two parts purposely made and contrived for Two Flutes, compos'd by Mr. William Croft. . . . London: J. Walsh, &c.

Dr. Croft died at Bath on August 14, 1727, aged fifty. His death is thus quaintly recorded as at 'the Bath' in the Daily Journal (London) of Friday, August 18, 1727:—

On Monday last died at the Bath, Dr. Crofts, he was Organist and Composer to his Majesty, Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, and Instrument Keeper and Organist of St. Peter's, Westminster [i.e., the Abbey].

The statement made by Hawkins and copied by others that Croft met his death through having caught cold at the Coronation of George II. (October 11, 1727) is, of course, absurdly inaccurate. It is, however, true that at the Coronation the remains of Croft were within the precincts of Westminster Abbey, as our composer had been 'cold within the tomb' for nearly two months when that regal function was solemnised. But in justice to recent biographers it must be recorded that Hawkins's mis-statement has found correctors, though one of them, in setting Hawkins in order, has given the wrong date of the Coronation! It seems as if Croft died almost 'in harness.' In the fine collection of musical manuscripts presented to the British Museum by Vincent Novello in 1849 there is the autograph score (Add. MSS. 17, 861) of Dr. Croft's anthem 'Give the King Thy judgments,' which is dated 'July 13, 1727,' a month before his death. Did he compose it for the Coronation ceremony which death prevented him from officiating at? A transcript of this anthem in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, has a pencilled endorsement, in an unknown hand, to the effect that it was composed when Croft was ill at Bath.

THE RUINS OF NETHER EATINGTON CHURCH.
(Specially photographed for THE MUSICAL TIMES.)

His remains were brought to London and interred, on August 23, 1727, in the musicians' aisle on the North side of the Choir, in Westminster Abbey. His monument bears the following laudatory inscription, translated from the Latin original:—

Near this place lies interred WILLIAM CROFT, Doctor in Music, organist of the Royal Chapel and this Collegiate Church. His harmony he happily derived from that excellent artist in modulation who lies on the other side of him.* In his celebrated works, which for the most part he consecrated to God, he made a diligent progress; nor was it by the solemnity of the numbers alone, but by the force of his ingenuity, and the sweetness of his manners, and even his countenance, that he excellently recommended them. Having resided among mortals for fifty years, behaving with the utmost candour (not more conspicuous for any other office of humanity than a friendship and love truly paternal towards all whom he had instructed), he departed to the heavenly choir on the fourteenth day of August, MDCCXXVII., that, being near, he might add to the concert of angels his own HALLELUJAH.

Awake up my glory, awake psaltery and harp, I myself will awake right early.

The only known record of Croft's marriage is that contained in an octavo volume of curious memoranda evidently made by a former official of the Chapel Royal.* This interesting book is now at Somerset House. By the kind permission of the authorities in the Registrar General's department we are enabled to give the following nuptial information concerning 'Mr. William Crofts':—

> Febry 7th, 170⅘. Mr. William Crofts, one of ye Organists of Her Majestyes Chappell Royall and Mistrs. Mary George were marryed in Her Majtys Chappell at St. James's by Dr. Battell, Sub-Dean.

His wife survived him. They do not seem to have had any children. Croft did not leave a will, and six years after his death his father-in-law (on July 28, 1733) administered to his estate, Mrs. Croft having in the meantime departed this life.

Burney ('History of Music,' Vol. III., p. 603) gives Dr. Croft 'a good character' in the following terms:—

> He seems to have gone through life in one even tenor of professional activity and propriety of conduct. We hear of no illiberal traits of envy, malevolence, or insolence. He neither headed nor abetted fiddling factions; but insensibly preserving the dignity of his station, without oppressing or mortifying his inferiors by reminding them of it, the universal respect he obtained from his talents and eminence in the profession seems to have been blended with personal affection.

'Fiddling factions' is presumably more in the nature of a Burneyism than a violin technicality.

Dr. Croft is the reputed editor of an important collection of Psalmody, though the authority for such editorship rests only on the sandy foundations of traditionalism. The title-page of the book, in spite of its length, may be quoted in full:—

> A Supplement to the New Version of Psalms by Dr. Brady and Mr. Tate; containing
> The Psalms in particular measures; the usual Hymns, Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, for the Holy Sacrament, &c., with Gloria Patri's, and Tunes (Treble and Bass), proper to each of them, and all the rest of the Psalms.
> The Sixth Edition, corrected; and much enlarged: With the addition of Plain Instructions for all those who are desirous to Learn or Improve themselves in Psalmody; near 30 new Tunes, composed by several of the Best Masters; and a Table of Psalms suited to the Feasts and Fasts of the Church, &c. With Tables of all the Psalms of the New, Old, and Dr. Patrick's Versions, directing what Tunes are fitted for each Psalm.

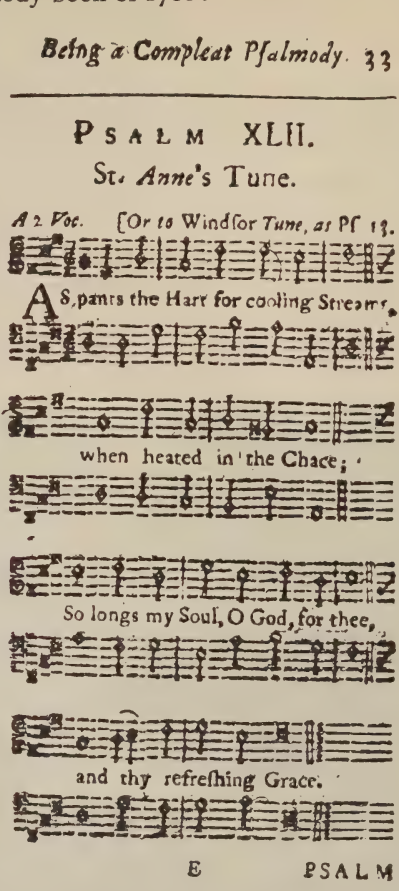
> In the Savoy: Printed by John Nutt; and Sold by James Holland, at the Bible and Ball, at the West-End of St. Paul's. 1708.

This book contains the first known appearances of the tunes St. Anne's—said to have been named after the Church of St. Anne's, Soho, of which he was, or was not the organist—and Hanover, both of which are always attributed to Dr. Croft. We give a fac-simile of the first-named tune from the venerable Psalmody book of 1708:—



Being a Compleat Psalmody. 33
Psalm XLII.
St. Anne's Tune.
A 2 Voc. [Or to Wind for Tune, as Pf 13.
As pants the Hart for cooling Streams,
when heated in the Chace;
So longs my Soul, O God, for thee,
and thy refreshing Grace.
E Psalm

FAC-SIMILE (FULL SIZE) OF THE TUNE 'ST. ANNE'S' AS IT FIRST APPEARED.

It will be observed that the crotchets in the fourth line of the tune as originally written have been eliminated by modern editors. Fifth-hunters may derive all the satisfaction they can find in the progression between the third and fourth lines of the tune. Some doubts have been raised as to whether Croft really did compose 'St. Anne's.' But it is assigned to him by two contemporary Psalmodists—Philip Hart, in his 'Melodies proper to be sung to any of ye Psalms of David' (circa 1720), and John Church (who was Master of the Choristers of Westminster Abbey during Croft's organistship), in his 'Introduction to Psalmody' issued in 1723. The tune is typically British, and, with 'Hanover,' will long continue to retain an honoured place in every hymnal and in the regard of congregations of all denominations.

The portrait of Dr. Croft, which forms one of our extra supplements, is from the oil painting by Thomas Murray (or Murrey) in the Music School, Oxford. Permission for its reproduction has been kindly granted by the University authorities through the friendly

* It is very probable that this volume is the one referred to by Rimbault in the Preface (p. xvii.) to his issue of 'The Old Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal' (Camden Society), as 'the Note-book of Marmaduke Alford, Serjeant of the Vestry,' which, adds Rimbault, 'in all probability no longer exists.' We are glad to learn that there is a prospect of these old Chapel Royal records being printed by the Harleian Society.

offices of Sir John Stainer, who has also rendered other valuable help in the preparation of this article. We have the authority of so experienced an expert as Mr. C. T. Johnson for the statement that this is the first time Croft's Oxford portrait has been photographed. The rare signature of the composer is from the autograph score of his Service in E flat now in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus, who has kindly allowed a fac-simile to be made. Acknowledgment must also be made of the kindness of S. Evelyn Shirley, Esq., D.L., J.P., of Ettington Park; the Rev. G. Hesketh Biggs, M.A., vicar of Ettington; and Mr. Richard Savage—who is a mine of information on matters genealogical—the courteous librarian and secretary of the Shakespeare Trust, Stratford-on-Avon.

VIOLIN PLAYING

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS BY ALFRED GIBSON.

In these days there is no lack of excellent instruction books for the violin, giving every grade of difficulty, from the beginning to the highest technical excellence. Music is cheap, especially the best. The indispensable Studies of Kreutzer, Fiorillo, and Rode may be bought for a shilling a volume; the Concertos of Viotti, Rode, Kreutzer, and Spohr for the same modest sum; and yet, in this year of grace, there is much poor violin playing, even in London, where it is possible to obtain excellent masters and to hear the finest players. The reason for this is not far to seek. The pupil hurries along without really surmounting and mastering difficulties. Scale work is shirked, and the all-important training of the bow is badly done. The student hurries forward to modern music, and with what result? Many poor performances of Mendelssohn, Max Bruch, and Saint-Saëns are heard now-a-days, telling only too plainly that the sonatas and concertos of the older masters, which are indispensable in the formation of style, have been neglected or carelessly studied.

Pupils should recognise the important fact that a good teacher is absolutely necessary, and that his precepts should be thoroughly mastered. Up to the grade of moderate difficulty it only needs a little common-sense to play the violin; but beyond that, into the advanced grade, care, skill, perseverance, and tireless industry are essential. It is at this stage that natural gift helps a student most. If the gift is there at all, it can be cultivated to almost any extent. Without natural gift the pupil never passes the imitative stage. To such a pupil how important it is to have a good master who is himself a fine player. The pupil should also hear the best players, and shape himself and his style on the most approved models. With this equipment, if he be earnest and true as a musician, he will do much. Often the gifted pupil is lazy or unteachable, not unfrequently both. Generally the gifted ones are 'kittle-cattle.' The exceptions to the rule are few, but these exceptions (if they have the physical strength) succeed in full.

Goethe said 'all art must be preceded by handicraft.' Let the young player take this maxim to heart and apply himself earnestly to his technical studies in the days of his youth while his fingers are supple and easily trained.

The excellent 'Violin School' of Ferdinand David makes an admirable beginning, all the difficulties of violin playing are therein set forth in the easiest and most understandable way. Other technical aids are:—

Schradieck's 'School of Violin Technique' and 'Studium der Accorde' for violin; 'Neue Tonleiterstudien,' by Carl Halir; 'L'Art du Travailler les Etudes de Kreutzer' by Massart, and Spohr's 'Violin School' should follow.

STUDIES by Kreutzer, Fiorillo, Rode (12), Rode (24), Rovelli, Gaviniés, Alard (24, in major and minor keys), Dancla (Op. 73), Schradieck (Studies), Wieniawski (Ecole Moderne, and 8 Etudes Caprices, Op. 18), Vieuxtemps (6 Concert Etuden), Campagnoli (7 Divertissements in the principal positions), and Paganini (24 Caprices).

SONATAS.

Corelli (Op. 5, all), Veracini, Nardini, Vitali (Chaconne), Tartini, and J. S. Bach (6 Solo Sonatas).

VIOLIN CONCERTOS.

Viotti. Nos. 23, 28, 29, 24, 22.
Rode. Nos. 6, 7, 8, 11.
Kreutzer. Nos. 13, 14, 18, 19.
Bach. In A minor and E major.
Mozart. In A major and E flat.
De Bériot. Nos. 2, 6, 7, 8, 9.
F. David. In E minor and D minor.
Spohr. Nos. 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11.
Gade.
Molique. In A minor.
Mendelssohn.
Max Bruch. Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 'Scotch' Fantasie.
Wieniawski. No. 2.
Vieuxtemps. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.
Bazzini. Allegro de Concert (Op. 15).
Dvorák.
Lalo. In F minor, and Suite Espagnole.
Joachim. In the Hungarian style, and In one movement.
Beethoven.
Bazzini. Militaire.
Brahms.
Ernst. F sharp minor.
Lipinski. Militaire.
Paganini. Nos. 1 and 2.
Saint-Saëns. In B minor, and in A major (Op. 20).

I strongly advise the young player to study carefully and obtain a complete mastery of the Concertos of Viotti, Rode, Kreutzer, and Spohr given in the above list; they are indispensable in forming a true style. Moreover, they are the milestones on the way in the development of the wonderful resources of the violin, and show the growth of the violin concerto.

That a student must begin his work early in life and be industrious, the above list of concertos will show. I have not included the lighter pieces of the répertoire, fearing to make this article too long.

An important branch of music for the violinist is string quartet playing. Here again one finds a great neglect of the earlier masters—the quartets of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven (Op. 18) are not thoroughly mastered. The eagerness to play modern works produces the same result as in solo playing. I have heard Joachim say, more than once, that the older he grows the more he loves Haydn.

Therefore begin by playing the quartets of Haydn and Mozart.

The scores of these old masters are so transparent that every detail must be exactly in its place. The most careful observance of all nuances and marks of expression will be necessary, with every possible variety and quality of tone. Play with a pure tone and a broad style.

To properly prepare for a quartet practice each player should thoroughly master his own part and know the score as well. Play no more than two quartets at each practice, and play no longer than two hours at a time. Get to know all the best of the Haydn quartets, the ten selected of Mozart, the whole of Beethoven's Op. 18; then those by Mendelssohn (all except that in F minor, which must wait for riper experience); Schubert in A minor and D minor, later on the G major; Beethoven, up to No. 11; the three by Schumann. When all the foregoing have been well studied, then attempt those by Brahms and Dvorák, as well as the posthumous works by Beethoven.

In practising, play always in tune, clearly and broadly; be careful to acquire the excellent habit of doing things easily. The pleasure of a listener is spoilt by seeing an artist wrestling with his instrument.

The proper age to begin learning the violin is at ten years. Ear training, the elements of music, and elementary pianoforte practice ought to precede it. Physical culture ought not to be neglected. All games except cricket and football may be indulged in. A man need not be a nincompoop because he plays the fiddle! Cricket is a dangerous game for a violinist to play — dangerous as regards his fingers. Football is altogether too violent a recreation for a violin student. He may box, and, better still, he may fence. I advise my lady pupils to fence: it develops the quality of determination. Cycling is distinctly good. Early to bed and up at seven o'clock at latest every morning; four hours' practice for the principal study and no more; two hours a day in the open air for recreation.

Royal College of Music.—At the conclusion of the Midsummer term the following awards were made by the Director and Board of Professors:—Council Exhibitions, Ethel C. White (pianoforte), £6; Harold Samuel (pianoforte), £9; Eva Hart (singing), £8; Herbert J. Hulcup (singing), £9; William H. Kerridge (organ), £6; Joseph Soar (organ), £9; Edward Mason (violoncello), £3. An Exhibition for the Junior Department of £15 was awarded to Olive Blume (pianoforte). The London Musical Society's prize (value £3 3s.) to Cicely Gleeson-White for singing.

THE WIVES OF SOME GREAT COMPOSERS.

Chronological order is at all times a convenient arrangement. In the present instance it has the additional advantage of showing that matrimony begins at home, as the first lady on our selected list of great composers' wives is an Englishwoman.

FRANCES PURCELL.

Henry Purcell was about twenty-three years of age when he took unto himself a wife. Not only are the date and place of his marriage unascertainable, but the maiden name of his dearly beloved is unknown. There are not many side-lights on the domestic features of their married life. Six children were born to them, and Frances survived her husband eleven years. It has been stated that Purcell contracted the disorder of which he died (at the age of thirty-seven) through his wife's having purposely caused him to be kept waiting outside his own door because he did not return until a late hour; but this reflection upon the character of Frances bears upon it the stamp of inconsistency. In the publication, after his death, of Purcell's Te Deum and Jubilate in D, the widow, in a dedication to the Bishop of Durham, says: 'My Lord, the ambition I have to do the greatest honour I can to the memory of my Dear Husband,' and so on. And Purcell, in his will, made on the day of his death, says: 'And I doe hereby give and bequeath unto my loveing Wife, Frances Purcell, all my Estate both reall and personall of what nature and kind soever.' Mrs. Purcell, who died in February, 1706, is buried near her genius husband in Westminster Abbey. Many ladies, whose husbands were not geniuses, formerly found a last resting-place within the precincts of that glorious Walhalla, one such being, as the burial registers duly record, 'necessary woman to the House of Lords'!

MARIA BARBARA BACH AND ANNA MAGDALENA BACH.

John Sebastian Bach has every claim to be considered the most domesticated of great composers. He not only married twice, but to no one could the words of Psalm cxxvii., v. 5 (or 5 and 6 in the Prayer Book version), be more appropriately applied than to the composer of the '48', as he was blessed with twenty children!—a full score, in fact.

In the year 1703 Bach became organist of the New Church at Arnstadt, but he does not seem to have got on very well with the powers that be. He received a 'citation' to appear before the Consistory to explain his conduct. One of the charges against him was that 'he has latterly allowed a strange maiden to appear and to make music in the choir.' This 'strange maiden' was his cousin, Maria Barbara Bach, who, on October 17, 1707, changed her estate, but not her name, on becoming the wife of the great Cantor, then twenty-two years old. Maria Barbara, who was the best of companions and a true sympathiser with Bach in his work, died suddenly and was buried during the absence of her husband at Carlsbad. She was only thirty-six at the time of her death, and she had borne him seven children.

Bach remained a widower for eighteen months. His second wife was Anna Magdalena Wülken, a Court singer at Cöthen, and the youngest daughter of the Court trumpeter. Youth was on her side, when, at the age of twenty-one, she became Mrs. Bach the second. Anna proved to be a veritable helpmeet to her husband. She had a fine soprano voice, which she used to good purpose in trying over his compositions in the privacy of the home circle. She took lessons from her spouse in clavier playing, and rendered him invaluable help in copying music—amongst other things, a great part of Handel's 'Passion Musik' in her handwriting still exists. Dating from the time of their marriage, the Bachs started a commonplace music-book to which they jointly contributed. It is entitled 'Clavier Büchlein vor Anna Magdalena Bachin. Anno 1722.' The first page contains a playful inscription to the effect that the book is directed against Calvinism, and its attendant melancholy and hostility to art. A similar but larger volume was started in 1725. This contains compositions by Bach and others, also a song on the reflections of a smoker, and other odds and ends evidently addressed by him to his wife, to whom he was devoted. Both these precious volumes are now preserved in the Royal Library, at Berlin. Anna Magdalena had thirteen children, these, with the seven Bach had by his first wife, made up the 'quiverful' of twenty girls and boys. She survived her husband, and, to the lasting disgrace of her stepsons and the Leipzigers of that day, she died in an almshouse and was buried in a pauper's grave.

MARIA ANNA HAYDN.

Like Bach, Haydn married a Maria, though not a Maria of his own choice. In the year 1760 he was twenty-eight and passing rich on £20 a year, plus 'board and lodging.' What more natural than that he should think of taking unto himself a wife? Two of his pupils were the Misses Keller, the daughters of a wigmaker, to whose house he had been introduced by Mr. Keller, Jun., who was a violinist at St. Stephen's when Haydn was a chorister. He fell in love with the younger of the fair pair of pupils, but she took the veil in preference to taking Haydn. The wigmaker, however, being anxious to keep young Mr. Haydn in the family, persuaded him to marry the elder damsel, Maria Anna, who was three years his senior! Here we cannot do better than let the well-informed Carl Ferdinand Pohl speak as to the result of this unfortunate union. Pohl says: 'The wedding took place at St. Stephen's [Vienna], November 26, 1760—a bad day for Haydn, and the foundation of unutterable domestic misery. His wife was a regular Xantippe — heartless, unsociable, quarrelsome, extravagant, and bigoted, who, as her husband said, cared not a straw whether he was an artist or a shoemaker. They had no children.' But we may draw a veil over Haydn's conjugal miseries.

CONSTANZE MOZART.

When the Archbishop of Salzburg dismissed Mozart from his household in Vienna, where he was treated as a servant, he (Mozart) took up his abode under the roof of one Frau Weber, a widow. She had three daughters, two of whom were eligible. As with Schumann, the course of true love by no means ran smoothly with Mozart. His, not his fiancée's, father was the just cause or impediment—just, by reason of Wolfgang's pecuniary straits. A report had reached Mozart, senior, to the effect that his son was paying attention to the landlady's daughter. A serious admonishment thereupon ensued. But it was the old, old story. 'To my mind a bachelor lives only half a life,' writes the young man to his father, and hesitatingly names the object of his affection. 'But surely not a Weber? Yes, a Weber, Constanze, the third daughter.' All paternal attempts at dissuasion were in vain; the young lover had made up his mind, and on August 4, 1782, in the same church (St. Stephen's, Vienna) where Haydn allowed himself to be (literally) 'led to the halter,' Constanze Weber became Constanze Mozart. The bridegroom was twenty-six years of age, the bride 'sweet nineteen.'

A month previous to his marriage Mozart had produced his opera 'Entführung aus dem Serail.' The bringing home of his bride was his 'Entführung aus dem Auge Gottes,' as he told his friends. 'As soon as we were married, my wife and I both began to weep; all present were touched at seeing us so moved, and wept too, even the priest.' Mrs. Mozart, in spite of many good qualities, was a shockingly bad manager. Her husband was naturally careless in money matters, and with their uncertain and pinched resources, it is no wonder that the making of both ends meet encountered serious difficulties during their married life. As a tribute to the devotion of Constanze to her husband there may be retold the familiar yet touching story of the 'Don Juan' Overture. On the evening before the first performance of that opera, the overture was still uncomposed. He worked at it far into the night, while his wife kept him supplied with punch, and told him fairy-stories to keep him awake. But at seven in the morning the copyist received the score, and it was played at sight in the evening! 'Constanze,' says Pohl, 'had a pretty, well-trained voice, and played the piano in a pleasing manner. Mozart dedicated to her, always in affectionate terms, many of his compositions; but, characteristically, finished none of them. She was a good and loving wife, accommodated herself in everything to her husband's disposition, and restrained him from many heedless actions. He was sincerely attached to her, and she, in return, lavished upon him every care and attention.' Two children were born to them. Eighteen years after the death of Mozart, the widow, at the age of forty-six, married one George N. Nissen, an official in the Danish diplomatic service. Constanze outlived both her husbands, and died on March 6, 1842, aged seventy-nine.

In the year 1829 Vincent Novello paid visits to the sister and widow (then Madame Nissen) of Mozart, at Salzburg. In taking leave of him at her house, Constanze assured her English visitor that his visit had been one of the most gratifying compliments which had been paid for several years, both to herself and to the memory of 'her Mozart.' Novello, in the diary of his journey, records: 'I need not say what a crowd of interesting associations, curious thoughts, and singular reflections passed through my mind in the course of my solitary walk back to my Inn.'

CÉCILE CHARLOTTE SOPHIE MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY.

The illness of a friend was the awakening of 'love's young dream' in the case of Mendelssohn—if this suspicion of a 'bull' may be allowed. Schelbe was the friend for whom, in the summer of 1836, Mendelssohn acted as locum tenens as conductor of the Cäcilien-Verein at Frankfort-on-the-Main. At a certain house on the quay there lived the widow of a clergyman of the French Reformed Church, one Jeanrenaud. She had a very beautiful daughter, Cécile by name. But so youthful looking was the widow, Madame Jeanrenaud, that it became a joke in the family that, at first, she herself was supposed to be the object of Mendelssohn's frequent visits. In order, however, to test the proof of the proverb that 'absence makes the heart grow fonder,' Mendelssohn, at the very height of his passion, started off to Scheveningen, near The Hague, for a month's sea bathing. On his return to Frankfort the formal betrothal took place. A son-in-law of Mendelssohn's told the present writer that the 'Lied ohne Worte,' No. 18, in A flat, and entitled 'Duetto,' was a veritable love song which Mendelssohn composed expressly for his fiancée. He sent the manuscript to her while she was staying in Paris. As she could not play it herself she took it to Herz, who, from the manuscript copy, interpreted the love strains—the billing and cooing—which characterise this familiar composition of Mendelssohn's. The autograph is dated 'Frankfort, June 27, 1836.'

The wedding took place at the Walloon French Reformed Church, Frankfort. Mendelssohn was twenty-eight, his wife nearly ten years younger. A journal which they kept together (like Bach and his second wife) during the honeymoon is full of sketches and droll things of all kinds. The musical results of their wedding journey were the 42nd Psalm ('As the hart pants') and the Three Preludes (not the Fugues) for the organ (Op. 37). Soon after his marriage Mendelssohn had to tear himself away from his lovely young bride by reason of his engagement to conduct and play at the Birmingham Musical Festival, and he grumbles about it lustily. Here are his actual words as recorded in a letter to Ferdinand Hiller, dated London, 1st September, 1837:—

> 'Dear Ferdinand,
> 'Here I sit—in the fog—very cross—without my wife—writing to you because your letter of the day before yesterday requires it; otherwise I should hardly do so, for I am much too cross and melancholy to-day. It is nine days since I parted from Cécile at Düsseldorf. The first few were quite bearable, though very wearisome. But now that I have got into the whirl of London—great distances—too many people—my head crammed with business and accounts and money matters and arrangements—it is becoming unbearable, and I wish I were sitting with Cécile, and had let Birmingham be Birmingham, and could enjoy my life more than I do to-day.
> . . . . . .
> 'I must be a little fond of my wife, because I find that England and the fog and the beef and the porter have such a horribly bitter taste this time, and I used to like them so much.'

In his excellent monograph on Mendelssohn, Sir George Grove refers to a score of Haydn's Military Symphony which he (Mendelssohn) wrote for his wife and which bears the words 'Professor Cécile.' He also furnishes the following picture of Mendelssohn's domestic felicity at the time he was composing his organ sonatas: 'The pleasure in his simple home life which crops up now and then, is very genuine and delightful. Now, Marie [his elder daughter] is learning the scale of C, and he [Mendelssohn] has actually forgotten how to play it, and has taught her to pass her thumb under the wrong finger! Now, Paul tumbles about so as to crack their skulls as well as his own. Another time he is dragged off from his letter to see a great tower which the children have built, and on which they have ranged their slices of bread and jam—"a good idea for an architect," he says. At ten Carl comes to him for reading and sums, and at five for spelling and geography—and so on. "And," to sum up, "the best part of every pleasure is gone if Cécile is not there." His wife is always somewhere in the picture."*

Cécile Mendelssohn died six years after her husband. Of the five children of the marriage only the youngest now survives.

CLARA JOSEPHINE SCHUMANN.

'Faint heart never won fair lady' must have been the motto of Robert Schumann's love making. It touched the extremes of the idealistic and the tragic. As everyone knows, Schumann became a pianoforte pupil of the celebrated Friedrich Wieck. The professor had a most gifted daughter, Clara by name. When she was only thirteen Schumann was enthusiastically delighted with the clever little girl, 'adorned as she was with the twofold charm of childlike sweetness and artistic genius.' He wrote to a friend about her in these words: 'Think of perfection, and I will agree to it.' In due time Schumann openly avowed his affection for the wonderful fair pianist. His regard for her was reciprocated; but when Schumann formally asked her father's consent to the engagement, Wieck refused. Moreover, the old gentleman's opposition became even stronger and stronger as time went on. Persuasion availed him not a whit. So desperate did Schumann become that he went to law with the obstinate objector in order to gain the possession of his Clara. The case dragged on for a whole year, with the final result that Wieck's objections to the marriage were pronounced to be trivial and without foundation. The wedding took place at the church of Schönefeld, near Leipzig, on September 12, 1840 — the eve of the bride's twenty-first birthday—the bridegroom being thirty years of age.

In regard to the married life of the Schumanns, we cannot do better than let the late Dr. Spitta bear testimony to its conditions. He says: 'As far as anything human can be, the marriage was perfectly happy. Besides their genius, both husband and wife had simple domestic tastes, and were strong enough to bear the admiration of the world without becoming egotistical. They lived for one another, and for their children. He created and wrote for his wife, and in accordance with her temperament; while she looked upon it as her highest privilege to give to the world the most perfect interpretation of his works, or at least to stand as mediatrix between him and his audience, and to ward off all disturbing or injurious impressions from his sensitive soul, which day by day became more irritable. . . . The deep joy of his married life produced the direct result of a mighty advance in his artistic progress.'

Alas! that this blissful existence should have been broken by the terrible calamity which overshadowed that happy home, and which darkened the lives of those genius-born and congenial souls. Oh! the mystery that lies hidden under such a dispensation! But it was not without its most beautifully bright side in the heroic fortitude by which Clara Schumann responded to the call of duty in working for and bringing up her children, no less than in the loving devotion whereby, in her masterly interpretations of his works, she revered and kept fresh the memory of her loved one. Who can forget the dignified demeanour, the heartfelt tenderness, the poetic beauty, the exquisite charm—all knit together by the chords of love—with which she was wont to reveal the beauties of Robert Schumann's noble Pianoforte Concerto? Peace to her memory.

Our space is exhausted, and we must bring this chit-chat to a close. 'But,' the uninitiated may feel disposed to ask—but what about the wives of Handel, Beethoven, Schubert, and Brahms?' They had none.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

The death, at Coburg, on July 31, of His Royal Highness the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha and Duke of Edinburgh calls for regretful mention in these columns by reason of the practical interest he took in the art of music. The Duke was a performer on the violin. He composed the 'Galatea' waltz, so named after the ship he commanded in the Royal Navy. This composition was first performed by five military bands and the orchestra of Her Majesty's Opera at a military concert given at the Royal Albert Hall, on September 23, 1872, with much éclat, the royal composer being present. Concerning this waltz, which was published in the same year, Mr. Davison remarked: 'Prince Alfred's notion of a waltz-tune does him credit.' His Royal Highness was practically the founder of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society; he diligently attended the rehearsals, and played first violin at the public performances. At one of the concerts he played a solo by Spohr and at another the violin obbligato to the Gounod-Bach 'Ave Maria.' The late Duke was President of the Royal Academy of Music, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, the Royal Choral Society, and a Vice-President of the Royal College of Music. He was born on August 6, 1844.

The inborn enthusiasm of the Welsh people for singing found its full expression at the Paris Exhibition. Three choirs from the Principality joined their forces in showing the gay Parisians, and some of the chief musicians of France, their capabilities, and, we may add, their untiring zeal in the cause of choral music. This trio of choirs were the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir, conducted by Mrs. Clara Novello Davies; the famous Rhondda Royal Glee Society, of which Mr. Tom Stephens is chief; and the Barry District Glee Society, under the conductorship of Mr. David Farr, a working miner. As the only other foreign choir in the competition was one from Bohemia, consisting of two dozen voices, and as the Cambrians were 180 strong, there was practically no contest. Therefore the judges, with M. Saint-Saëns at their head, decided upon all prizes and no blanks. A lady conductor was doubtless something of a novelty to the French folk, and it is no wonder that

M. Saint-Saëns, in heartily shaking the hand of Mrs. Clara Novello Davies, warmly congratulated that lady on the excellent singing of the fair damsels under her spirited baton. She was also crowned with a silver-gilt laurel wreath, as a special token of appreciation. Altogether the sons and daughters of Cambria worthily maintained their splendid choral reputation in their achievements at the great show on the banks of the Seine.

The annual 'Return' of the British Museum has a far less blue-bookish interior than the cover thereof might imply. It appears that 2,332 fewer students visited the Reading Room than in the previous year; but as the daily average was 624, and each reader used on an average seven volumes per diem (exclusive of those taken from the shelves of the Reading Room), it is evident that the human book-worm species is in no danger of becoming extinct. We learn that '4,808 pieces of music, each complete in itself, have been acquired by copyright during the year.' How many of these acquirements were stillborn? the cynic may be pardoned for enquiring. Mr. Barclay Squire, the indefatigable 'chief' of the music department (printed books), is ever on the alert for adding rare tomes to our National Library. The following extract from the Blue-book gives some of the year's enrichments.

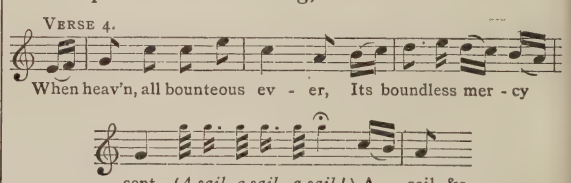
The additions to the Library of Music include a copy of the 'Liber quindecim Missarum electarum,' printed at Rome by Andreas Antiquus of Montona in 1516, the first musical work printed at Rome, and the first folio collection of Masses ever published; the 'Flores de Musica' of M. R. Coelho, Lisbon, 1620; the 'Liber Passionum' of Esterano de Christo, Lisbon, 1595; six part-books of the 'Missae Quatuor' of Franciscus Garrus, Lisbon, 1609, a work, so far as is known, unique; two beautifully engraved collections of organ pieces by G. Nivers, Paris, 1667; two volumes of music composed for the Vielle or Hurdy-gurdy; a number of part-books of rare sixteenth century madrigals, and a copy of Eslava's 'Lira Sacro-Hispana,' Madrid, 1869, a work in ten volumes which has become very scarce.

'Songs of the Sea' forms the subject of an interesting article in the August number of Temple Bar. The writer, Mr. Alan Walters, laments the absence of notable English sea songs of the time of Shakespeare and even of later date. He says: 'We possessed no real national song of the sea' until the appearance of 'Rule, Britannia,' in the year 1740. Mr. Walters makes the common mistake of giving the title of Dr. Boyce's naval ditty as 'Hearts of oak': its original form is 'Heart of oak.' John Davy's 'Bay of Biscay' is a sea song that fully justifies its popularity; but how few tenors nowadays can do it justice? Charles Dibdin comes in for some rather severe, though wholesome criticism. 'Perhaps,' says Mr. Walters, 'he would have been a greater man if he had written less'—a truism which is capable of wider application—'for while we admire his genius and his choice of themes, we are of opinion that most of his thirteen hundred songs might be burnt to-morrow without any serious loss either to literature in general or to his own fame in particular. His best songs do not number a score. Who can read "Poor Tom Bowling," written on the occasion of his brother's death, without feeling the influence of its pathetic simplicity and felicitous tenderness? Words, sentiment, and melody (for Dibdin was no mean musician) are all in perfect keeping, and the result is a song that will last as long as England lasts.' Shield's 'The Arethusa' gets honourable mention, and few will deny that Thomas Campbell's 'Ye Mariners of England' and 'The Battle of the Baltic' are 'two of the noblest lyrics ever penned in praise of seamen.' Is it not curious that very few sea songs have been written by practical seamen, and that fewer still are free from technical errors? Mr. Walters concludes his observations in a somewhat pessimistical tone thus:—

We fear that the age of sea songs is past. Such nautical ditties as have in our day flowed from the pens of ballad-mongers are cast in a different mould. There is little to be said in praise of the fin de siècle people's poet, who is content to chant the praises of the Old Kent Road, and to recount in shambling doggerel the kitchen-cupboard loves of cook and constable, or the cooings of barmaids and beer-bemused 'Johnnies.' 'Annie Laurie' does nowadays just as well for the forecastle as anything else. Such inanities as 'Tarara-boom-de-ay' have found a home in the hearts of men whose grandsires sang over bowls of 'flip' songs that are now heard only as lisped by wooden-throated tenors at a penny reading. You may write a song for a sailor, but you cannot make him sing it.

Who has not been bored by the wooden-throated tenor?

While on the subject of sea songs, and as a more or less nautical prelude to the approaching Hereford Festival, we may refer to the 'Bay of Biscay' as sung by that prince of tenors, John Braham. It is true that this celebrated vocalist's greatness was not to be measured by his stature. But any shortcomings in this respect he atoned for by throwing strong dramatic feeling into the singing of his songs. In Davy's famous ditty he made a great, if not a legitimate effect by falling on one knee at the words 'a sail,' which, in the form of a three-fold repetition, he interpolated into the song, thus:—



At the Hereford Festival in question Braham followed his usual custom. But in consequence of the platform being constructed with a high barrier on the side towards the audience, Braham, when he dropped down on his knee, was completely lost to sight. For the moment the audience thought that the little tenor had slipped down some unsuspected trap-door. In their anxiety to see what had become of him, they rose from their seats like one man. When, however, he appeared to view he was greeted with great hilarity. In other and more parodyical words: Loud roar'd the Festal laughter, the mirth a deluge show'rs. . . . Braham in sight appears, we hail him with our jeers. Sings his lay, on that day, in the city of Hereford O!

The opera season ended very tamely, the last week being given up entirely to repetitions of familiar works with familiar casts. One outcome of the season has been a determination (which is certainly not premature), on the part of those responsible, that Covent Garden shall no longer have the worst and most antiquated stage in the civilized world. Accordingly a new stage is to be built, at great expense, with every possible modern improvement—and so those who write about opera will lose one of their most fruitful subjects. But no one else will, we suppose, regret the disappearance of the anachronisms behind the curtain. The new arrangements have been designed in consultation with Herr Brandt, the architect of the Wiesbaden Opera House—for we are still, in artistic matters, far from approaching the Greek philosopher's ideal of 'the self-sufficient state.'

ON July 28, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach, the mortal remains of the great Cantor were transferred, amidst solemn and impressive ceremonies, to, it may be hoped, their final resting-place. This place of sepulture is the specially erected crypt, immediately below the altar, in the Church of St. John, Leipzig. The remains are enclosed in a most artistically designed sarcophagus of French marble, and consist of the complete skeleton of the master, with the exception only of a few fingers. The musical portion of the proceedings included the singing by the Quartet für Kirchengesang of the chorale 'Wenn ich einmal soll scheiden,' and the final chorus from the 'St. Matthew' Passion was played on the organ by Herr Pfannstiehl, the excellent organist of St. John's Church. The Bach crypt is illuminated by the electric light! It will be accessible to all pilgrims to the shrine of the immortal master.

A CORRESPONDENT, who is a captain in the army, writes as follows in reference to our recent article on Kneller Hall:—

Will you allow me to supply an omission, quite unintentional, I am sure, in your most interesting article on Kneller Hall in this month's MUSICAL TIMES?

The first Commandant, the maker, of the school of music was my old friend, Major-General Whitmore. Himself no mean musician, he pulled the school through its initial difficulties, started the weekly band performances, and raised the money for the adornment of the chapel, which was originally as hideous as it could be.

Thus I venture to think that an article on Kneller Hall is incomplete without even the mention of Major-General Whitmore's name.

We are sorry not to have mentioned Major-General Whitmore's name; but the article did not attempt to give a complete history of Kneller Hall, only a description of the excellent methods adopted there and the satisfactory results obtained.

HERE is another military band story. It is of a Scotch serjeant-major whose knowledge of music was on a par with that nonjocularitiveness so characteristic of his race. This son of Scotia was admonishing a young bandsman for laziness in not practising his instrument, whereupon the indolent one solemnly and excusingly said, 'I have lost my tenor clef.' 'Lost your tenor clef!' replied the irate Mac, 'well you can use Brown's for a day or two, while he's in the hospital.'

THE Asylum for Aged Musicians, founded by Verdi, which has been in course of erection since 1896, is approaching completion and will shortly be opened. It will provide accommodation for sixty male and forty female residents, whose maintenance has been amply provided for by the generous founder. It is interesting to note that the stately hall set apart for the social recreation of the inmates has been ornamented with the medallion portraits of the eight composers regarded by Verdi as specially representative of the genius of Italy—viz., Palestrina, Monteverde, Frescobaldi, Scarlatti, Marcello, Pergolese, Cimarosa, and Rossini. The portrait of the composer of 'Aïda' himself, the munificent founder of this magnificent 'home,' is conspicuous by its absence!

MESSRS. NOVELLO intend to issue almost immediately what may be termed old friends in a new guise. The title of the new publication is to be 'Novello's Anthem Book, selected for Festival and general use throughout the year.' As a matter of fact, this 'Anthem Book' will consist of several books, each one of which will contain twelve anthems suitable for Advent, Christmas, Easter, and Harvest, in addition to a 'general' section which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, and those who make the acquaintance of these little books will find therein many favourite anthems that are always sure of a welcome. It may, therefore, be assumed that in churches where an elaborate musical service is not possible, this anthem publication will be very acceptable. In such cases the advantage of having in one book sufficient material for twelve months is one which many a village and town church choir will doubtless appreciate. It is proposed to issue a series of these books at the price of one shilling each—that is, at the rate of one penny per anthem. What more need be said?

A CORRESPONDENT, who is a true-born Briton, has, by way of a holiday task, been amusing himself by drawing up a list of foreignised names of native composers. He is of opinion that it may be a useful guide to those organ recitalists, for instance, who wish to impress the British public with their knowledge of foreign musicians. Here is an instalment of the names, the elucidation of which will doubtless furnish our readers with a little recreation:—

Chevalier Dupont.
Henri Adroit.
Walter von Papagei.
Georg von Mauerschwalbe.
Kohlerücken-Kleidermacher.
Hans von Farbenbeizer.
Chevalier De la Riposte.

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN has recently made some changes in his band by the introduction of twelve new instrumentalists of high attainment. The principals in each department of the Queen's Hall orchestra are now as follows:—

First Violin, Mr. Arthur W. Payne.
Second Violin, Mr. Lyell-Tayler.
Viola, Mr. A. E. Ferir.
Violoncello, Mr. W. H. Squire.
Double-Bass, Mr. J. Haydn Waud.
Flute, Mr. Albert Fransella.
Oboe, Mr. D. Lalande.
Clarinet, Mr. Manuel Gomez.
Bassoon, Mr. E. F. James.
Horn, Mr. A. Borsdorf.
Trumpet, Mr. W. Morrow.
Cornet, Mr. Arthur Smith.
Trombone, Mr. T. Colton.
Tuba, Mr. W. Reynolds.
Tympani, Mr. C. Henderson.
Harp, Miss Miriam Timothy.

During the present season of Mr. Newman's Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, the general outline of the scheme will be as follows:—

Mondays	First part,	Wagner.
Tuesdays	,,	Popular, with a Concerto.
Wednesdays	,,	Symphonic.
Thursdays	,,	Popular, with a Concerto.
Fridays	,,	Beethoven.
Saturdays	,,	Popular, without a Symphony or Concerto.

The second part of each concert will be of a popular nature.

THE Moody-Manners Opera Company offer two prizes, each of the value of £250, for the two best operas, one to be composed by a British subject, the other by a foreigner. In addition to the amount of the prize, 10 per cent. of the net receipts will accrue to the prize-winner, but the prize opera is to become the sole property of the Company.

Dr. Joseph Cox Bridge, conductor of the Chester Musical Festival, is the youngest son of the late John Bridge, a worthy lay-clerk of Rochester Cathedral, and was born in that ancient Kentish city on August 16, 1853. Like Armes of Durham, Crow of Ripon, Bridge of Westminster, and the late Joseph Maas before him, he became a chorister in Rochester Cathedral, and was subsequently assistant-organist to his master, the venerable Mr. John Hopkins. Soon after the appointment of his elder brother, now Sir Frederick Bridge, to the organistship of Manchester Cathedral, in 1869, Joseph Bridge became pupil of and assistant to his fraternal relative in Cottonopolis. In 1871 he obtained the post of organist of Exeter College, Oxford, and graduated at the University: B.A., 1875; Mus.B., 1876; M.A., 1878; Mus.D., 1885. He obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists in 1879, and is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music. Upon the resignation of the late Frederick Gunton of the organistship of Chester Cathedral, in 1877, Dr. Joseph Bridge was appointed to the vacant post, which he has since held with marked success and efficiency. He was for some time conductor of the Bradford Choral Society and on more than one occasion he was entrusted with the responsible duty of deputising for the late Sir Charles Hallé. As a composer there has to be placed to the credit of his account an oratorio, 'Daniel' (1885); a dramatic cantata, 'Rudel' (1891); a sacred cantata, 'Resurgam'; a Requiem, composed for the recent Chester Festival; an operetta, 'The Bell of the Area'; a Symphony in F (1894); a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C, for voices and orchestra (1879); an Overture in G for organ; and other works of smaller calibre. In 1879 Dr. Bridge assisted in reviving the Chester Musical Festivals, which had not been held for fifty years, and with what success he has engineered these feasts of song need not be re-told. He has also conducted and financed the Chester Musical Society for the past eighteen years, and has raised the Cathedral services to a high state of efficiency. It is no wonder that the old lay-clerk of Rochester was proud of his two cathedral-organist boys.

Dr. Joseph Bridge has given, in an interesting pamphlet, a history of the Chester Musical Festivals, which, it will be remembered, were suspended for half-a-century—from 1829 to 1879, when, in the latter year, the enthusiastic organist of Chester Cathedral resuscitated these music-meetings on the banks of the Dee. Dr. Bridge does not furnish the why and the wherefore of this long hiatus in the Festival continuity. In the Musical World of April 7, 1842, the following is given as the reason for not holding the meeting in that year:—

> There is to be no musical festival at Chester this year, the bishop having objected to sanction it on account of the concerts and ball which follow the oratorios, and the dean and chapter having refused to lend the nave of the cathedral for the morning performances. The citizens are much chagrined at the course taken by the ecclesiastical authorities.

Attention does not seem to have been called to the fact that the Festival of 1829 very narrowly escaped the possible presence of Mendelssohn. Just before the Festival was about to be held, the young composer—he was only twenty—was enjoying his visit to Coed-du, near Mold, in Flintshire. On his way, in the coach, to London he chanced in a curious way to come across François Cramer, the leader of the Chester Musical Festival. But we may let him describe the incident in his own words as recorded in one of his letters, dated 'London, September 10, 1829':—

> 'I drove away in the evening; the lights in the house sparkled through the bushes in the distance; in my open carriage I passed by several favourite places, the gentle brook already mentioned, the last hedge of the property, and then off I went at furious English speed. I snubbed all my travelling companions, spoke not a word, but kept quiet, half dreaming, half thinking, a little gloomy, just as I think one always is when one rushes along two hundred miles in a mail. It appeared almost like a magic-lantern of chance when on the second evening of my journey (I travelled right through in order to reach London in the morning) the mail stopped, because it met the mail from London to Chester, and putting my head out of the window while the two coachmen were talking, I saw peeping out of the other mail Fr. Cramer and his daughter (you remember Miss Marian?). Exchange a few words, then drive asunder, and part for years or longer—such is the world; moving onwards, meeting, coming near, and going far away. On my arrival in London I resumed my quiet life, which consists in writing music and reading English.'

SIR GEORGE GROVE was not only the first Director of the Royal College of Music, but he was one who took a very active part in its inception. What more natural, therefore, than that the great music-school at Kensington should desire to perpetuate, in some tangible form, the memory of one so greatly esteemed within, as well as beyond its walls? In this connection Sir Hubert Parry, the worthy successor of the late Sir George Grove in the Directorship, writes us from the Royal College of Music:—

> I think you will probably be interested to see the enclosed resolution, which was passed at a recent Council meeting held here, and may like to make an announcement about it.

Here is the Resolution, which proclaims its own commendation:—

> It was moved by the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, seconded by Mr. Pember, and resolved:—
> 'That an Open Scholarship be founded in memory of the late Sir George Grove, giving free musical education at the College for a period of not less than three years; the subject to be Composition, and the Scholarship to be called the "George Grove Memorial Scholarship."'

THE estate of the late Sir George Grove has been valued at £31,744 14s. 9d. gross, including personalty of the net value of £29,992 6s. 7d. The estate is bequeathed, in trust, to Lady Grove and, subject to her life interest, to his three sons, Messrs. Walter Maurice, Julius Charles, and Arthur Stanley Grove.

A GREAT London daily, in printing the above particulars, has assessed the 'personality' of the departed knight at some thirty thousand pounds!

DR. HENRY HILES has been successful in winning a prize, of the value of £25, given by Messrs. Lorenz, of Ohio, for an anthem. This award is one of a series whereby these American gentlemen are endeavouring to encourage excellence in church music. The adjudicators were from both 'sides'—Mr. Dudley Buck, of New York, Mr. W. S. Matthews, of Chicago, and the venerable Dr. E. J. Hopkins, whom we are glad to claim as our very own. Dr. Hiles—whose anthem is a setting of the words 'God so loved the world'—is to be congratulated upon the fact that his hand has not lost its cunning.

FRÄULEIN TERNINA is a prima donna who seems to be unfettered by the traditions appertaining to her lyric sisters, dead and living. According to information furnished by her to an interviewer of the World, 'she has never been attacked by highwaymen, she has never chartered a special train, or driven an engine, or been chased up and down the Thames in steam-launches by frenzied managers. She has not even a lap-dog which accompanies her to rehearsals,' and we venture to add that her 'Home, sweet home' is not a castle. In regard to the more practical nature of a prima donna's calling, Fräulein Ternina said: 'We have few singers in Germany now, and as time goes on there will be fewer. And where the new ones are to come from, it is hard to see. Young ladies and young men at a given moment grow tired of practising and of being told that their production is faulty. Then they strike an attitude and protest that they are Wagner singers. In two years' time they have hardly a note left.' These sapient observations should not be lost on young English students, who are not unknown to 'strike an attitude' or to become stage struck. The distinguished Fräulein has some very pleasant things to say about 'those dreadful men, the critics.' We are told that 'in her opinion the musical critics of London are the most independent and honest to be found anywhere. She is very much struck by the fact that most of them write so little technical criticism; but there is nothing to prove, she thinks, that this is due to ignorance, because they show knowledge which compares favourably with that to be found elsewhere. And with but few exceptions they write more courteously of artists—even when censuring them—than any of their compeers in other countries.' It causes no surprise that the interviewer—himself one of the fraternity, perchance—should say of this fair appreciatress of our London musical press: 'Altogether her conversation is most interesting.'

DR. G. R. SINCLAIR, of Hereford, is to be felicitated upon the circumstance that he has been appointed to the important post of Conductor of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society in succession to the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap. In our next issue we hope to give a portrait of Dr. Sinclair in connection with his conductorship of the Festival soon to be held on the banks of the Wye. A full page view of the interior of Hereford Cathedral will illustrate a special report of this meeting of the Three Choirs.

MR. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR has been appointed conductor of the next Westmoreland Musical Festival, to be held in 1901, when his 'Death of Minnehaha' is to be performed. The fortunate young composer has been commissioned to supply the incidental music to Mr. Stephen Phillips' drama 'Herod,' which is announced for production at Her Majesty's Theatre.

MR. PERCY PITT, who has been spending a few weeks at a quiet Kentish seaside place, has just put the finishing touches to his music to Mr. Stephen Phillips' drama 'Paolo and Francesca,' which Mr. George Alexander is about to produce.

THE last number of the Zeitschrift der Internationalen Musikgesellschaft contains an article (in English) by Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast, in praise of 'The man's alto in English music,' in addition to other interesting matter. The various lists of new books, newspaper articles, &c., which appear from month to month, promise to be very useful, especially as they are to be arranged in alphabetical order in the bound yearly volume.

> 'Wanted a steady respectable man to look after a garden and milk a cow who has a good voice and is accustomed to sing in the choir.'

Thus runs an advertisement in a Cambridge paper. Now, although cows may possess *moo*sical voices, they are accustomed to 'sing' in stalls other than those assigned to the choir. If the advertisement had only mentioned taking a turn at churny's exercises as one of the qualifications of the lactine-fluid giver—but 'there's always a something.'

MR. EDWARD ELGAR will form the subject of the biographical sketch in our next issue. A new portrait of the distinguished composer will appear as an extra supplement. Mr. Franklin Taylor, in the same issue, will contribute a practical article on pianoforte teaching.

THE CHESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

If he who contrives to mingle the useful with the sweet may be said to have 'scored every point,' those who were responsible for the programme of the Chester Musical Festival may be accounted victorious. Without insisting too closely upon the analogy, it may at least be affirmed that the Chester programme appealed in equal measure to the general public who are content to hear old favourites and to the more enterprising minority who desire to extend their experience. Concerning the more stereotyped works that are common to most Festivals, a very few words may suffice. 'Elijah,' which opened the Festival on the morning of Wednesday, July 25, served to show the prowess of a really excellent chorus of something over 200 voices. Much may be said for the principle of a local chorus, and, indeed, I feel very strongly that in the end it conduces to the well-being of a Festival to make as much of local resources as is consistent with efficiency; but it may well be allowed that a more eclectic system resulted in this case in a stronger chorus than Cheshire alone could have produced. In addition to a nucleus formed by the Chester Musical Society, there were contingents from Manchester, Leeds, and Bradford, formed, it is safe to assume, of experienced as well as powerful voices. The result, at any rate, was excellent, the various sections of the chorus being unusually well-balanced and the singing showing careful preparation and general intelligence.

Handel's 'Messiah,' which very worthily ended the Festival on the Friday evening, deserves notice as being one of the most rapid performances of the work that I remember to have heard. Dr. J. C. Bridge is a most efficient conductor; indeed, there are few of our provincial musicians who know this phase of their business better, but his temperament inclines him more in the direction of force and energy than tenderness or emotional expression. So far as this keeps him from becoming maudlin it is a fault which one can readily condone; but sometimes it tends to deprive music of the dignity that should belong to it, as proved the case on this occasion with many of the broader choruses in 'The Messiah'—'Surely He hath borne our griefs' or 'Behold the Lamb,' for instance. For the same reason one felt that insufficient justice was done to 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' which was taken too hurriedly to express its nobility, and that in a generally excellent performance of Tschaïkowsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, the first movement lost something of its dramatic force by absence of sufficient contrast, the cantabile second subject being played with a lack of deliberation that slurred over its essentially tender character. Happiest, on the whole, was Dr. Bridge in the 'Faust' of Berlioz, which he conducted with admirable spirit and verve.

These familiar works, welcome as their performance undoubtedly was to the people of Chester, who attended the Festival, and especially 'The Messiah,' in goodly numbers, are less likely to interest the outside public than the novelties or rarities of the programme. In this respect the Festival presented several points of more than ordinary interest. There was only one absolute novelty, but it proved of much greater interest than the average new cantata one hears at a Festival, and forgets as speedily as may be. Dr. J. C. Bridge, who has been responsible for most of the new compositions introduced to the public at the Chester Festivals since their resuscitation in 1879, has never written a work more worthy of the occasion than his new Requiem proved. The South African War, and, as a matter of great local moment to Chester, the death of the Duke of Westminster, gave point to the production, if they did not indeed inspire the composition, but it may certainly be asserted that it required no adventitious aid to popularity. Original, in the sense of revealing a strong individuality, I would not like to call it; it bears too much evidence of the influence of Verdi's similar work for that, but it has sufficient claims to attention in its abundant vigour, fresh and vocal melody, picturesque scoring, concise and unlaboured development. The interest is well sustained, for the composer has the somewhat rare gift, not only of being able to go on, but also of knowing when to stop, for which reason alone I should venture to predict that this Requiem is not likely to be allowed to rust on the shelf. As it takes only a little over three-quarters of an hour in performance, it should be fitted for church use as well as for concert performance, a practical point strongly in its favour.

Next as regards novelty was a work which had never before been heard in its entirety in this country, the cantata by Saint-Saëns entitled 'The Deluge,' which is known to English audiences chiefly by the melodious prelude, with its graceful violin solo. It was worth a hearing, for it is always clever, and sometimes charming, while the scene in which the rising of the flood is suggested is almost impressive—at least, from the French point of view. I do not know whether it was composed at the time when Saint-Saëns came so much under the influence of Wagner as to incur suspicion in his own country, but I fancied I detected something of the 'Lohengrin' feeling in the orchestration of not a few pages.

So rarely heard as to be next door to a novelty was another composition of the French school, the 'Funeral and Triumphal Symphony' of Berlioz. It is a highly characteristic work, both in the large lines of its construction and in the exceedingly apt use of a strange medium, for, as is well known to readers of Berlioz's memoirs, it was written for wind and percussion alone, for open-air effect, and the strings and chorus which the composer afterwards added in the third and last movement are quite an extraneous and ad libitum addition. It is sometimes dull, and the unrelieved tone of wind instruments helps to engender monotony; but, on the other hand, the elegiac tone is well caught, as well as that of stately and solemn pomp. Certainly Dr. Bridge deserved thanks for giving us a generally adequate performance of a work of exceptional interest which had, so far as I can ascertain, never before been heard in the North of England. It was given as part of a programme intended specially to commemorate our soldiers who have fallen in South Africa, so that its peculiar appropriateness was obvious.

The remaining features of a well arranged programme were more or less familiar. One of the most interesting was the 'Hora Novissima' of the American composer, Professor Horatio W. Parker, which, after suffering in this country a neglect longer than its intrinsic merits warranted, made so good an impression at the Worcester Festival last year. It is a work distinguished by much melodic charm, a refined sense of proportion, and finished workmanship, and these qualities seemed to me all the more marked after a repeated hearing. It had the more than nominal advantage of the composer's direction, for Mr. Parker is both level-headed and inspiring as a conductor, and has no difficulty in getting exactly what he wants from those who perform under his clear and expressive beat. This was, indeed, quite one of the most enjoyable things in the Festival.

Gade's 'Zion' is not very often heard nowadays, and the revival of this unpretending but artistic little work was not unwelcome, for though its idiom may in some respects seem rather out of date, it is distinguished by a purity and sincerity of style well suited to music that aims at being 'sacred.' Less accountable was the presence in the programme of the 'Transfiguration' of Perosi, but it may well be that curiosity and a sense of fair play induced the committee to give room to this production, passable only as the work of an earnest and promising student who has still to develop a style that can actually be called his own. Beethoven's Mass in C was a very welcome 'classic'; Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer' (the solo sung in excellent taste by Miss Esty) proved acceptable to many, and Schubert's 'Miriam's Song,' though at the best not one of his strongest works, was heard to more than ordinary advantage in being given, for the first time in this country, with Mottl's orchestration, which is certainly less clumsy than Lachner's. The Good Friday music from 'Parsifal' proved its singular fitness to the atmosphere of a Cathedral—where I, for one, would infinitely sooner hear it than in any concert-room—and Sullivan's fine 'In Memoriam' Overture was among the by no means too numerous examples of native art.

Concerning the performances, an almost uniformly high standard prevailed. The chorus was, as I have said, particularly good, and the band, recruited largely from the Hallé orchestra, was efficient, though there were, very occasionally, signs of that bugbear that is common to all our provincial Festivals, want of sufficient rehearsal. As successor to Mr. Willy Hess, one of the very finest leaders we have had in this country, Mr. A. W. Payne proved himself more than worthy, and his able playing of sundry incidental solos deserves mention. The organist, Mr. J. T. Hughes, was efficient, though occasionally, as in 'The Messiah,' he was rather too much in evidence. The principals were Miss Palliser, Miss Alice Esty, Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Giulia Ravogli, Miss Maggie Purvis; Messrs. William Green, Lloyd Chandos, C. Knowles, Bantock Pierpoint, and Andrew Black. If some of the ladies hardly sustained their reputation, the terrible heat of July might well account for this, and while all the gentlemen did well, it may fairly be said that Mr. William Green advanced his reputation as an oratorio singer.

I have already referred to Dr. Bridge's excellent work as conductor of the Festival, which owes much, if not everything, to his inspiring energy, and the best way to round off this plain, unvarnished account of an exceptionally interesting meeting is to reiterate my praises of its guiding spirit.

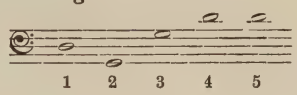
REBEC AND VIOL.

Hieronymus of Moravia was a learned priest of the thirteenth century. He wrote, among other things, a treatise on music, the chief merit of which is that it embodies the writings of still earlier authors on the subject of mensurable music. But he was far from being a mere compiler, and in his last chapter he has given us some interesting information about two stringed instruments in use in his day, to which he gives the Latin names of rubeba and viella.

Both these instruments were played with a bow, and neither of them appear to have had frets on the fingerboard. The rubeba is described as having two strings only, tuned in fifths, thus:  It is undoubtedly an early form of the 'rebec,' a member of the fiddle family, which in later times had three strings tuned in fifths.

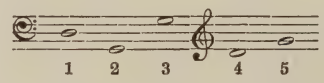
The viella is not so easily identified. It is certainly not the hurdy-gurdy (French 'viele'), because it is played with a bow, nor does it altogether correspond to the viol (French 'viole'), for it seems to have had a second neck or some means by which a bourdon string could be stretched clear of the fingerboard as in the later lutes. It is described as having five strings which may be tuned in three different ways.

In the first tuning—

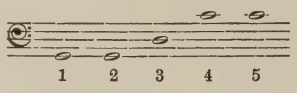


the fourth and fifth strings are in unison, and the first is a bourdon string ('bordunus'), which, being stretched outside the body of the instrument, 'evades the application of the fingers' (applicationes digitorum evadit); consequently the notes E and F on the bass stave can only be played an octave higher on the fourth or fifth string!

In the second tuning, which is said to be necessary for secular music, the bourdon is dispensed with, and all five strings are attached to the body of the instrument—



In the third tuning the first string is again a bourdon—



From what Hieronymus says as to the compass of these two instruments, it is clear that he does not contemplate the possibility of the position of the left hand being shifted. The viella, he tells us, when tuned in the second or lay manner, has a compass of two octaves, from  to  ; the rubeba cannot go above  ; and in the margin of the manuscript from which Coussemaker's text is printed, over against the third tuning some student has written: 'But I do not see how B can be played on this method.'

It was not till the seventeenth century, when the unfretted violin began to assert its superiority over the fretted viol, that players realised the advantage of freedom of movement in the left hand. Readers of Anthony Wood will remember the astonishment caused by Baltzar's skill in this respect. The entry is in his diary under date July 24, 1658:—

> Thomas Balsar or Baltzar, a Lubecker borne, and the most famous artist for the violin that the world has yet produced, was now in Oxon; and this day A. W. was with him and Mr. Edward Low, lately organist of Ch. Church, at the meeting-house of William Ellis. A. W. did then and there, to his very great astonishment, heare him play on the violin. He then saw him run up his fingers to the end of the finger-board of the violin, and run them back insensibly, and all with alacrity and in very good tune, which he nor any in England saw the like before. A. W. entertain'd him and Mr. Low with what the house could then afford, and afterwards he invited them to the tavern; but they being engag'd to goe to other company, he could no more heare him play or see him play at that time. Afterwards he came to one of the weekly meetings at Mr. Ellis's house and he played to the wonder of all the auditory: and exercising his fingers and his instrument several wayes to the utmost of his power, Wilson thereupon, the public professor, (the greatest judg of musick that ever was) did, after his humoursome way, stoop downe to Baltzar's feet, to see whether he had a huff (i.e., hoof) on, that is to say to see whether he was a devill or not, because he acted beyond the parts of man.

It would be interesting to know whether any representation of musical instruments corresponding to the rubeba or viella of Hieronymus is to be found in the architecture or manuscripts of the thirteenth century. Moravia, I believe, is or was a small state situate between Bohemia and Hungary; but Hieronymus is said to have passed the greater part of his life in a monastery at Paris, and the instruments he describes are probably those he was familiar with in France.

THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

We are now able to give a more complete outline programme of this time-honoured music meeting which is to be held next month, in the Town Hall, on October 2, 3, 4, and 5.

Tuesday (October 2).—Morning: 'Elijah,' Mendelssohn.
Evening: Miscellaneous, including Sir Hubert Parry's 'De Profundis' and Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony.

Wednesday.—Morning: 'The Dream of Gerontius,' Edward Elgar (composed expressly for this Festival, but conducted, at the composer's request, by Dr. Richter); Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony; and a selection from Handel's 'Israel in Egypt.'
Evening: Scenes from Longfellow's 'Song of Hiawatha,' S. Coleridge-Taylor, which will also be conducted by Dr. Richter, at the composer's request.

Thursday.—Morning: 'The Passion of our Lord,' according to St. Matthew (the English version by the late Dr. Troutbeck), J. S. Bach.
Evening: Miscellaneous, including Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Glazounow's Sixth Symphony.

Friday.—Morning: Requiem, Brahms; Mass (selection), William Byrd; Vorspiel, 'Parsifal,' Wagner; and Symphony, No. 7, Beethoven.
Evening: 'Messiah,' Handel.

The overtures to be performed are the 'Genoveva,' Schumann; 'Romeo et Juliet,' Tschaïkowsky; 'King Lear,' Berlioz; and 'Tannhäuser,' Wagner.

It will be observed, probably not without some degree of satisfaction, that the programme is stronger in choral works than it has been at the last two or three Festivals. The orchestra will number 121 performers, of whom eighty-seven are 'strings.' 'Dr. Richter has paid special attention to the band,' remarked Councillor G. H. Johnstone at a recent meeting of the general committee, 'and he thought they would have the finest orchestra they have ever had.'

The chorus will consist of 351 voices, distributed thus:—

Sopranos	107
Contraltos	81
Tenors	76
Basses	87
Total	351

We hear from Birmingham that the chorus are delighted with Mr. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius.' They are sure to do it justice, and there is every prospect of the work being a great success.

The names of the principal vocalists have already been given. The performance of the double quartet in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' promises to be a record one, as it will be sung entirely by principals. It is to be hoped that Dr. Richter will insist upon a rehearsal of this number, as it is often very raggedly sung. With the veteran Mr. W. C. Stockley (who has temporarily taken the vacant place caused by the lamented death of Dr. Swinnerton Heap) as chorus-master, and Dr. Richter as conductor—plus the fine material they have at their command and the enterprise of the Committee—there is every reason to expect that the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1900 will maintain those splendid traditions which are the proud heritage of this feast of music.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH MUSIC IN ENGLAND.*

The course of good sacred music, like that of true love, never did run smooth. The civil and religious revolutions of human society have constantly broken up its institutions and traditions, and robbed its endowments, whilst the capricious oscillations of fashion threaten the stability of its artistic continuity at every moment of time. Such, at least, has been the fate of sacred music in the Roman Catholic Church in England for the last three centuries. Not that the most bigoted opponent of Catholicism will blame the institution itself for these musical misfortunes; on the contrary, Catholics are generally blamed for paying too much heed to the sacred art. Indeed, the Roman Catholic Church has ever been the alma mater of music. Its liutrgy has given to the most inspired composers the noblest themes of praise, adoration, and supplication, in the venerable and lovely language of the Latin race. This Liturgy she gave to Palestrina, to Orlando di Lasso, to Mozart, and to Haydn; but she has not been able to add to this a continuous and sufficient security to her institutions and endowments such as would enable her to carry on from age to age a traditional school of musical art within the gates of her citadel.

In England she was stripped of her monasteries, her schools, and her emoluments, and since that time her cultivation of the arts of architecture, sculpture, painting, and music has almost entirely ceased. For three hundred years her whole effort has been concentrated first on existence and then on toleration and emancipation. Between William Byrd, who died a Catholic early in the seventeenth century, and Vincent Novello, who survived into the nineteenth century, nothing of real significance was contributed to sacred music by English Roman Catholics.

The names of William Byrd and Vincent Novello are allied here, not because the two men are to be compared as composers, but because the first marks the extinction of the old epoch and the second the beginning of the new. Vincent Novello was the restorer of Roman Catholic music in this country. He was an excellent, competent, practical musician, with a genuine love for Church music in any good school. He foresaw more than a century ago the needs of English Roman Catholics, and put them in possession of the best works of the Continental composers, old and new. He knew that in order to create a school one must begin by creating a taste and educating public opinion. He realised that Roman Catholics should have good music at their command, and know it by hearing it performed; so he republished in profusion the sacred works of the great masters, and did more than any man in England for the restoration of good Church music. Slowly and gradually his great efforts are beginning to bear fruit, though much remains to be done. Anyone who knows the Roman Catholic institutions devoted to education in this country, recognises that in some respects the musical standard falls below the average of their general excellence. The formal and intellectual aspect of the art has been starved, and too much prominence has been given to the noisy, showy style of the second-rate eighteenth century composers. The controllers of Roman Catholic Colleges, who would be the first to engage experts in mathematics and astronomy, and trust them for guidance, have been content to put their choirs into the hands of any inmate of only moderate musical capacity, and then probably hampered him by demanding the performance of second-rate and trashy compositions, because the least critical of the brethren have become inured to them by long habit. All this arises from the heads of the institutions regarding music as a matter of individual taste, and not as a department of human science demanding skilled teaching and training at the hands of specially educated experts.

I have said so much by way of introduction, because the sacred music that I propose to pass under review in these pages is a continuation by Messrs. Novello of the great work begun by Vincent Novello nearly a hundred years ago. The 'Cantiones Sacræ' are a series of musical settings of the Roman Liturgy, edited by Dom Samuel Gregory Ould, a monk of the order of Saint Benedict, and written by thoroughly competent musicians. There is nothing here of the noisy, showy, trashy style, so common among the inferior composers of the late Italian School. They belong to the same order of sacred music as the free school of English Cathedral writers. No. 1, for example, a Magnificat by E. Silas, has dignity, grace, and variety. The first three verses are sung by four mixed voices to a chant; the fourth verse is a soprano or tenor solo; verses 6, 7, 8, and 9, are sung in chorus to an andante movement which is free and graceful in accompaniment; the 'Sicut locutus est' is set to a well-sustained fugue, and for the Gloria is repeated the chant given to verses 1, 2, and 3. Such a setting as this requires care and attention, and a trained choir. It is not intended for a village mission, but it is none the less useful. It is music that appeals to the educated intellect and not to the uneducated emotions. It belongs to the same school as the music of S. S. Wesley, the school which the Roman Catholics of England will be wise to train themselves in, if they wish that their sacred music shall make any appeal at all to the intellectual classes of this country. Z.

HEREFORD FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

Four new works, to be produced at this year's Festival of the Three Choirs, lie before us and invite a few remarks. They are Professor Horatio Parker's setting of the 107th Psalm, Sir Hubert Parry's Te Deum, Professor Stanford's 'Last Post,' and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's cycle of four songs for contralto and orchestra (published collectively under the title of the first of the quartet—viz., 'The Soul's Expression').

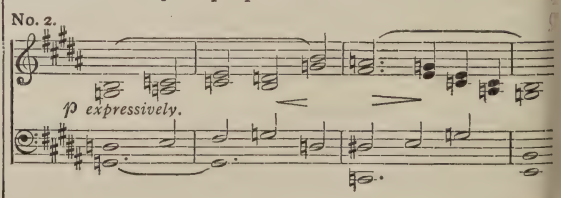
PROFESSOR PARKER'S PSALM.

The Yale Professor's second contribution to an English Festival claims attention first, because it is the work of a distinguished and most welcome visitor, and, secondly, because it is the largest of the four novelties, occupying 112 pages of vocal score against Sir Hubert Parry's 81, Professor Stanford's 24, and Mr. Taylor's 24 pages. Professor Parker has chosen to call his work 'A Wanderer's Psalm,' with the sub-title of 'Cantus Peregrinus,' designations which may or may not commend themselves to the critical. It is his Op. 50, and we venture to prophesy that the Hereford audience will vote it worthy in every way to mark the esteemed composer's completion of his first half-century of works. It recalls—but in our opinion is a decided advance upon—'Hora Novissima' by reason of its excellent workmanship, the solidity and strength shown in the choral portions, the splendidly built-up, imposing climaxes, its general effectiveness, and the absence of all brooding, doubt, and hesitation. The music flows along with wonderful ease, its course directed by a strong and steady hand which never loosens its firm grip. Nor does Professor Parker hesitate to occasionally make the very best use of a phrase of a few notes, or an effect, even if it may perchance have been used by one of his predecessors. But such are the bold swing of the music and the certainty with which all means are used to the ends of legitimate effect and the expression of dignified feeling, that few, if any, will object to being momentarily reminded of an old friend in a new guise.

The work is divided into seven numbers, and laid out for the regulation quartet of soloists, chorus—frequently divided into six or eight parts—and a very full orchestra. The dimensions and scope of the orchestral introduction seem an earnest of the serious spirit in which the composer approached his task. In an extended movement of some 110 bars he announces and treats in symphonic style some of the most important themes in the work.

In our first quotation, consisting of the opening bars of the Psalm, Section A will be recognised as the first strain of the Gregorian Tonus Peregrinus—

This might be called the motto phrase of the composition, for it is used again and again in its two broad 'corner-stones,' the massive first and last movements. The two sections A and B are occasionally used in combination, A forming a counterpoint to B. Twenty bars of slow tempo are followed by an Allegro, in which the above themes are discussed in 'grandiose' style, together with this, which forms the second subject proper of the movement—



It will be much in evidence later on, and if No. 1B might be called the 'Praise' motive, this 'second subject' may stand for a 'Prayer' theme.

It is quickly followed by—which is also largely used in the opening and final numbers.

The chorus enters with a broad, dignified phrase and after some fine antiphonal effects we reach thi fugal subject—

No. 4. Very firmly.

After its exposition, however, we pass over a short stretto and a repetition of the opening choral passage to a quartet for the soloists. At the words 'They went astray in the wilderness,' the Tonus Peregrinus makes its re-appearance; and as it recurs throughout the work at every reference to the Wandering of the Redeemed, it might well be called the 'Wanderer' motive. At 'so they cried unto the Lord,' No. 2 is introduced and directly afterwards No. 3. Then the chorus re-enters, and, being quickly reinforced by the solo quartet, the composer leads his full forces over a climax of imposing power and mastery to a short Coda (again introducing the 'Tone'), which triumphantly ends a very fine example of English sacred music.

No. 2 is a long contralto solo, sufficiently vague in its tonality (more especially as regards the rather extraordinary Coda) and principal figures of accompaniment to illustrate the text: 'They that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death,' &c. The 'Praise' and 'Prayer' themes (1B and 2) are both introduced where the text suggests their use.

No. 3 is a fugal movement of rare 'go' and remarkable workmanship. This is the chief subject—

No. 5. With rough vigour. Fast.

The success of this breezy movement, with choirs and audiences alike, will be instantaneous and genuine, though the reminiscence-hunter may lay his finger on a few notes here and there.

No. 4, bass solo and chorus, 'They that go down to the sea in ships,' is one of the most effective numbers in the work. It is certainly the most dramatic one, as befits the famous text. Its chief subject, first announced in the orchestral introduction in diminution, is in this latter form an important feature in the accompaniments throughout the earlier part of the movement—

No. 6. Resolutely. Fast.

The chorus is at first restricted to tenors and basses, but after their diminuendo descent to 'The wonders of the deep' on the lowest A naturals of their respective registers, the sopranos enter with splendid forte effect in the brightest notes of their compass at the words 'For at His word the stormy wind ariseth,' when the music becomes vividly descriptive and exciting. This short, crisp phrase—is thrown about from part to part, as the waves themselves are tossed hither and thither in a 'stormy wind.' The orchestra adds to the picture by well tried 'storm' passages in strings and wind. A realistic effect of somewhat doubtful expediency deserves quotation—

No. 7.

No. 8.

It is first sung by the soloist, and then a note higher by the chorus in octaves. The 'Prayer' theme (No. 2) recurs at 'So when they cried unto the Lord in their trouble,' which half sentence is, strange to say, followed by a pause and a fresh orchestral figure of several bars ere the remainder of the sentence is sung! This important new theme seems an old acquaintance—

No. 9. With tranquil, rapid motion.

It is much in evidence, and passes through a rare variety of keys throughout the remainder of this long, strong, and extremely tuneful movement, which, after another huge fff climax, ends peacefully ppp.

The following soprano solo, 'He turneth the floods into a wilderness' (No. 5), is a flowing, melodious piece, grateful to singer and audience alike. It opens in this wise—

No. 10. Andantino.

The Tonus Peregrinus appears yet again, thus rhythmically and harmonically metamorphosed, at "And let them wander out of the way"—

No. 11.

No. 6, 'The righteous will consider this,' is an a capella chorus, with a contrapuntal middle section which seems to promise a regularly developed fugue, but—as is the case with all his other fugal movements in this work—the composer gives us little more than the exposition. The rest is chiefly solid harmony that looks well on paper, and will doubtless prove effective in performance. A charming cadence phrase will please all audiences.

The final chorus and quartet, 'O give thanks unto the Lord,' recalls the opening movement in subject-matter, scope, and effect. It commences with an introduction of sixty-four bars, in which the Tonus Peregrinus is subjected to further changes, the most important being its diminution into staccato crotchets, in which form it becomes an important figure of accompaniment to the chorus. The chief phrase of the soprano solo (No. 10), in double augmentation (the quavers becoming minims), assumes a new and important rôle, and themes Nos. 1A, 1B, 2, and 3 are all subjected to further masterly and effective treatment.

The elaborate, strongly welded movement worthily crowns a work of which the American composer has every reason to be very proud.

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S TE DEUM.

Sir Hubert Parry's setting of the Ambrosian Hymn might well be dismissed with the remark that it is very much Parry, and Parry almost throughout at his very best. The rest will be taken for granted by all who look upon the Director of the Royal College of Music as the strong man in British music, as the master whose contributions to our art seem as if hewn in granite, noble structures erected in the architectural style of Bach, a wealth of new thought expressed in the beautiful classical language bequeathed to us by the immortal Leipzig cantor. It is only necessary to open any one page of the vocal score to see the hand of the first master of the modern English oratorio style. We recognise the curves and rhythmic figures of the melodies, the matchless declamation of the text, the busy orchestral figures of accompaniment, and last, but not least, the masterful counterpoint, not the kind of most learned stuff that is dry bones, et præterea nihil, but counterpoint that lives and marches with firm, virile strides towards its predetermined goal, making most wondrous music all the way. Here, as in all previous works by our 'English Bach,' a notable fact is the absence of everything that savours in the least of weak sentimentality, chromatic mellifluence, or hysterical 'Zeitgeist' whimpering. Sir Hubert is a man, a master, and an optimist. Voilà tout!

Though no break occurs in the work, it is necessarily divided into a number of sections which may be considered as separate numbers. After a very Parryish orchestral introduction of some thirty bars, this fugal subject, previously announced by the orchestra, is assigned to the basses of the chorus—and subjected to vigorous discussion. A fresh subject enters with the words 'Tibi omnes angeli proclamant,' and, after a beautifully devotional setting of the Sanctus (soprano solo and chorus), one of the serenest things Sir Hubert has ever given us, another theme is subjected to fugal treatment at 'Pleni sunt cœli,' &c.—

The opening theme (12) is introduced in the orchestra (in augmentation) as the end of this splendid movement is approached.

The following section, commencing 'Te gloriosus Apostolorum chorus,' is set for soprano solo and chorus. It is severely diatonic, straightforward in design and effect, and has a very characteristic figure of accompaniment. It is followed by an expressive bass solo, 'Tu Rex gloriæ, Christe,' remarkable for the many wide intervals in the voice part. The subsequent choral number, 'Judex crederis,' commences quietly, but quickly becomes agitated (at a remarkable syncopated passage) and gathers strength for an exciting ff climax, which will please all choirs capable of delivering a forceful attack, as will also this sudden 'explosion'— which seems written for stentorian Yorkshire voices. The lines 'Salvum fac populum tuum,' &c., are set for bass solo and chorus of men's voices, the flowing phrases of the former being frequently echoed by the latter. The basses will love to roll out a long quaver 'division' below the high E flat sustained by the solo voice.

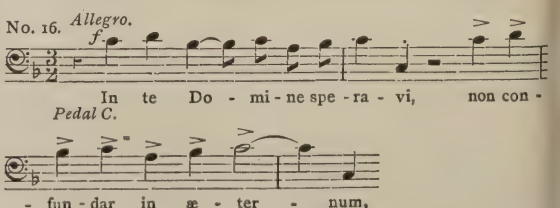
The men are followed by the ladies (soli or semi-chorus in three parts) in a graceful 6-8 Andante movement to the words 'Per singulos dies benedicimus te,' &c., which, in its turn, gives place to one of the most affecting points in the work, the short setting of the 'Miserere nostri, Domine.' Beginning p, with a short suppliant phrase sung in imitation by the six parts into which the choir is divided, we soon reach the thrilling climax, the word 'miserere,' uttered with poignant effect ff in solid harmony, after which the words 'Domine, miserere,' are sung more and more softly to short wailing phrases, ending ppp—

After a short duet for the two soloists, commencing at the words 'Fiat misericordia tua,' we reach the finale (laid out for soli and chorus), one of the most imposing and masterful pieces of contrapuntal architecture which even Sir Hubert has ever raised as a monument to his own genius and for the admiration and delight of his fellow-men. To do justice to such an elaborate display of consummate musicianship and overpowering yet elevating effect would require a separate article. We can only quote the remarkable principal subject, virtually consisting of only four notes of the scale—viz., C, D, B flat, A—



Enough that the magnificent movement will ring superbly through the vast spaces of Hereford Cathedral, a wonderful musical illustration of a confession of the firmest trust in God. No other living composer could have thus given expression, as it were, to a whole nation's prayer: 'In Thee, O Lord, have I trusted; let me never be confounded,' nor would it be possible to conceive a nobler contribution to a solemn Service of Thanksgiving to the Almighty.

PROFESSOR STANFORD'S 'LAST POST.'

Professor Stanford's setting for chorus and orchestra, with bugle obbligato, of Mr. W. E. Henley's poem, 'Last Post,' is likely to prove one of his most popular works, for it deals with a pathetically stirring 'khaki' subject, the music is direct in expression and as effective as the composer of the 'Revenge' knows how to make such patriotic pieces. The introduction of the long bugle call, known as 'Last Post,' one of the finest 'calls' in use in the British Army, is sure to lend a special attraction to the musical ear of many listeners, and will bring tears to many an eye.

The work begins appropriately with the 'call,' played, as we have intimated, on the bugle, and in extenso, while the orchestra discusses a wailing theme, which will be frequently met with in the course of the work, e.g.—

The orchestral introduction is no longer than the 'call'—thirty-four bars. When that is finished, the chorus sings in close harmony, partly unaccompanied—

> The day's high work is over and done,
> And these no more will need the sun:
> Blow, you Bugles of England, blow!

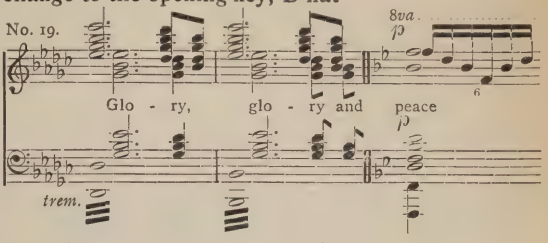
After a long pause over a drum-roll (we suppose), the orchestra starts a Funeral March, in which, as might be expected, drums and trumpets appear to have a lion's share of the music. This is the subject—

With a return to the tempo primo, the 'call' re-appears above a fresh orchestral accompaniment, while the chorus admonishes the 'Bugles of England' to blow—

> Over the camps of her beaten foe,
> Stern in the thought of the victor Mother!

This is followed by an impetuous Allegro molto, built upon fresh material, and working up to a broad climax at the words, 'Thus they felt it, and thus they died,' when the Funeral March music (No. 18) returns, in the key of G major.

At the last command, 'Blow, you Bugles of England,' we reach an Allegro maestoso, in which the orchestra discusses the bugle call with stirring military effect. A change to G flat at 'Glory and praise to the everlasting mother' introduces new matter of a somewhat stereotyped 'celestial' character (flowing arpeggios for the harp, &c.). A good, though scarcely new effect is this sudden change to the opening key, B flat—

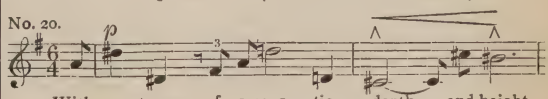


With a return to the opening orchestral theme (No. 17), given out molto maestoso (ff), we reach a short orchestral coda, and the work ends with the 'call' (bugle solo) and two pp chords for the orchestra. Professor Stanford's novelty is one of the very few serious works of art in which extensive use is made of military bugle calls. Bruneau's very beautiful and shamefully neglected opera, 'L'Attaque du Moulin' is another. Can any of our readers recall further works which present this interesting feature?

MR. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S SONG-CYCLE.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's settings of four of Elizabeth Barrett-Browning's sonnets will add to his reputation. They are very serious, deeply felt and forcibly expressed meditations rather than songs in the ordinary sense of that term. Mrs. Browning's sonnets do not at the first glance suggest that they yearn for musical expression. But Mr. Taylor has a way of successfully dealing with poems which most composers would prefer to leave severely alone, while laying, perchance, the flattering unction to their souls that 'what we best conceive we fail to speak.' While others content themselves with 'conceiving,' Mr. Taylor speaks out boldly, and in the present case he has not spoken until after much hard thinking. Of this we have ample proof on every page. The result is a set of songs in which intellectuality and spontaneity go hand in hand. They are as original as anything Mr. Taylor has ever done, yet they show more clearly than some of his most recent works how much even the rarest spontaneity of utterance will gain from the application of the severest self-criticism, of the file and the pruning knife.

The songs do not lend themselves very well to quotation, but we must draw attention to this strange piece of 'pictorial' music from the first sonnet, 'The Soul's expression' (note the 'octaves'!)—



One of the strongest points in the work is this fine, bold passage, from 'Grief'— and the opening of the last of the set, 'Comfort,' will give an idea of the tuneful, soothing nature of a beautiful song which will assuredly often be heard apart from the cycle—

No. 22.

The songs are all in slow tempo (Larghetto, Lento, Andante appassionato, and Larghetto), but they are sufficiently varied in character to keep the interest alert. We consider them worthy of Mrs. Browning's poems; higher praise we know not.

A personal touch seems to be introduced into the first of the set, where the composer sets to one of the finest passages in the cycle the poetess's pathetic confession:—

> With stammering lips and insufficient sound
> I strive and struggle to deliver right
> That music of my nature, &c.

We shall be disappointed if Mr. Taylor will not be considered to have 'delivered right' the music of his nature, his 'song of soul.'

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

THE TUNE 'MELCOMBE.'

The origin and history of our familiar hymn-tunes is a subject that is often invested with a peculiar and little suspected interest. So it is with Samuel Webbe's Long Metre tune 'Melcombe.' Most Psalmodic authorities assign its first appearance to a book entitled:—

A Collection of | Motetts or Antiphons | for 1, 2, 3, and 4 voices | or chorus | Calculated for the more Solemn parts | of | Divine worship, | by | S. Webbe. Published by his permission, and under his immediate Inspection.

London: | Printed for T. Jones, the proprietor, and sold by him at 63, Paternoster Row.

The Preface to this publication is dated 'August, 1792,' which year is invariably given as that of the tune's initial publicity. But as a matter of fact 'Melcombe' appeared ten years earlier in a practically unknown publication. Here is its title:—

An | Essay | on the Church Plain Chant | Part second, | containing | several anthems, litanies, proses and hymns, | as they are sung in the | Public Chapels at London.

With Approbation.

London: | printed and published by J. P. Coghlan, | in Duke Street, Grosvenor Square MDCCLXXXII.

Part I. of this little volume—each section of which has its own title-page—consists of 'Instructions for learning the Church Plain Song'; and Part III. is 'a Supplement of several anthems, litanies, proses and hymns, which have been omitted in the second part yet are sung in the Public Chapels at London, and are added at the request of some particular persons.' The 'Approbation' is signed by four Roman Catholic dignitaries who, having perused the book, found in it 'nothing contrary to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church.'

The publisher thus naïvely takes the public into his confidence on matters typographical:—

ADVERTISEMENT.

J. P. Coghlan requests the Public will observe, that it is near Four Years since he was first advised the Re-establishment of Printing the Gregorian or Church Plain Song in this Kingdom:—That it was with Difficulty, and at a Great Expence, that he obtained, about Two Years ago, the Type; but having no Compositor versed in setting that Sort of Musick, naturally delayed the Work; which, if through the infant State of the Attempt, should be found any where erroneous, he hopes what has been said will be a sufficient Apology; and that the nice Observer will honour him with their Remarks against another Edition.

No one will deny that this is very nicely put. After soliciting 'any choice Pieces which may contribute to the Piety and Harmony of Religious Music,' Mr. Coghlan concludes his 'Advertisement' in these terms:—

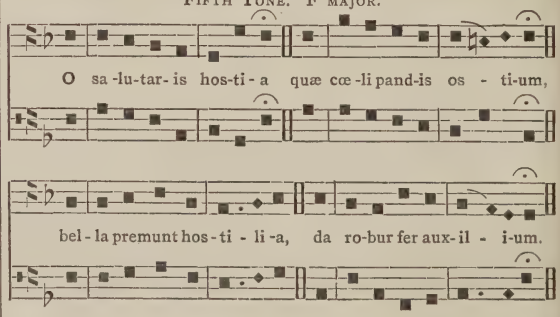
It is necessary to observe, that the Third Part, or Supplement to this Work, was not compiled by the Gentleman who did the other Two Parts, but was added, at the particular Desire of some distinguished Friends, for whom J. P. Coghlan had too much Regard and Esteem to refuse.

The name of 'the Gentleman who did the other Two Parts' is not given. Was it Samuel Webbe?

The melody of 'Melcombe,' though not so named, appears in Mr. Coghlan's 'Essay' anonymously, and in this form:—

At Exposition, Elevation, or Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Fifth Tone. F major.



In the same book are to be found Webbe's tunes known as 'Corinth' and 'Milan,' and also the 'Adeste Fideles.'

As we have already stated, 'Melcombe' appeared, but in ordinary notation, in Webbe's Motetts in 1792. It is there, as in the 'Essay,' set to an 'O Salutaris' and in two parts. As a hymn-tune, and in four parts, it is to be found in Vol. II. of the Rev. Ralph Harrison's 'Sacred Harmony,' published in 1791, where it is headed 'Melcombe. L.M. ♯.' It probably derived its name from Melcombe Regis, the Northern portion of Weymouth, which rapidly rose into repute through the frequent visits of King George III., dating from 1789.

Although we have traced the tune back to 1782, it may have been in existence still earlier. Perhaps some of our readers may make another Melcombe discovery which may go even 'one better' than Mr. Coghlan's 'Essay' of 118 years ago.

LOST! FINAL CONSONANTS.

That witty divine, the Rev. Rowland Hill, was wont to be thankful for the aspirate: 'were it not for that,' he remarked, 'I should have been ill all my life.' With the general spread of education there seems to be less likelihood of poor letter H being badly treated as time goes on. But what of final consonants, especially in singing? Some such question strongly suggested itself to us during the past month when attending a service in a world-famed parish church in 'the heart of England.' In listening to the rendering thereof one could not help recalling Shakespeare's line,

An old abusing of God's patience and the King's English.

The reason was not far to seek. The finals of such words as 'God,' 'Lord,' 'Ghost,' 'Christ,' 'world' were sadly maltreated. But this was by no means an isolated experience. Such instances of vocal imperfections could be multiplied indefinitely up and down the country, so common and apparently so unobserved and unchecked is the fault. While by no means depreciating the searching examinations of the Royal College of Organists, we are strongly of opinion that the diploma of Fellowship needs to be considerably strengthened in its choirmastership qualification. The paramount duty of an organist and choirmaster is to cause the choral portion of the service to be rendered in a devout, intelligent, and efficient manner; the performance of Bach's Fugues should take a secondary place.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' EXAMINATIONS.

THE following are the questions—apart from the strictly musical tests that had to be worked—which were set at the last examinations of the Royal College of Organists. It will be observed that these questions contain no reference whatever to choir-training; and it is a question whether any one of them can be said to have much practical bearing upon the duties of an organist, and, more especially, of a choirmaster of a church.

EXAMINATION FOR ASSOCIATESHIP.

Candidates should answer (as briefly as possible) three of the following questions, selecting one, and one only, from each group.

1. What is the difference between a Plagal and an Authentic melody?
2. Explain the rhythm of a 'short measure' Hymn.
3. What is the essential difference between the ancient modes and the scales in present use?

---

4. What were (a) short octaves, (b) organ beaters, (c) mounted cornets?
5. Mention anything you know about Snetzler, Jordan, Byfield, and Coll.
6. State what you know about the introduction of the C organ into England.

---

7. Why does a stopped pipe give a hollow sound compared with the sound of an open pipe?
8. Why does a major seventh sound more dissonant than a major second?
9. Why should students of music study the elements of Acoustics?

EXAMINATION FOR FELLOWSHIP.

Candidates should answer (as briefly as possible) three of the following questions, selecting one, and one only, from each group.

1. Give a list of the principal English Church composers from Tallis to Wesley, in chronological order.
2. When were fully written accompaniments (instead of figured bass) first introduced into England? and by whom?
3. Give the approximate date of the complete transformation of the whole system of Tonality.
4. Upon what does the tone of a Reed Pipe mostly depend?
5. Does a Flute Pipe of 'small scale' require to be longer or shorter than one of 'large scale,' producing a note of the same pitch?
6. From what forms of musical compositions are the modern Sonata and Symphony evolved?

---

7. What influence had the Miracle Play on the progress of music?
8. Name Symphonies in which deviation from the customary form of the last movement has been made.
9. To what has the word 'Melodrama' been applied? In which of his works did Mendelssohn use the term?

AN EARLY ORGAN FOR BARBADOES.

In turning over some files of old London newspapers recently we came across the following interesting paragraph in the London Post of October 2-4, 1699:—

A new Organ is set up in the Banquetting-house Chappel, with a Dial in the middle of it, this being the first of that make; the other is packt up in Boxes there, in order to be sent to Barbadoes.

Is there any reader of THE MUSICAL TIMES in that far away West Indian island who can furnish any further information about this old instrument that was 'packt up in Boxes' at Whitehall?

THREE interesting historical organ recitals, representing the English, French, and German schools, were given by Dr. Alan Gray in Trinity College Chapel during the University Extension Summer Meeting recently held at Cambridge. We give the programme of the 'English School' selection.

ENGLISH SCHOOL.

1.	(a) Pavane, "The Earl of Salisbury"	William Byrd, 1538-1623.
	(b) Minuet	Thomas Arne, 1710-1778.
2.	Voluntary in D minor	H. Purcell, 1658-1695.
3.	Overture in C minor	Thos. Adams, 1786-1858.
4.	Voluntary	S. Wesley, 1766-1837.
5.	Air with variations	H. Smart, 1813-1879.
6.	Movement in F	S. S. Wesley, 1810-1876.
7.	Sonata in F, No. 3	Alan Gray, 1855—

MR. ROGER ASCHAM continues to give, on Sunday evenings, his Municipal concerts (so-called) at Port Elizabeth, which are really organ recitals with vocal and other instrumental solos. These Natal music-makings are offered free to all those who care to spend a pleasant hour in the Feather Market Hall.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Canterbury Cathedral, by Mr. H. C. Perrin, who played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A; Glasgow Cathedral, by Mr. Herbert Walton, who played Horatio Parker's Scherzo in D minor; Framlingham College, by Mr. R. S. Barnicott; Holy Trinity Church, Scarborough, by Mr. R. J. Pitcher; Pleck Church, Walsall, by Mr. J. Flint; St. Michael's Church, Coventry, by Mr. Walter Hoyle; Holy Trinity Church, Margate, by Mr. John E. Campbell, who played Smart's Andante in F; St. David's Cathedral, by Mr. W. H. Harris, who played Best's Air with Variations, Mr. Albert N. Bulmer, who played Smart's Air with Variations, and Mr. Herbert C. Morris (organist of the Cathedral), who played Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor; St. Paul's Church, Covent Garden, by Mr. Sidney A. Mosdell, who played Silas's Fantasia on 'St. Anne's' tune, and Mr. P. Tottenham Lucas, who played Bach's Fantasia in G; St. Edmund's Church, Hunstanton, by Mr. E. E. Chasteney, who played Merkel's Fantasia and Fugue in A minor; St. Clement's Church, Ilford Park, by Mr. Alfred H. Allen who played Brosig's Fantasia (Op. 10); Parish Church, Leigh (Kent), by Mr. George S. Evans, who played Stainer's Prelude and Fughetta in C; St. Cynbryd's Church, Llanddulas, by Mr. Ernest H. Smith; Union Chapel, Hunstanton, by Miss May Cliff and Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe; Cartmel Priory Church, by Mr. George Rathbone, who played Elgar's Triumphal March from 'Caractacus,' Miss Wakefield contributing two songs by Coleridge-Taylor; Parish Church, Lowestoft, by Mr. H. D. Flowers, with violin and violoncello solos played by Messrs. Henry and Percy Such; Emmanuel Church, Margate, by Mr. H. A. Grant; St. Bee's Priory Church, by Mr. F. J. Livesey, who played Best's Fantasia (No. 1 of Six Concert Pieces); and St. Mary's Parish Church, Broughton (opening of new organ), by Mr. S. Herbert March.

ORGANIST AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Arthur R. W. Scott, Norwood (Middlesex) Parish Church.

Mr. G. F. Vincent, St. Michael's Church, Cornhill.

Mr. W. S. Woods, Mossely Hill Parish Church, Liverpool.

Mr. F. W. Wadely, organ scholar of Selwyn College, Cambridge.

Mr. Charles H. Nutton, Parish Church, Brompton, Cumberland.

Mr. John Mactaggart, Darlington Place, United Presbyterian Church, Ayr.

Mr. Herbert E. Williams, Emmanuel Congregational Church, Dulwich.

Mr. Percy Lawson, Parish Church of Edward the Confessor, Romford.

Mr. Frank Wrigley, St. Michael's Church, Southfields.

Mr. J. S. Buxton (tenor), Southwell Cathedral Choir.

REVIEWS.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Three Kyries and Sevenfold Amen. By Arthur E. Godfrey.

Benedictus in F. By Edwin H. Lemare.

(Novello's Parish Choir Book. Nos. 430 to 432.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

There are still a large number of churches where the only portions of the Communion Service that are sung are the responses to the Commandments. The custom is not very rational, but organists, who have to adapt themselves to those circumstances, may be recommended to adopt Mr. Godfrey's settings. They are simple and medodious, and the third arrangement acquires distinctiveness by the melody being given to the basses.

The same composer's 'Sevenfold Amen' will be found a worthy companion to the familiar one by Sir John Stainer, for which it provides an admirable alternative. It is in the key of G and is printed in convenient form on a card.

Mr. E. H. Lemare is one of our most accomplished and talented church musicians and his Benedictus in F well sustains his reputation. It is of festival character, but will not by any means be found beyond the abilities of an ordinary well-trained choir. Verses 5 and 6 are set for the tenors in unison, and the two following verses in similar manner for the sopranos. The Gloria opens in five parts fugally, and leads up to an impressive ending. The organ accompaniment is simple but effective and admirably supports the voices.

SONGS.

Chieftain of Tyrconnell. Words by Alfred Perceval Graves. Music arranged by C. Villiers Stanford.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The 'Chieftain of Tyrconnell' is described as 'A woman's lament,' and it is one in which the tragedy of life speaks with romantic intensity. This is greatly intensified by the music. That this should be so will be assumed by those who know Dr. Stanford's felicity in dealing with Irish ballads, and in this instance he has provided contralto vocalists with a fine and remarkably impressive song.

ORGAN MUSIC.

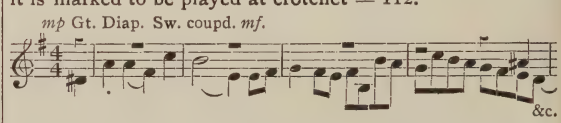
Twelve Pieces for the Organ. Book II. By J. Stainer.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The first instalment (six pieces) of this interesting contribution to the literature of the organ was noticed in these columns in January, 1898. Since then Sir John Stainer has visited the sunny South of Italy and the Riviera, as certain 'dates' to some of these compositions testify. The first, written at Florence, is an 'Andante pathétique,' in E; but it is not hyper-solemn and it has the merit of being melodious and musicianly withal. This and the other slow movements in the collection are of the type of those extempore voluntaries which Sir John used so often to play at St. Paul's Cathedral, to the delight of those who listened to them.

The next is a home production, as it is dated 'Oxford, 1898.' The title, 'Præludium Pastorale (super gamut descendens),' speaks for itself. The gamut descendens is the scale of C given to the pedals. It starts from the upper C of the pedal board and very cautiously descends, throughout a compass of two octaves, to its lowest note, the operation occupying seventy-four bars of 6-4 time. The superstructure of this 'down, down, down' progression is highly ingenious, and the entire movement bears upon it the stamp of marked originality.

'Mentone, January, 1899,' was the birthplace of 'A Church Prelude' in E flat. This is not only a well developed movement, full of contrasts and showing the hand of the practical organist, but it is the handiwork of the thoughtful musician who has something to say and the ability to express himself in an acceptable manner. An 'Introduction and Fughetta'—without which no collection of organ pieces would seem to be complete—is also a Riviera production. Here is the subject of the Fughetta, somewhat skittish, perhaps, in its Mentonity, as it is marked to be played at crotchet = 112.



The Fantasia which follows needs an adequate organ to do it full justice. It opens with an Allegro, in which agile quavers are strongly in evidence, to which succeeds a charming little Andante in A flat, whose only demerit is its apparent brevity. But our composer has by no means done with its material. He employs the various phrases of the Andante in the last movement—which is brimful of contrapuntal devices—treating them in an exceedingly clever and highly exciting manner. A very effective pedal solo prepares the way for a stately re-entry of the main theme and its final triumphant presentation.

The concluding number, a 'Finale alla marcia,' opens with this dignified procession of chords—

Thereupon follows a moderato maestoso, with plenty of work in the pedals, to which succeeds an Allegro con brio, very semiquaverishly inclined. After a return to the tempo primo, a repetition of the opening chords brings the piece and these pieces to a worthy termination.

In looking through these organ compositions by a distinguished performer on the instrument, the thought naturally arises, Why do not the names of native composers figure more largely in organ-recital programmes? A number of such programmes pass through our hands month by month, and we frequently notice that in many of them not a single English (or British) name appears. This should not be.

VOCAL PART-MUSIC.

It comes from the misty ages. By E. Elgar.
England, glorious England. By G. F. Huntley.
The Clarion Sounds. ('The Romance of the Roses.') By Oliver King.
(Novello's Octavo Choruses. Nos. 777, 779 and 780.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The above compositions are peculiarly appropriate to passing events. Mr. Elgar's chorus is the epilogue from the 'Banner of St. George,' and is a stirring choral march, in which the pulse of patriotism beats strong. It is also excellent music—music that, if well rendered, would rouse the spirit of enthusiasm in any audience.

'England, glorious England,' is an excerpt from Mr. G. F. Huntley's cantata 'Victoria,' and sings the praises of our 'right little, tight little Island' with jubilant elation, the angels being asked to lend assistance. Need anything more be said?

It is scarcely necessary to describe the character of Mr. Oliver King's composition. Naturally when 'the clarion sounds, the charger bounds,' and the rest can be left to the intelligence of the reader. In this case the 'charger bounds' in polonaise rhythm, and goes 'away, away, while trumpets bray' with all the vigour of the god of war.

MUSICAL LITERATURE.

Organ Construction. By J. W. Hinton.

[The Composers' and Authors' Press, Ltd.]

In the preparation of this book the object of the author has been twofold: (1) 'To state concisely the main principles of organ-building; and (2) to assist organ students, organists, and candidates for diplomas and certificates.' This he does in a series of seven chapters, in addition to a slight historical introduction and an appendix. The practical nature of the volume is unquestionable. Dr. Hinton treats of organ stops (with their ridiculous Tower of Babel nomenclature), tuning, new organs and reconstructions, scales of various stops, and so on. Fourteen plates, as well as eighteen illustrations in the text, are useful aids in grasping the contents of the letterpress, which, of necessity, is more or less technical in its subject-matter. One chapter is devoted to the questions on organ construction set in the examination papers of the Royal College of Organists from 1888-97. These interrogatories are answered by Dr. Hinton, and to intending candidates the usefulness of the replies is obvious. We notice that the author gives the following reason for not furnishing a reply to one of these Royal College of Organists' questions. To do so 'would require at least two pages of very involved explanation, together with a diagram, and could be of no service to students.' Examiners, please note. One of the diagrams is that of a propped-up tree, having as its roots '32 and 16,' its trunk 'diapasons 8 feet,' its branches harmonic-flute, clarabella, &c., the timber supports being '12th,' '19th,' and '26th.' All the branches are in foliage, except the voix céleste, which, in its twin twig delineation, has a withered and woe-begone appearance. The 'reeds' stump growing by the side of the full-leafed tree reminds one of a scarecrow. The book is one that will prove very useful in many an organist's library. We notice (p. 5) that Dr. Hinton gives the name of the clockmaker to whom the introduction of inverted ribs is assigned as 'Cummins, or Commins': it should be Cumming; also (p. 100) that the birth year of the late Dr. Gauntlett is given as 1806, instead of 1805. There is a good index.

The Pianist's A B C Primer and Guide. By W. H. Webbe.

[Forsyth Brothers.]

Apart from its merits and demerits, this book claims attention by reason of its being a product of Greater Britain. The author is, we believe, a professional musician in practice at Auckland, New Zealand, and this volume certainly speaks volumes for his industry and patient toil. The 727 pages practically form an encyclopædia of pianoforte teaching, and it is but bare justice to the compiler to state that he has produced a work of distinct value as a book of reference.

Within the limits at our disposal it is impossible to give a detailed notice of the contents of this 'A B C.' But as giving some idea of its scope we may mention a few of the headings of the twenty-eight chapters, including the appendix:—General faults in pianoforte playing, the art of practising, the pedals, sight reading, &c., hints to teachers, the pianoforte, musical history, some music to play, musical journals, and books for musicians, in addition to several chapters on pianoforte technique and the theory of music. Not the least valuable aid that can be rendered to a teacher is a list of suitable teaching pieces. In the section headed 'What music to play,' Mr. Webbe devotes thirty-three pages to titles of tutors and technical studies, and seventy-eight to graded lists of pieces. This is an excellent feature. The selection is, however, too large by reason of the inclusion of several pieces that can scarcely be regarded as desirable to give to pupils, whose artistic tastes ought to be carefully formed and nurtured. This duty is one of the teacher's greatest responsibilities, and the selection of artistic music is one of its most important features. The doctrine of the evolution of the great stave of eleven lines from the two five-line staves, plus an extra line, is suggestive of topsy-turvyism: it should, of course, be the other way about, or some teachers might be misled. But the shortcomings of Mr. Webbe's book—which may be rectified in another edition—should not blind us to the many excellent points of this industriously compiled manual.

Duality of Voice and Outline of Original Research. By Emil Sutro.

[New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons.]

In spite of a hardihood born of a diligent study of many modern theories of voice production, we confess to feeling staggered on reading this astonishing book. The author has persuaded himself that by dint of incessant efforts at physical introspection he has acquired the capacity to literally see inside himself, and he claims to have discovered that the voice is made not merely by the lungs and larynx, but that 'the original source of tone production has its location in various vessels of the viscera—in the lungs, the kidneys, and the bladder for the most part' (p. 46). These organs act through the œsophagus, and the tongue acts as a vocal cord or lip in fixing the pitch. The tone is also produced by the lungs viâ the trachea and vocal cords, the two processes uniting in the mouth and constituting the 'duality of voice.' Mr. Sutro naturally considers this discovery one of the most remarkable ever made by mankind and he foresees wonderful developments. So impressed is he with the mysterious nature of his achievements that he has sometimes doubted whether a higher power intended such matters to become known, and, therefore, whether he had a right to go on with his investigations! It is impossible here to discuss the innumerable and complex questions raised by the book. We must be content to indicate its principal contention. The author's earnestness and belief are unmistakable. The style of the writing is discursive to the irritating point, but when all is said on that score there is enough in the book to stimulate thought on many interesting matters connected with utterance and speech generally.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Festival Choral Society held its annual meeting at the Midland Institute, on July 25, when Dr. George Robertson Sinclair was unanimously elected conductor, in succession to the late Dr. Swinnerton Heap. The concert scheme for the forthcoming season was presented, the works to be performed being Gounod's 'Redemption' and 'Faust,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Trilogy, and Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri.' Mr. A. J. Cotton, the Society's able accompanist, was appointed assistant chorus-master, to act in Dr. Sinclair's absence. Feeling allusion was made to the loss the Society had sustained by the lamented death of Dr. Heap.

The Festival chorus re-assembled, after a short vacation, on the 20th ult. Considerable progress has already been made in the choral preparations, and at this date Mr. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' was taken in hand. Mr. Stockley prefaced the rehearsal with a few remarks on the early career of Mr. Elgar as a composer. It was at one of his (Mr. Stockley's) concerts in 1883 that Mr. Elgar, then a violinist in Mr. Stockley's orchestra, was first represented in Birmingham as a composer.

The City Choral Society, encouraged by the success of its concerts last season, proposes to give three more next winter. The works to be brought forward are Stanford's 'Revenge,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and Rossini's 'Messe Solennelle,' with miscellaneous selections to complete each programme.

The Midland Musical Society and the Choral Union intend to perform Gounod's 'Redemption' and Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.'

MUSIC IN WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On July 23 the combined forces of the Royal Rhondda Male Voice Choir (conductor, Mr. T. Stephens), the Barry Male Voice Choir (conductor, Mr. D. Farr), and the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir (conducted by Mrs. Novello Davies) competed at the Paris Exhibition and were awarded its 'highest honours,' in the form of crowns, medals, and certificates, by M. Saint-Saëns and his co-jurors. The choirs also gave a concert at the Trocadero.

On July 25 a choral festival for the rural deanery of Arwystl was held in the Parish Church, Llangurig, Montgomeryshire, the Lord Bishop of the diocese, that of Bangor, being present. In addition to hymn-tunes and chants, the musical services included Sir Hubert Parry's Te Deum in D and Goss's anthem 'The glory of the Lord.' The Rev. W. D. Roberts, Llanidloes, conducted, Miss Marshall, of the same town, acting as organist. The music selected and the manner of performance were considerably higher than that which usually prevails at country festivals.

A memorial window to the late Mr. F. P. Atkins has been placed in St. John's Parish Church, Cardiff, where the deceased musician had filled the post of organist and choirmaster for thirty-five years. One of Mr. Atkins's anthems, 'Man goeth forth to his work,' was sung on the occasion. His son, Mr. Ivor Atkins, is organist of Worcester Cathedral.

A number of Eisteddfodau were held, as usual, on the August Bank Holiday, the most important being the annual and long-established meeting at Corwen, North Wales. In the chief choral competition, 'Lift up your heads' (Handel) and 'Sleep, my Beloved' (J. H. Roberts), Cefnmawr Choir took first and Talke (Staffordshire) second honours. The Festiniog and Llangollen Male Voice Choirs were declared equal in Mr. Maldwyn Price's 'Crossing the Plain,' and Cefnmawr Ladies' Choir best in Gwilym Gwent's 'Summer' (arranged by Mr. Emlyn Evans). Mr. W. T. Samuel, Cardiff, discharged the duties of adjudicator. In the evening a concert was held at which the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir, conducted by Mrs. Novello Davies, took part.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Athens.—A new opera, entitled 'The Two Brothers,' by the talented Greek composer, L. Lavranga, was brought out, with great success, at the Royal Theatre last month. The young musician is now engaged upon a second and more ambitious operatic score.

Bayreuth.—The scheme for next year's representations at the Festspiel-Haus has now been definitely arranged. There will be two performances of the 'Nibelungen' tetralogy, five of 'Der fliegende Holländer,' and seven of 'Parsifal.' Several highly promising young singers are now being trained at Bayreuth, with a view to their taking part in the performances. The conductorship is to be divided between Dr. Richter and Herr Siegfried Wagner.

Berlin.—A music-making in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the death of J. S. Bach took place on July 25, at the Marienkirche, which was completely filled. The performances, consisting entirely of compositions by Bach, included the Toccata in F, the Chromatic Fantasia, a number of airs from the cantatas, excerpts from the B minor Mass, and other choral numbers. Professor Dienel was the conductor.——Under the style of 'Berliner Tonkünstler Orchester,' a new orchestral society has been formed, under the direction of Herren C. Gleitz and F. von Blon, by which symphony concerts will be given twice a week during the season.——It is stated that Lady Hallé, the eminent violinist, has accepted a professorship at the Stern'sche Conservatorium, where she will conduct an advanced class for violin playing.

Cologne.—Amongst the special performances given, as usual, towards the end of the academical year by pupils of the Conservatorium, considerable interest was created by the production of a new opera in one act, entitled 'Alexander,' the work of C. Ramrath, a former pupil of the Institution.——At a recent concert of the Musikalische Gesellschaft, a new pianoforte concerto by Herr Otto Neitzel was introduced for the first time, by the composer, to a numerous audience, and received with much favour.

Florence.—The competition opened last year by the Royal Musical Academy, for a five-part setting, with organ accompaniment, of the forty-sixth Psalm, has resulted in the first prize being awarded to the young Maëstro Baldi Zenoni, of Venice.

Leipzig.—Dr. O. Goebler, an excellent musician, has been appointed to the conductorship of the well-known academical choral society 'Arion,' which post had been vacant for some time.——An autograph cantata by J. S. Bach has recently been acquired by the authorities of the Municipal library for the sum of 3,000 marks, its former possessor, Fräulein Karthaus, having handed the proceeds to the University Students' Fund in connection with St. Thomas's School, where Bach occupied the post of cantor.

Lisbon.—A Society devoted to the performance of oratorios and other important choral works has been founded under the direction of Signor Alberto Sarti, and has already rendered a good account of itself by the performance of Perosi's 'Lazarus.' It is the only institution of its kind in the Portuguese capital.

Munich.—The newly created Chair for Musical Science in connection with the University has been filled by the appointment of Dr. Adolf Sandberger, of Vienna.

Orange (France).—The interesting special performances which took place, on the 11th and 12th ult., at the Antique Theatre, consisted of the 'Pseudolus,' one of Plautus's comedies, and the 'Alceste,' of Euripides (the latter with Gluck's music, adapted for the purpose), both interpreted by the artists of the Théâtre Français, on the first day; while on the second day, Gluck's 'Iphigénie en Tauride' was given by the members of the Paris Opéra, with Mdlle. Halto in the title-part, M. Jéhin conducting the combined Lamoureux and Colonne orchestras.

Paris.—Amongst interesting concert performances in connection with the Great Exhibition last month were those given by the Philharmonic Orchestra, of Helsingfors, under the direction of Herr Kajanus. The programmes consisted entirely of works by Finnish composers, many of them highly characteristic and admirably executed by the orchestra.——M. Oscar Nedbal, the excellent viola player of the well-known Bohemian Quartet, gave two concerts, with the Colonne orchestra, of Bohemian music. The works performed included Smetana's symphonic poem, 'Vltava'; Dvorák's symphony, 'From the New World'; and an orchestral composition, 'Frühlings Abend,' by Zdenko Fibich.——At the Colombes Cemetery a monument erected over the grave of Henri Litolff, who was formerly well known as a highly popular pianist and composer, was recently unveiled.

Rome.—Verdi has been officially requested to compose a Requiem Mass to the memory of the ill-fated King Humbert. Should the veteran Maëstro find himself unable to accede to the request, the work will most likely be undertaken by Mascagni.

Ruhla.—A monument was unveiled, on July 22, in the picturesque surroundings of the so-called 'Dichterhain,' to the late Friedrich Lux, the famous Mayence organist and composer, who was born at Ruhla in 1820.

St. Petersburg.—The well known Russian composer, M. Soloviev, who has just completed the thirtieth year of his artistic career, has been granted a pension of 1,500 roubles by the Emperor, in recognition of his services to the national art.——A monument has been erected in the Alexander Gardens to Michael Glinka, the composer of the opera 'Life for the Czar.'

Stuttgart.—In connection with the annual meeting of the Gustav Adolph Stiftung, a most successful performance was given last month of Max Bruch's new oratorio 'Gustavus Adolphus,' by the Singverein, which had been reinforced for the occasion by several church choirs. Professor Seyffardt conducted, Herr Georg Nack playing the important organ part. Much enthusiasm was displayed by the audience, who, on the final chorale, 'Ein feste Burg,' being commenced, rose en masse and joined in singing the fine old tune.

The Hague.—The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under the conductorship of Capellmeister Rebiceck, is now giving its annual series of concerts at Scheveningen with very great success. Amongst the works so far produced by this admirable body of instrumentalists, those by Dvorák and Tschaïkowsky appeared to be most in favour with the distinctly international audiences who attended the concerts.

Tübingen.—Anton Bruckner's stupendous Mass in F minor was produced (for the first time in Germany) last month by the Academical Gesang-Verein, under the direction of Professor Kauffmann. The noble work, which produced a great impression upon a numerous audience, will doubtless be taken up ere long by other choral societies in the Fatherland.

Vienna.—Herr Alexander von Zemlinsky, the talented Viennese composer, whose fairy opera 'Once upon a time' achieved such a great success at the Imperial Opera during last season, has been appointed musical director of the Carl Theater.

Weimar.—A highly interesting and impressive performance was given, on July 31, before an invited audience, by the eminent pianists MM. Busoni and V. da Motta, to commemorate the fourteenth anniversary of the death of Franz Liszt, their revered teacher and friend. Amongst the works performed by these artists were the variations, by Liszt, on Bach's 'Weinen, Klagen'; the fantasia and fugue on the chorale 'Ad nos ad salutarem undam'; as well as arrangements for two pianofortes of Liszt's 'Faust' and of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

OBITUARY.

We regret having to place on record the sudden death, the result of an apoplectic stroke, of Dr. James Taylor, which took place at his residence, Threllfall, Banbury Road, Oxford, on the 1st ult. The only son of Mr. William Taylor, of Gloucester, Dr. Taylor was born in that city in 1833. He received his first tuition in music from Mr. G. W. Morgan, who was deputy-organist to John Amott, the Cathedral organist. At the age of seventeen he became organist of the Church of St. Mary-le-Crypt, Gloucester. The great event in his life came in 1865, when he was appointed organist of New College, Oxford, which post he held with much distinction to the time of his lamented death. He took the degree of Bachelor in Music at Oxford in 1873, and in 1894 he, with Sir Walter Parratt, received the rare distinction of being created Doctor in Music, honoris causâ, by the University. Upon the removal of Sir John Stainer to London, Dr. Taylor was appointed organist to the University and this post also he held up to the time of his death. For twenty-two years he conducted the Philharmonic Society in Oxford with great ability and he was an old member of the Musical Club. Not only was he an able teacher of music, but he was a remarkably fine pianoforte player. A man of fine musical taste, sensitive and modest, he lived a quiet life of devotion to the art he loved so well. Dr. Taylor will be greatly missed not only by his own college, but in the University with which he had been so long connected and where he was greatly esteemed.

Julius Zeller, the well-known Viennese composer, on the 4th ult., at Mürzzuschlag, in Styria, at the age of sixty-eight. Amongst his most successful compositions are a symphonic poem, 'Melusine,' and the highly popular choral work entitled 'In the Highlands.'

The death took place, on the 16th ult., at his residence at Harlesden, of Edward Lawrence Hime, who was formerly known as a composer of songs and a tenor vocalist. Mr. Hime was born at Liverpool, on July 26, 1823.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At Trinity College, London, the following scholarships, tenable for three years, and exhibitions, tenable for one year, have been awarded:—Henry Smart Organ Scholarship, Ralph Richardson Jones; Violin Scholarship, Israel Goldwater; Vocal Scholarship, Edith Withecombe; Pianoforte Scholarship, Queenie Letitia Dando; Benedict Pianoforte Exhibition, Margaret Evelyn Withycombe; Sims Reeves Vocal Exhibition, Charles William Gardner; and Violin Exhibition, Frank Williams Greenfield.

Mr. G. F. Vincent, upon his removal from Sunderland to take up his duties as organist of St. Michael's, Cornhill, has been the gratified recipient of several tangible tokens of the esteem in which he is held in the Northern town. These tributes were from the congregation of St. Thomas's Church, Sunderland, the choir of the same church, the Amateur Operatic Society, and the singing class of Claremont House School.

Among the forthcoming publications of the Clarendon Press is 'The Polyphonic Period of Music,' by Professor H. E. Wooldridge.

Dr. W. E. Thomas (late of Bournemouth) has been appointed Professor of Music at Auckland University, New Zealand.

Mr. Joseph Ivimey has been appointed a Professor of the Violin at the Guildhall School of Music.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GRAVE OF DR. S. S. WESLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—Those who, like myself, have perused the excellent biography of S. S. Wesley which appeared recently in The Musical Times, will be interested to hear of a visit which I have lately made to the old cemetery at Exeter, in order to view the grave of that great musical genius. After a prolonged search in that singularly mountainous grave-yard, I at last discovered the grave, which is situated in the higher part of the cemetery, near the path which follows the boundary wall. I was sorry to see that the stone is in great need of being cleaned, and the inscription requires to be re-cut and freshly painted.

Is it not a pity that the grave of so distinguished a musician should be suffered to fall into such a state of decay? I believe that the stone could be thoroughly renovated at a very small cost. It is, at any rate, the duty of English musicians to see that this is efficiently and promptly done.—Yours truly,

John D. Kenwood.

Broad Clyst, near Exeter,
August 12, 1900.

[We shall be very glad to receive any subscriptions that our readers may send for the renovation of the distinguished composer's grave, and to see that the work is satisfactorily done, subject to the consent and approval of the surviving members of Dr. Wesley's family.—Ed., M.T.]

'BLESSED BE THE GOD AND FATHER.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—Now that attention has been called to this anthem, may I be permitted to reiterate a protest against the practice of many organists who disregard the rest at the beginning of the final chorus by adding an unauthorised chord? The composer has indicated his intention by marking that rest 'silent,' according to the folio score. After the electrical chord at the close of the previous movement, there ensues this significant silence, and then the voices enter alone on the stupendous phrase which follows. This is grievously marred by any intrusion of the organ, even if only of a pedal note. Yet I have lately heard this done, among others, in a London church which possesses a choir of supreme excellence. Of course the reply is that such a chord or note is necessary in order to secure a prompt attack by the voices. But it appears that Dr. Wesley refused to acknowledge this necessity, and we can imagine the scorn with which he would have repudiated such a plea. Nor is there any such necessity in the case of a well-trained choir. Experto crede, I can cite the testimony of a quarter of a century's rendering of the anthem here.

Yours truly,

Ardingly College, A. L. Lewington.
August 14, 1900.

[We heartily endorse the protest of our correspondent.—Ed., M.T.]

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Coventry.—The Bank holiday morning recitals, inaugurated at Eastertide at Holy Trinity Church, appear to meet a long-felt want. On the 6th ult. there was a crowded congregation, when Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of the church, included the following pieces in his programme: Bach's Grand Fugue in C major, Guilmant's Sonata in D minor, Schubert's Serenade, Schumann's Allegretto in B minor, Salomé's Cantilena and Grand Chœur in A, and Freyer's Fantasia on the Russian National Anthem. In this comprehensive scheme the fine four-manual organ (recently modernised by Messrs. Hill and Son at a cost of upwards of £2,000) was heard to great advantage. Vocal solos were contributed by Mr. S. E. Loasby (alto) and Master H. Jones, of the Holy Trinity choir.

Durban.—The Orchestral Society gave a very successful concert on June 30, when the programme included Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' Overture and Moszkowski's Mazurka. Mr. Otto von Booth was the soloist in De Bériot's Seventh Violin Concerto. Mr. J. Frank Proudman conducted.

Durham.—The Festival of North-Eastern choirs held alternately at Ripon, York, and Durham took place in the Cathedral, on July 26, under the able direction of Professor Armes, when the work performed was Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The choral forces, gathered from the counties of Durham and York (and including the Cathedral choirs of Durham, Ripon, Wakefield, and York), numbered over 500 voices, and there was a complete orchestra of fifty-seven performers, led by Mr. Arthur Wallerstein and Mr. E. Laws. The service preceding the oratorio included the conductor's anthem, 'I was glad when they said unto me' and Smart's Service in E flat, scored for orchestra by Sir George Martin. The solos were effectively sung by members of the Cathedral choirs named above, and the choruses received full justice from the combined choirs. The service was concluded with Handel's Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio.

Invercargill (New Zealand).—The Musical Union commenced its series of concerts for the winter season at the Theatre Royal, on June 29. The orchestral pieces included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' and Thomas's 'Raymond' Overtures, the ballet music from Massenet's 'Herodiade,' the same composer's 'Le Dernier sommeil de la Vièrge,' and selections from 'La Traviata' and 'Lohengrin.' The vocalists were Mrs. R. H. Hogg and Mr. J. E. Taylor.

Llandudno.—The improvement which has taken place of recent years in the class of music performed at our fashionable watering-places has been most marked, and some of the local orchestras, notably those at Bournemouth (Mr. Dan Godfrey), at New Brighton (Mr. Granville Bantock), at Southsea (Mr. G. Miller), and at Eastbourne (Mr. Norfolk Megone), have already received due recognition in these columns. The efforts of the bandmaster at Llandudno Pier, Mr. A. E. Bartle, now call for notice; and the mere recapitulation of the programmes for the afternoon and evening of the 3rd ult. will suffice to indicate the excellence of the concerts under his direction. The programmes referred to included Imperial March, Gavotte, and Serenade Mauresque (Elgar); Overture, 'Much Ado about Nothing' and Masque, 'As you like it' (German); Characteristic Waltzes and Ballade in A minor (Coleridge-Taylor); 'Little Minister' Dances and Rhapsodie on Scotch Airs (Mackenzie); Maypole Dance (John E. West); and Overture di Ballo and Selection from the 'Gondoliers' (Sullivan). It cannot be said that these British 'prophets' are 'without honour' in their own country. All honour, therefore, to Mr. Bartle and his excellent orchestra.

Strabane (Co. Tyrone).—An organ and vocal recital was given in St. Saviour's Church, Sion Mills, on the 7th ult. The selections on the organ included 'Andante religioso' (Guilmant), played by Miss G. Herdman, the organist of the church, and 'Toccata' (D'Evry), played by Mr. A. C. Thompson. The vocalists were Mrs. Unsworth, Mrs. Sherwin, Master Dick Watson, Mr. John Watson, and Mr. J. C. Herdman. Miss G. Herdman was an excellent accompanist.

Totnes.—The annual festival of choirs connected with the Moreton and Totnes Deaneries took place on July 31, in Totnes Parish Church. Eleven choirs, representing about 260 choristers, assisted in the rendering of music taken from this year's festival book, issued by the Exeter Diocesan Choral Association. The organ was supplemented by a string orchestra, with Miss Annie S. Holman as principal, and a quartet of brass instruments, the latter being most effective in certain portions of the music. Under the conductorship of Mr. Harold O. Jones, organist and choirmaster of Ashburton Parish Church, an excellent performance was secured. Mr. Herbert Worth, organist of Totnes Parish Church, presided at the organ, and the Rev. T. J. Yarde, as usual, undertook the secretarial duties. It should be added that a short recital of music preceded the service, which included Gounod's 'Meditation,' performed by Mr. Worth (organ), Miss Holman (violin), and Miss B. Kellock (violoncello).

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. B. C.—(1) You had better address this question to the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music. (2) In regard to the slow movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2), the only possible semblance of a plagal cadence is in the coda. The late Mr. Banister designated this 'a coda in which the plagal cadence is extended.' But with all due respect to him and to the author you quote, we can only regard this semblance as an ordinary six-four chord on the tonic, which here forms the 'pedal.' Therefore, it is not a plagal cadence pure and simple. (3) As to the performance of the fugue at the examination, it is difficult, except for nervousness, to account for your shortcomings, unless your teacher has not set up a sufficiently high standard in judging your fitness. Clearness, certainty, steadiness, good tone, the individualisation of the subject, counter-subject, &c., all mixed with brains, are some of the factors that go towards the attainment of perfection in part-playing. What may be termed an intellectual grasp of the fugue may help you. To this end write it out in score, and thoroughly study it away from the pianoforte.

W. K.—(1) We do not give the names of teachers. (2) In regard to any comparison between this or that foreign Conservatoire, it is purely a matter of opinion as to their relative merits. One thing is certain: you can get excellent lessons in England; but any good master, of whatever nationality, would naturally strengthen your technique if it were necessary to do so, though, if he be a true artist, not to the extent of blunting your musical feeling.

VEGA.—Most of the words you give are not musical terms, but ordinary German words, the English equivalents of which you will find in any German-English dictionary. Schumann, in a letter written in 1834 to his friend Henrietta Voight, thus indicates that he had some poetical idea as the basis of his 'Papillons': 'I could tell you much about this if Jean Paul did not do it better. If you have a spare moment, I beg you will read the last chapter of the "Flegeljahre," where all stands in black and white up to the Riesenstiefel in F sharp minor (at the end of the "Flegeljahre" I feel as if the play were surely finished, although the curtain had not yet fallen). I must tell you that I put the words to the music, not the reverse; for else I should think it a silly proceeding. Only the last, which the play of chance formed into an answer of the first, was evoked by Jean Paul.'

V. C. J.—You might find the following numbers of Novello's Albums for Pianoforte and Stringed Instruments useful: 'Benedictus,' Mackenzie; 'Judex' ('Mors et Vita'), Gounod; and the following Marches by Mendelssohn: 'Wedding,' 'Athalie,' and 'Cornelius.' You could easily arrange a part for your cornet player, and, with a little management, the pianoforte part could be effectively played on the organ.

REBEC.—Joseph Joachim Raff was born at Lachen on the Lake of Zurich and in the Canton of Schwyz. But he received his early education at Wiesenstetten, in Würtemberg, the home of his parents. Thus, although he was a Swiss by the accident of birth in that country, Raff remained throughout his life a thorough German.

AMATEUR.—The 'Parsifal' performance to which you refer is probably that given by the Royal Choral Society, under the late Sir Joseph Barnby, at the Royal Albert Hall, on November 10, 1884, and repeated on the 15*th of the same month. This, of course, was a concert presentation of Wagner's last opera.*

RUSTICUS.—There would be no objection to your publishing a song of which the words are by Bret Harte providing the copyright for this country has not been assigned to an English publisher. In that case you should obtain his permission before printing the words.

LENTO.—(1) Yes, Löwe is considered to be one of the best composers of ballads. (2) Mr. Henschel's songs are published by Novello, Simrock, Breitkopf and Härtel, and Rahter. (3) Lalo's Serenade from his opera 'Le Roi d'ys' and Massenet's 'La Souhait' may be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

F. B. (Tasmania).—The melody of your tune is not at all bad, but the harmony is faulty, some of the chords being incomplete, &c. But you should be encouraged to go on with further theoretical study.

A. S. (Demerara).—We are unable to explain the similarity in the two chants you name. In all probability it is not an instance of actual plagiarism but of the nature of a chance coincidence.

A. R. A.—Purely a matter of temperament. If you feel that you are right in your rate of speed, then stick to it, predecessor or no predecessor, and thus have the courage of your convictions.

VILLAGE ORGANIST.—Thanks for your suggestion, which shall receive careful consideration.

T. D.—Bach's solo sonatas for violin and violoncello may be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

PUZZLED.—Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God,' may be sung at the following speeds: 1st movement, crotchet = 104; 2nd, quaver = 104; 3rd, crotchet = 138; but after the last movement has got well under weigh, it is better to beat two in a bar.

SUBSCRIBER.—See the answer to T. D.

HIME.—Died at his residence, Lawrence Lodge, Fairlight Avenue, Harlesden, N.W., on the 16th ult., EDWARD LAWRENCE HIME, Musical Composer, aged 77. The only intimation. Country papers, please copy.

SECOND EDITION, JUST READY.

THE HISTORY
OF MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO
"ELIJAH"
BY
F. G. EDWARDS.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

And a number of Portraits, including a hitherto unpublished one of the COMPOSER.

"Another work of distinct value to musical historians. . . . The temptation to gossip over the incidents of the first peformance has been quite successfully resisted, and the author lets Mendelssohn's own letters tell the story for the most part. . . . There are several portraits of those who took part in the original performance, and one most interesting portrait of Mendelssohn from a drawing in the possession of Mrs. Victor Benecke. The work of compiling the necessary information has been excellently done, and the publication comes as a fitting celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the production of the work."—The Times, April 16, 1896.

"Mr. Edwards's book contains, of course, much that is familiar to students of Mendelssohn, and even to the casual readers of musical biography, but the author is able to set forth no little which fairly claims attention as new. There are, for example, various letters from the composer not heretofore made public, and full of interest for those to whom the details of a great work are attractive."—Daily Telegraph, April 15, 1896.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR

FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems; some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest—and others, which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is, therefore, anticipated that in churches where an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year is obvious.

BOOK 1.

ADVENT	O King and Desire of all Nations	Stainer.
CHRISTMAS	Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Elvey.
LENT	Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake	Farrant.

GENERAL	O love the Lord	Sullivan.
,,	The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended	Woodward.
,,	Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house	Tours.
,,	Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace	Lee Williams.

BOOK 2.

ADVENT	Hosanna in the Highest	Stainer.
CHRISTMAS	Sing and rejoice	Barnby.
LENT	O Saviour of the World	Goss.
,,	Teach me, O Lord	Attwood.
,,	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate	Gounod.
EASTER	Christ is risen	Goss.
HARVEST	Great is the Lord	Steane.
GENERAL	What are these?	Stainer.
,,	O how amiable	West.
,,	O taste and see	Sullivan.
,,	The Lord is my Shepherd	Macfarren.
,,	God that madest earth and heaven	Fisher.

BOOK 3.

ADVENT	Far from their heavenly home	Woodward.
CHRISTMAS	Four Christmas Carols	Various.
LENT	Turn Thy Face from my sins	Sullivan.

RUTH

A HARVEST PASTORAL

SUITABLE FOR USE IN PLACES OF WORSHIP

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventual episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

AND HIS NINE SYMPHONIES
BY GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal Symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

 The whole of Beethoven's Symphonies will be performed at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts (Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood) on successive Fridays, commencing August 31.

UNISON CHANTS

FOR THE PSALTER

A COLLECTION OF SINGLE CHANTS

EDITED BY

EDWIN GEORGE MONK

MUS. DOC., OXON., ORGANIST AND MASTER OF THE CHOIR, YORK MINSTER, 1859-83.

THE VOICE PART—Price Eightpence. ORGAN HARMONIES—Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

Not only have small and moderately qualified Choirs been kept in view, but also particularly the Voice of the great Congregation. In order to secure this much to be desired end—Chanting of the Daily Psalms by Choir and Congregation combined—the following means are proposed:—

I. Singing in Unison (strictly speaking, Octave-singing).

II. Employment of Chants of Restricted Compass only; especially as to all Reciting-Notes.

No note lower than or higher than is employed for Recitations; these extremes being avoided as far as possible; the former occurring mostly when a subdued, the latter when a jubilant note is required. The Melodies never extend below or above such outside limits being very occasionally used, and then only for short Psalms, or portions of Psalms.

III. Provision for Change of Chant at every fresh Psalm; and also whenever, in the course of any of the longer Psalms, such change could be made to follow the significance of the Sacred Text, conduce to its clearer understanding, or enforce its teaching

IV. Suggestion for occasional Change of Instrumental Harmony as a further mode (often of much value and potency) of heightening the desired expression; or of calling attention to important divisions, and changes of subject or utterance, in cases when actual change of the voice-part seemed undesirable.

FRANK J. SAWYER, MUS.D., OXON.

(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

PRESS NOTICES OF MR. HALSEY'S WORKS:—

"Mr. Ernest Halsey has at disposal the best sources of musical expression, and while the movements are full of feeling they are also full of musical force and strength."—Musical Herald.

"Mr. Halsey shows that he not only feels but thinks; that he is acquainted with good models, and yet possesses an individuality."—Christian World.

"The composer has a vein of rich and original melody on which he draws with a liberal hand."—Norwood News.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

*UNA

SIXTH AND SEVENTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, iving or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Eleventh and Twelfth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

SEVENTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

†ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

SIX SONGS

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 37.)

1. You'll love me yet (in G minor and B minor) Robert Browning.
2. Canoe Song (in D flat and F) .. Isabella Crawford.
3. A blood-red ring hung round the moon Barry Dane.
4. Sweet evenings come and go, love (in F and B flat) George Eliot.
5. As the moon's soft splendour .. .. .. Shelley.
6. Elëanore .. .. Eric Mackay.

"The six songs by S. Coleridge-Taylor, making up the young composer's Op. 37, are one and all instinct with the high qualities that have brought him success. Warmth of feeling, characteristic phraseology, and admirable effect are all manifested in the whole group. 'You'll love me yet' is one of the best settings of Browning in existence, a 'Canoe song' has a charming figure of accompaniment, 'A blood-red ring' is strongly dramatic, 'Sweet evenings come and go' is tenderly lyrical and extremely grateful to the singer, 'As the moon's soft splendour' takes a suggestion for its accompaniment from the title of Shelley's poem, 'To a lady singing to her accompaniment on the guitar,' and the idea is most skilfully handled, while 'Elëanore' has a strong passion and a masterly treatment of climax that quite outweigh the unusual accentuation of the name."—The Times.

FIVE-PART HARMONY

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

PREFACE.

THIS little book is intended for those who, having already gained a competent knowledge of four-part harmony, desire to write with confidence in five parts.

Five-part writing is compulsory for the degree of Bachelor of Music at the principal Universities; yet even the best text-books furnish candidates with little help in respect of five-part writing.

The plan of this work is arranged in such a manner that anyone who is already well instructed in harmony may advance without the aid of a teacher.

In each Chapter a problem is proposed, and its solution is given in the Appendix (p. 28 et seq.).

The conscientious student will first deal with the problem, shutting his eyes to the solution until he has worked the thing out for himself.

He will then find it profitable to compare his result with that of the author.

This book does not claim to be exhaustive, but it contains a more complete discussion of the subject than the author has met with elsewhere.

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

HEATHER BELLS. Two-part Song	0	4

"'Heather Bells' is a charming little Spring song, with a graceful arpeggio accompaniment. So unpretentious and attractive a composition can scarcely fail to find favour with vocalists who can appreciate simple melody and pure part-writing."—Musical Times.

"This is a capital fresh part-song, and should find favour with all singing-classes in which ladies join."—The Girls' Own Paper.

"'Heather Bells' is a bright pleasing duet for female voices, words and music by Frank J. Sawyer."—Musical World.

"This is a pleasing series of four gracefully-written duets for treble voices, entitled respectively, 'Dawn,' 'Noon,' 'Twilight,' 'Night.' There is a complete contrast in the pieces, though brightness of treatment and lively melody characterise them all. The accompaniments most happily enforce the spirit of the several themes. The 'Dawn' opens tranquilly, but soon assumes a more joyous aspect; 'Noon' by the brook is charmingly dealt with; 'Twilight' is involved in mysterious sounds conveyed by the occasional use of diminished fifths with an admirable though daring effect; and 'Night' brings us into the midst of a fairy revel. The voice parts are cleverly, though spontaneously designed; and it is certain that those who take the trouble to study them will be glad for the knowledge and pleasure they will bring."—Musical Times.

YE SPOTTED SNAKES. Fairy Song and Lullaby (from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"). Two-part Song ... ... net	0	4

"This fairy song and lullaby is a simple and melodious setting of Shakespeare's well-known lyric in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.' The melody is quite of the Italian type, and the accompaniment interesting though unpretentious. Mr. Lütgen's work may be commended as a useful addition to the repertory of schools and singing-classes."—Monthly Musical Record.

"It is difficult to avoid reminiscences of the many settings of 'Ye spotted snakes'; but the composer of the one before us has not only accomplished this task, but has given us a remarkably fresh and sympathetic colouring to Shakespeare's beautiful lines. Commencing with a placid and tuneful solo, the lullaby is written in two parts, to be sung as a duet or chorus, the accompaniment being aided, when it came to be procured, by the toy instrument in imitation of the Nightingale. The song will, however, be almost equally effective with the trill upon the pianoforte."—Musical Times.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ

AND

JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B.	STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A.	DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B.	DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ..	2s. 6d.

6A.	DITTO		6B.	.. ..
	Books 1A, 2A, and 3A now ready.			Books 1B and 2B now ready. Book 3B (just published).

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout the United Kingdom and in the Colonies in both Theoretical and Practical Music. The Examinations are of two kinds, "Local Centre" and "School." The Local Centre Examinations are carried out by two Examiners chosen almost exclusively from the Staffs of the Royal Academy of Music and of the Royal College of Music. The School Examinations are conducted by one Examiner.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC.	PIANOFORTE.	DOUBLE BASS.
HARMONY AND GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	ORGAN.	HARP.
COUNTERPOINT.	VIOLIN.	WIND INSTRUMENTS.
	VIOLA.	SINGING.
	VIOLONCELLO.

The Local Centre Examinations are held Annually, in March and April. Full particulars will be found in Syllabus A, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

The School Examinations are held at three periods: (a) March—April, (b) June—July, (c) October—November. Candidates for these Examinations may be entered either by Heads of Schools or by individual Teachers. In the latter case, neither the Teacher nor the Candidate need necessarily be connected with a School. Full particulars of these Examinations, and also of the General School Examination and Class Singing Examination, will be found in Syllabus B, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

Entries for the Oct.—Nov. period will be received not later than Oct. 13.

The Board gives annually six Exhibitions tenable for two years. These Exhibitions are limited to candidates under 20 years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

The attention of Teachers and Candidates is specially drawn to the important new regulations contained in Syllabus A and B for 1901, which are now ready.

Langland's 'Piers the Plowman.'

While beyond, above them mounted,
And above their woods also,
Malvern hills, for mountains counted
Not unduly, loom a-row—
Keepers of Piers Plowman's visions, through the sunshine and the snow.[3]

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

The Malvern uplands are to be seen, not described. No appreciative mind can fail to be impressed with the bold outline, the imposing abruptness, and the verdant loveliness of these everlasting hills. Nature has left the impress of her smile on this favoured region, and hill and valley combine to produce a landscape of fascinating picturesqueness. It is a steep climb to the hilltop above Malvern Wells, but it more than repays the wayfarer who has eyes to behold and a soul to satisfy. The enjoyment of a quiet stroll along these grassy heights is greatly enhanced by the companionship of one who habitually thinks his thoughts and draws his inspirations from these elevated surroundings. He points out a noble peak once the site of a Roman encampment, and as he tells you that its thereabouts is traditionally associated with Caractacus you instinctively think, 'and thereby hangs a tale'—if not a cantata. Not far off is Wind's Point, the charming retreat of Jenny Lind, where the great singer drew her last breath. In descending from the summit, on the Worcestershire side, an exceedingly pleasant detached house is reached. It stands on the steep hillside, and from the little terrace in front of the house the view is as beautiful as its range is extensive. It begins and ends with two cities so long associated with the Three Choirs Festivals—Worcester on the left, Gloucester on the right. Between these extremes, through which the Severn flows its tranquil course, lies the vale of Evesham, where Muzio Clementi, 'the father of modern pianoforte-playing,' had his cottage and where he died. The venerable Abbey of Tewkesbury comes within the range of vision, and, on a clear day, even the historic battle-field of Edge Hill, although forty miles distant. Here, in the midst of these delightful Malvern surroundings—how welcome their tranquillity—is located the home of him who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Edward William Elgar was born at Broadheath, four miles from Worcester, June 2, 1857. His patronymic is of Saxon origin, and may be found as Aelfgar, which being interpreted means 'fairy spear.' He is the eldest surviving son of Mr. W. H. Elgar, of Worcester, and of Ann Greening, descended from a fine old yeoman stock of Weston, Herefordshire, and therefore intensely English. In the eventide of their lives Mr. and Mrs. Elgar have the satisfaction of witnessing the fame of their gifted son. A native of Dover, his father became an assistant in the music-publishing house of Messrs. Coventry and Hollier, then in Dean Street, Soho. There he used to hear Dragonetti play the pedal part of Bach's organ fugues on the double bass, and doubtless sold many copies of Dragonetti's special arrangement of the fugues for pianoforte and double bass (or violoncello), originally published by Coventry and which are now in Messrs. Novello's catalogue. In 1841 Mr. W. H. Elgar settled in Worcester and, with his brother (who was an excellent viola player and organist), started a musicselling business of his own. Mr. Frank Elgar, the composer's younger brother, is not only an excellent oboe player, but he is a born conductor. He has a complete military band, formed of civilians in Worcester, and instructs an instrumental class of about forty pupils at the Victoria Institute.

Mr. Elgar, Senior, was, however, much more of a musician than a business man. He was not only an excellent performer on the violin, but held the post of organist of St. George's Roman Catholic Church, Worcester, for the long period of thirty-seven years. At his instigation the Masses of Cherubini in D and Hummel in E flat were first heard at the Three Choirs Festival, in the orchestra of which (at Worcester) he played amongst the violins. Mozart and Beethoven were his 'dearly beloved' composers, and as his son Edward points to a portrait of Mozart on the wall of his study, he remarks: 'That is my man.' Thus the boy entered the world and was nurtured in a rarefied atmosphere of music. Who will say that he has failed to rise to the heights of so rich an inheritance?

EARLY YEARS.

Edward received some music lessons (pianoforte) at the inevitable dame school, but, like so many successful musicians, he has been almost entirely self-taught. Until his fifteenth year he received his general education at Littleton House, near Worcester As a boy he would sit by his father's side Sunday by Sunday in the organ loft of St. George's Church and would frequently extemporise the voluntaries and accompany the services. He worked through Rink, and Best's 'Organ School' entirely by himself, and read every book he could find on the theory of music. At the age of fifteen he began to learn German, with a view of going to Leipzig for the further study of music; but financial difficulties stood in the way, and thus the budding composer escaped the dogmatism of the schools. He played much of the pianoforte music of Kozeluch, Schobert, and others, and of Emanuel Bach, then not so much known as now, and gained much practical experience in reducing scores for the pianoforte.

After leaving school young Elgar entered a solicitor's office, but he remained at the desk for twelve months only, as his ambitions were set in the direction of other deeds than those associated with the law. Nevertheless this business experience has been of great value in developing those methodical habits which are so natural to him, but which so many musicians unfortunately lack. He read a great deal at this formulative period of his life. A pile of old books, shot on the floor of the loft of a stable, was a source of omnivorous attraction to the thoughtful youth. In this way he made the acquaintance of Sir Philip Sydney's 'Arcadia,' Baker's 'Chronicles,' Drayton's 'Polyolbion,' &c. He played the bassoon in a wind-instrument quintet of performers—two flutes, oboe, clarinet, and bassoon—and wrote 'lots of music for that combination.' But he by no means neglected his fiddle. He played in the orchestra of the Worcester Philharmonic Society (under the late Mr. Done), and in various orchestras in the regions round about Worcester, and made frequent appearances as a solo performer on the violin.

THE WORCESTER GLEE CLUB.

Not the least interesting feature of Elgar's picking-up period was the Worcester Glee Club. This old Society, founded so long ago as 1810, occupied a prominent place in the musical life of the city. Cathedral lay clerks and citizen amateurs week by week joined their forces in a feast of vocal harmony and right good fellowship. An additional accompaniment to these unaccompanied glees (if the suspicion of a bull may be allowed) was furnished by churchwarden pipes solemnly smoked by the senior Apollos. The proceedings always commenced with 'Glorious Apollo,' and seven other glees and two songs completed the programme. As a boy young Elgar attended many of the meetings, and later he played the accompaniments at the weekly gatherings, and led the small orchestra at the monthly concerts of vocal and instrumental music. He thus became familiar with the grand old school of English vocal music at a very impressionable period of his life. Concerning these meetings of the Worcester Glee Club, a well-known musician of that city sends us the following recollections:—

The Worcester Glee Club was founded in 1810, and held its meetings at the Crown Hotel weekly, from October to April, on Tuesday nights. These meetings were famous in their day, and brought together a large number of the citizens. The lay-clerks of the Cathedral were the mainstay of the vocal music, and they were reinforced for the 'instrumental nights' once a month by the leading professional and amateur performers in the city. The Elgar family became associated with the club about 1843, in the person of Mr. W. H. Elgar, father of Edward. He played second violin. At that time Louis D'Egville was leader, and the band included three or four members of the Hopkins family and Messrs. Holloway and Rickus of the Cathedral choir. Corelli was largely drawn upon, Handel's Overture to 'Saul' was a favourite, and Haydn's symphonies were often heard. The rich store of our great glee writers furnished the vocal music, and they were very well done in those days. Not many songs were sung, and they were of a healthy, vigorous type. 'Commodore' Hood was chairman, and his speeches on the opening night of the season, liberally interlarded with nautical terms, caused much amusement and are now remembered as being very remarkable. People came from far and near; one old clergyman from Bromyard was a regular attendant, walking in on Tuesday, staying at the hotel all night, and walking back on Wednesday. Commercial men so timed their journeys as to be at Worcester on a Tuesday, and one of the fraternity showed his appreciation of the pleasure he received by presenting to the club a grand pianoforte. The late Dr. Done was one of the pianists of those days, and many amusing stories are told of that time. One of the richest was of a visit to a double-bass player, who was found to be so engrossed in a passage of Corelli's that he did not hear the repeated knockings at the door of his room, which, when opened, revealed the artist, in a great state of determination to master the difficulty, keeping time by an improvised metronome which consisted of a half-brick slung by a rope from a hook fixed to one of the beams in the ceiling.

Mr. Edward Elgar was drafted in to play first violin when a small boy, Mr. Spray being leader, and Mr. A. R. Quarterman, pianist. Mr. Henry Elgar (who had joined in 1850) rendered very able assistance at the harmonium on 'instrumental' and ordinary nights. Great changes had taken place in the instrumental music—Rossini, Auber, Mozart, Wallace, Balfe, Bishop, Bellini, and others being represented by overtures. The glees, &c., of S. S. Wesley, Walmisley, Beale, G. W. Martin, Goss, and Cummings were added to those of the old composers, and the modern English and German part-songs found a place in the programmes, which also contained a goodly number of high-class songs. For about two years Edward was accompanist. In this his marked ability was at once manifest, though he would always insist that he was not a pianist. His accompaniments were a great delight to singers and audience. Programmes had now been printed some years. In 1879 we find him announced as 'pianist and conductor,' and four members of the family appear in the list of the band, which then embraced all the wood-wind. The young conductor and leader, as was to be expected, brought forward music of the modern school, which he arranged for his small means with great skill, and took great pains to rehearse the young players in their, to them, perhaps, difficult parts, no doubt gaining in this way much knowledge which has proved very useful. Many pieces of his own composition for the glee party, band, and solo voices appeared in the programmes, and were always received with favour and created an interest in the future of the young musician, though few at that time discerned the bright light which was to break upon these later days.

Is it not a thousand pities that this time-honoured practice of glee and unaccompanied part-singing should be in danger of suffering neglect? It is an inheritance peculiar to this land of ours that should be cherished and carefully nurtured.

VIOLIN LESSONS FROM MR. POLLITZER.

A great event in the young man's life was his visit to London in the autumn of 1877 to take a short course of lessons on the violin from Mr. Pollitzer. He stayed in London for twelve days at a cost £7 15s. 9d., which amount included £3 12s. 6d. for his five lessons and his railway fare. Elgar had saved out of his scanty earnings the necessary wherewithal for this lesson-taking expedition, and he enjoyed the supreme satisfaction of relying upon his own resources and making the most of his self-made opportunities during his sojourn in London 'down Pimlico way.'

Mr. Pollitzer, in recalling those days, says: 'I always thought him a most earnest musician. . . . Mr. Elgar, although leaning towards the modern German school, does not lose either his love or respect for the composers of the past.'

THE BIRTHPLACE OF EDWARD ELGAR.

(From a Drawing.)

BANDMASTER AT A LUNATIC ASYLUM.

In the year 1879 Edward Elgar, aged twenty-two, became bandmaster at the County Lunatic Asylum, which post he held for a period of five years. 'No wonder that Elgar's music is so mad,' some unthinking individual may be ready to exclaim; therefore it may be just as well to state that the young bandmaster's duties were associated with the attendants, and not with the poor unfortunate patients in the wards. One whole day every week Elgar spent at the Asylum, where he not only conducted the band, formed of the attendants, but coached the individual players in their respective instruments. The band consisted of

Flute	Euphonium	Violins (1 and 2)
Clarinet	Bombardon	Pianoforte (with occasional additions)
Cornets (1 and 2)	Double bass

For this curious combination of players upon instruments Elgar wrote some sets of quadrilles, polkas, &c., for which he received from the Board the regulation payment of five shillings per set! He also arranged accompaniments for Christy Minstrel songs, at the remuneration of eighteenpence per burnt-cork ditty. 'How lowering to his taste,' someone may be inclined to remark. Not so, good reader. This practical experience proved to be of the greatest value to the young musician and the future composer of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' He acquired a practical knowledge of the capabilities of these different instruments—not only by hearing them, but in those hours of 'coaching,' when flute, clarinet, and so on, talked to him, so to speak, in their own language. He thereby got to know intimately the tone colour, the ins and outs of these and many other instruments. Thus when he conceives a certain phrase he instinctively feels the double association of the melody and the instrument that is to play it—not a tune that might be given to this or that member of the orchestral family, but the colourable conception of the theme and its absolute fitness for a particular instrument. There is a great deal more in the cultivation of this tone-colour in music than most people realise. But to return to—or take our places for—the Elgarian quadrilles. It may not be without interest to give an eight-bar specimen of one of these dance tunes (unpublished, of course) composed for the Lunatic Asylum band which the composer has kindly reduced to pianoforte score specially for this article—

QUADRILLES FOR AN ECCENTRIC ORCHESTRA.

A SIGHTLESS PUPIL.

Mr. Elgar was professor of the violin at the Worcester College for the Blind Sons of Gentlemen. His most distinguished pupil there was Mr. William Wolstenholme, the well known composer, to whom Elgar showed great kindness. He wrote down the whole of young Wolstenholme's 'exercise' from his dictation. But this was not all. When young Wolstenholme was about to go up to Oxford to be examined for his Bachelor in Music degree, the Principal of the College said to Elgar: 'I don't know how Willie will get on at Oxford; he is so nervous with a strange amanuensis. Could you not manage to go up with him?' Always ready to lend a helping hand to anyone, Elgar at once said 'Yes,' and spent three days at Oxford, rendering valuable help to his clever sightless pupil.

WORCESTER AND BIRMINGHAM EXPERIENCES.

Up to the year 1889 Mr. Elgar continued to practise his profession in his native city and its neighbourhood by teaching and playing in the orchestra. He made his first appearance at a Three Choirs Festival in 1878 (at Worcester), when he played as a humble second fiddler in the orchestra. Some of his recollections of orchestral makeshifts at the Worcester concerts of his early days are very amusing. For instance, a performance of 'Elijah' with the accompaniment of strings, one clarinet, one trombone, and one harmonium. The opening phrase of Macfarren's overture to 'St. John the Baptist,' assigned by the composer to the trumpet (Shophar), played on the organ, with the registration of diapasons and mixtures! At the urgent request of Mr. Henry Elgar the passage was allowed to be played on the alto trombone. Again, the absence of any bass in purely wood-wind passages owing to there being no second bassoon player. No one, except Elgar, seemed to miss it, and no one in authority thought of supplying the missing bass on any other instrument.

A much better state of things prevailed in Birmingham, where Mr. Elgar was a valued member of Mr. Stockley's orchestra. It was Mr. Stockley who first introduced our composer to a larger public than that of Worcester. The occasion was one of the veteran conductor's orchestral concerts, given on December 13, 1883, in the programme of which there figured 'Intermezzo' (Elgar). Even the title of this early achievement furnished a certain amount of 'copy' for one of the critics, just as the 'Variations' did for certain of the London scribes sixteen years later. This is what the gentleman of the press said:—

Judging from results, the director will not regret giving a helping hand to rising talent. The 'Intermezzo' written by a permanent member of Mr. Stockley's orchestra, Mr. Elgar, justifies his assumption of a place in the programme. He dubs his piece 'Mauresque'; but why Mauresque? If we eliminate some of the unimportant effects supposed to give local colour, the term goes by the board. After all, however, 'What's in a name?' and waiving this prevalent but not always justifiable musical nomenclature, we hasten to give Mr. Elgar every credit for a musicianly work. A unanimous recall served to discover quite a young composer to the audience; and, as Mr. Elgar is not deficient in scholarship, has plenty of fancy, and orchestrates with facility, we may hope he will not 'rest and be thankful,' but go on in a path for which he possesses singular qualifications.

One is sometimes tempted to ask: 'What's in a criticism?'

In connection with the performance above referred to, Mr. W. C. Stockley writes us under date September 12, 1900:—

Mr. Elgar played in my orchestra for some little time as a first violin. But my first real knowledge of him came from Dr. Herbert Wareing, who told me that Elgar was a clever writer, and suggested that I should play one of his compositions at one of my concerts. At my request Wareing brought me a Romance (I think it was), and I at once recognised its merit and offered to play it. This I did, and his modesty on the occasion is certainly worth notice, for on my asking him if he would like to conduct, he declined, and, further, insisted upon playing in his place in the orchestra. The consequence was that he had to appear, fiddle in hand, to acknowledge the genuine and hearty applause of the audience. Soon after he did me the honour of dedicating an orchestral piece to me, entitled 'Sevillaña,' which I also did at one of my concerts. The occasion I have referred to was, I think, the first introduction, on a large scale, of any of Elgar's compositions, and thus you may think it worth mentioning.

HIS ORGANIST PERIOD.

Returning to the Worcester period, it must be recorded that in the year 1882 Mr. Elgar paid a visit to Leipzig, where he sojourned for three weeks, listening to all the music that was available in that musical centre. In the same year (1882) he became conductor of the Worcester Amateur Instrumental Society, and wrote notes for the analytical programmes of the interesting concerts given by that Society. In 1885 he succeeded his father as organist of St. George's Roman Catholic Church, Worcester. Anyone going into the organ loft of that church may find large manuscript volumes containing many sketches and small compositions written by the composer of 'King Olaf.' He resigned this organistship in 1889, and has not since held an appointment. All this time of weary waiting to be 'discovered,' Mr. Elgar was composing, composing, composing. He wrote several Masses and other church music and heaps of chamber music, all of which, it is perhaps hardly necessary to say, remains in manuscript.

MARRIAGE. LONDON.

On May 8, 1889, Mr. Elgar married the only daughter of the late Major-General Sir Henry Gee Roberts, K.C.B., a very distinguished Indian officer, and who received the thanks of Parliament for his brilliant military services. On her mother's side, Mrs. Edward Elgar is descended from the celebrated Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday Schools.

After his marriage he decided to reside in London, though he still retained a connection with his native heath by a weekly visit to Malvern to fulfil teaching engagements. He also led the orchestra in important concerts at Worcester. For these performances he always charged a fee, which, however, he remitted on the understanding that the amount (three guineas) should be expended on making the band more complete. But no one in London would look at his compositions. Three chances presented themselves, each of which would have been a good 'open door' to the young man from the faithful city; but the great metropolis proved unfaithful to him and the wind of fate closed those doors with a bang, almost before the handles had been turned. He left London in 1891 and for the last nine years has resided at Malvern, where, on the production of 'King Olaf' in 1896, at the Hanley Festival, appreciation and fame at length came to him. He now devotes himself entirely to composition, amidst ideal surroundings for a composer of poetic temperament who loves the open-air life and all the delights of hills, and fields, and flowers.

COMPOSITIONS.

The following is an attempt at a complete list of Mr. Elgar's published compositions, with the names of librettists of choral works and the dates of first performances:—

CANTATAS.

The Black Knight (Der schwarze Ritter), Op. 25. The poem by Uhland, translated by Longfellow. (Worcester Festival Choral Society, 1893.)

Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands (Op. 27), chorus and orchestra. (Worcester Festival Choral Society, April, 1896.)

Scenes from the Saga of King Olaf (Op. 30). Poem by Longfellow, with additions by H. A. Acworth, C.I.E. (North Staffordshire Musical Festival, Hanley, 1896.)

The Banner of St. George (Op. 33). The words by Shapcott Wensley. (The Queen's Diamond Jubilee celebrations, 1897.)

Caractacus (Op. 35). Words by H. A. Acworth, C.I.E. (Leeds Musical Festival, 1899.)

SACRED WORKS.

The Light of Life (Lux Christi), Op. 29. The words written and arranged by the Rev. E. Capel-Cure. (Worcester Musical Festival, 1896.)

Te Deum and Benedictus in F (Op. 34), for chorus, orchestra, and organ. (Hereford Musical Festival, 1897.)

The Dream of Gerontius (Op. 38). Words by John Henry Newman. (Birmingham Musical Festival, 1900.)

Litanies and other church music.

ORCHESTRA.

Froissart, Concert-Overture (Op. 19). (Worcester Musical Festival, 1890.)

Three Pieces (Op. 10), Mazurka, Sérénade Mauresque, and Contrasts (the Gavotte, A.D. 1700 and 1900).

Imperial March (Op. 32). (Queen's Diamond Jubilee, 1897.)

Variations on an original theme (Op. 36). (Richter Concert, London, June 19, 1899.)

VOCAL MUSIC.

Spanish Serenade (Op. 23) for chorus and orchestra. Sea Pictures (Op. 37), words by various poets, for contralto solo voice and orchestra (sung by Miss Clara Butt at the Norwich Musical Festival, 1899). Three-part songs (Op. 26) for female voices; part-songs (unaccompanied), songs, &c.

INSTRUMENTAL (VARIOUS).

Pieces for violin and pianoforte; pianoforte solos; a Sonata for the organ (composed for the visit of the American musicians to Worcester Cathedral in July, 1895), and a book of organ voluntaries.

Amongst a large number of manuscript compositions are symphonies, quartets, trios, &c.

AS CONDUCTOR.

As we have already mentioned, Mr. Elgar now devotes himself entirely to composition, with, however, one exception—that is, the conductorship of the Worcestershire Philharmonic Society. This organisation, founded in 1898, is in an extremely flourishing condition with its 300 subscribing members. All the rehearsals and concerts take place in the daytime. Every work is given absolutely complete in regard to detail. 'If a composition required forty harps, forty harps would be supplied, even if they had only to play three notes,' emphatically observes the enthusiastic and thorough-going conductor. It is no wonder that the motto of the Society is 'Wach' auf!' It is only just to a valued colleague to mention that Mr. Elgar receives the greatest assistance from his excellent accompanist and sub-conductor, Mr. G. Street Chignell, of Worcester.

PERSONALIA.

It is now time to refer to the personality of the subject of this biographical sketch, though this is not an easy matter through the medium of cold type. In the first place, Mr. Elgar is another instance of success following upon self-help of which so many examples have been furnished in this series of biographical sketches during the last three years. With the exception of those violin lessons from Mr. Pollitzer, Mr. Elgar is entirely self-taught. He has spared no pains, energy, or trouble in the acquirement of the necessary equipment for his life-work. For instance, in his youthful days he would leave his home at Worcester at six o'clock in the morning, and travel all the way to London, a distance of 250 miles, in order to listen to a Crystal Palace Saturday concert, returning at 10.30 p.m.

ORCHESTRATION.

'I have never had a lesson in orchestration in my life,' says Mr. Elgar. All his achievements in this direction are the result of practical experience, keen observation, and constant study of scores. There are some people who think that he could only have acquired this wonderful knowledge of orchestral artisticness—the word 'effects' is too commonplace in such a connection — from some ponderous theoretical tome. Here is a letter that he has recently received :—

Sir,—I am anxious to study orchestration. As you appear to have mastered the art, kindly tell me from which book you learnt it.—Yours truly,

Another is from a correspondent who frankly confesses entire ignorance of the 'Euphenium,' and whose communication implies that the air should occasionally be given to the drums! But the would-be orchestratist must speak for herself :—

I am sending my humble attempt. I copied the names of the instruments from a score that was lent me last summer. What the Euphenium is, or how to write for drums I have no idea. It would be a great help if you would write over the piano score in pencil when to give the air to other instruments. I have no conception of how what I have written would sound. If I could borrow some more scores of waltzes, I feel it would help me very much. Do the cornets and violas have the tum tum accomp. always? That must be dull for them to play. I have not sent the coda as it will be the same as the first movement, with a few bars to finish with. I forgot to pack up Mr. Prout's book on instrumentation so I daresay the double notes to second violins may be all wrong, and a great deal else besides. It is very good of you to take so much trouble.

. . . . . .

P.S.—You see I have condensed every two bars into one in the first movement since I showed it you.

The use of the Leitmotiv is a well-known characteristic of Mr. Elgar's method in composition. In this connection he has been charged with copying Wagner. 'But,' he observes, 'I became acquainted with the representative-theme long before I had ever heard a note of Wagner, or seen one of his scores. My first acquaintance with the Leitmotiv was derived (in my boyhood) from Mendelssohn's Elijah, and the system elaborated from that, as my early unpublished things show.'

AN EPISTOLAR.

The personality of a man often shows itself in his letters. Here are a few extracts from sundry communications to the present writer which may be offered as samples of an epistolary style that is decidedly fresh and unconventional in its mode of expression :—

. . . As to myself the following are F A X about me. Just completed a set of Symphonic Variations (theme original) for orchestra—thirteen in number (but I call the finale the fourteenth, because of the ill-luck attaching to the number). I have in the Variations sketched portraits of my friends—a new idea, I think—that is, in each variation I have looked at the theme through the personality (as it were) of another Johnny. I don't know if 'tis too intimate an idea for print, it's distinctly amusing. . . .

Other compositions are nebulous at present.

Also the bulbs are coming up at the Cottage and the draw-well is being pumpified —but that won't interest you.

In connection with these much discussed Variations, Mr. Elgar tells us that the heading 'Enigma' is justified by the fact that it is possible to add another phrase, which is quite familiar, above the original theme that he has written. What that theme is no one knows except the composer. Thereby hangs the 'Enigma.'

. . . I've just finished a *Partrigal (S.A.T.B.) to order and feel weak.

Always yours,
Edward Elgar.

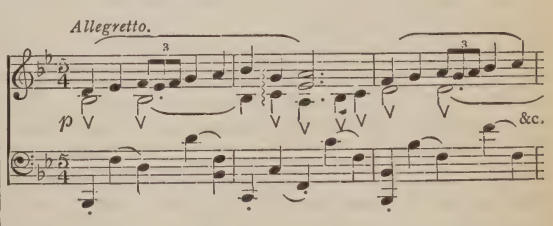
* I make you a present of this word. It is what is known to the cataloguist as a 'Madrigalian Part-Song.'

. . . I say: I went over to Sheffield to conduct a Festival rehearsal. Do you know that the chorus is absolutely the finest in the world! Not so large as Leeds, but for fire, intelligence, dramatic force, they are electrical. Do go to the Festival. For the first time in my life I've heard my choral effects (Olaf) and very terrifying they are.

Laus Deo!
(and Cowardus).

MUSICAL HUMOUR.

Like many earnest and even serious-minded men, Mr. Elgar has a pretty wit in his walk (or walks) and conversation. A clever musical instance of this is furnished in the following Tschaïkowskian version of 'God save the Queen,' which, notwithstanding its à la Russe superstructure of five-four time, furnishes a sort of sixes and sevens touch to the rhythm of our National Anthem :—



One of the treasures in the study is the baton used by Mr. Elgar on all festival occasions, and on which he has inscribed the titles of works conducted therewith and the dates of all their various performances. Upon his attention being directed to the remarkable indentations of the upper end of the stick, Mr. Elgar says: 'Oh! Parry did all those. He used this baton at a performance of his "Judith" at Worcester in 1891. I played first fiddle then and put my stick on his desk. I wanted to make it immortal. He did not break it!'

HOBBIES.

The composer of 'King Olaf' is a great lover of books. He not only reads and digests them, but carefully marks what seem to him to be striking points as specially worthy of attention. Some prized first editions are in his library. Pictures of every school, and literature, especially of the last century, have a strong fascination for him, also old furniture, of which he has many interesting specimens. In addition to his house at Malvern he has a tiny cottage in the woods, far away from the hum of human life, trains, and even tramps. Here, five miles from a railway station, he makes sketches and orchestrates amidst surroundings that are as beautiful as they are tranquil and brain-refreshing. We give a view of this solitary domicile where dress suits are unsuitable.

KITE FLYING.

A former hobby of our composer was scientific kite flying. His great idea was to invent a kite which would enable him to vary its surface resistance according to the force of the wind that was blowing. He made many experiments, but as the Americans are similarly at work on a colossal scale, he has given up the pastime of kite flying. He used to have a string of kites, of various shapes and sizes, one under the other. So strong in mid air was their resistance to their captive rope that, on one occasion, he and a friend, pulling with all their might, could not bring high-flyer down to earth without invoking the aid of a strong navvy. Golf—how he loves it—and bicycling have superseded kite flying as outdoor recreations.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS.'

Before bidding adieu to one of the foremost of British composers of the present day, it is only natural that some information should be sought from him on the subject of his latest work, 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which is so soon to be produced at the Birmingham Festival. 'This is the beginning of it,' he says, as he hands us a little copy of Newman's famous poem. 'The book was a wedding present to me (in 1889) from the late Father Knight, of Worcester, at whose church I was organist. Before giving it to me he copied into its pages every mark inserted by General Gordon into his (Gordon's) copy, so that I have the advantage of knowing those portions of the poem that had specially attracted the attention of the great hero. It seems absurd to say that I have written the work to order for Birmingham. The poem has been soaking in my mind for at least eight years. All that time I have been gradually assimilating the thoughts of the author into my own musical promptings.'

It is in this spirit that Edward Elgar conscientiously follows the bent of his genius. A man of high ideals, the possessor of a fine artistic temperament, and an intensely poetical musician, he is known and respected for his kind-heartedness, his modesty, his sincerity, and his steadfastness of purpose. He has already achieved great things in the realm of art and has come into the front rank of English composers.

PIANOFORTE TEACHING

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

Among the numerous teachers of the pianoforte in this country there must be some who would welcome the publication of a few practical suggestions which might tend, if only in a slight degree, to lessen the labours of both teachers and pupils. Such, at least, is the opinion of the Editor of this journal, who has invited me to write down some of the ideas which have occurred to me from time to time, during a teaching practice extending over considerably more than thirty years. With this request I willingly comply, and I should be very glad to think that my 'hints' may suggest to any of my colleagues a fresh light in which to view details of pianoforte instruction, and so may help to lighten their arduous work. For that teaching is arduous work no conscientious teacher will deny—indeed, I have before now heard bitter complaints of the 'drudgery,' but that it is drudgery in a hateful sense I do not for one moment admit, and, speaking for myself, I can truly say that I know no greater satisfaction than to watch the definite and steady progress of a willing pupil, and even especially if, as not infrequently happens, the pupil has appeared dull and uncomprehending at first. In fact, I believe that the one thing necessary to make a teacher in love with his work is a sufficient measure of success with his pupils.

It is not my intention to propound any untested theories, but merely to give the results of actual experience, and my suggestions must therefore apply to the training of pupils who are not absolute beginners, for the reason that, so far as I recollect, it has never fallen to my lot to teach a pupil his notes.

What are the qualifications of a good teacher? Unlimited patience, of course, as well as a competent knowledge of his subject, and a certain (not too limited) power of performance, that he may teach the pupil through the ear as well as through the understanding. But there are other qualities which appear to me to be equally important; for one, the power of looking at things from the pupil's point of view. If one can bring oneself to feel exactly the pupil's difficulty, and then, from one's fuller experience, realise how one would conquer it, one is able to give help in a far more practical form than by saying, 'Try that over again,' or 'That requires more practice.' Perhaps, by the way, this power has its disadvantages occasionally. Sometimes, in the presence of an incapable pupil stumbling over a simple passage, I have found myself for a few minutes actually thinking that such difficulties ought not to be written, and cannot be expected to be played perfectly. Perhaps the pupil hypnotises me!

It is not always easy to make sure that the pupil understands what he is told. I always mistrust the pupil who cheerfully and promptly answers 'Yes' to all my observations. I have generally found, after a week or two of this procedure, that the pupil knows nothing at all. Therefore, encourage pupils to ask questions; get them to tell you how they would explain the point to an ignorant person, and, as a rule, tell them the same thing at least three times. It is safer.

A good teacher will always strive to make the pupil take an interest in all his work, and especially in that part of it which is generally called 'dry'—technical exercises and so forth. This is with many pupils anything but an easy matter, but a good deal may be done by making the pupil feel that the source of interest lies in continually watching the movements and position of the fingers, and that the ear is scarcely concerned in the business at all, except for observing the proper connection of the sounds, and cannot expect to feel interested. Further, it should be pointed out to the pupil that certain kinds of passages, such as scales, broken chords, arpeggios, &c., form the material used by all composers alike, and that what the composer uses continually the player must be able to play readily and perfectly, not only for the sake of better performance, but in order to avoid waste of time in learning the passages as and when they occur. Examples may be given—for instance, the subject of the last movement of Beethoven's 'Moonlight' Sonata, which consists almost entirely of the so-called 'first chord-passage.'
